In discussing any scheme for the Reorganisation of the British Army as regards the appointment, promotion, and retirement of Officers, it is desirable to consider what are the faults of the present system, what advantages it would be well to introduce and what evils to eradicate, what to prune away and what to engraft. In the present sketch, it is premised that there are four errors of omission which should be made good, and one error of commission which should be annulled; altogether, five points to be kept in view, as the object to be fulfilled by an adequate and complete reform. These are:—1. The acquisition of sound physical capacity in all officers on appointment. 2. The development of a sufficient mental and professional training. 3. The securing of a general flow of promotion sufficiently rapid to foster the zeal of the Army, and to encourage individual officers to look confidently to their profession for advancement. 4. The possibility of extraordinarily early advancement of exceptionally able men. 5. The preclusion of the necessity which is now considered to exist for the compulsory retirement of men of middle-age, thereby in many cases depriving the Army of the services of able, active, and zealous officers. The desirability of all these objects will probably not be questioned, and may be taken for granted without discussion, with the exception, perhaps, of the fourth. There are, indeed, those who regard a rapidly-rising young officer with suspicion and distrust, but it will generally be found that the motives which in reality influence such opinions are more or less personal, and are largely affected by feelings of envy and jealousy. A very casual glance at the history of the world will prove that the great Generals of the past gained their rank as young men, and proved their ability as commanders while young men. There are numerous examples to quote even in modern history, and they are still more common in that of ancient times. A reference to a single case, that of Wellington, will be sufficient for the present purpose; and will be the more apposite, as being the most recent, and as affording the most complete contrast with the possibilities of the present day. Wellington commanded a regiment at 28, and had practically completed his military career before he was 50 years of age. It is common to observe that there is only one Wellington in a century; that he was an extraordinary genius, and that his case, accordingly, should not be regarded as any guide in regulating rates of promotion. But to this it may be rejoined that the material rise which affected his career, and affects the career of all possible geniuses, took place in the junior ranks, when his powers were unknown, or, at any rate, unproven; and that had the present conditions of service existed in his day he could not have risen to the positions which enabled him to prove his worth until the opportunities that actually came to him had passed, perhaps to others, to be either utilised or lost. The greater part of Wellington's service as a subaltern and Captain were passed on the Viceregal Staff in Dublin, where his duties were not calculated either to develope his military qualities, or to give him much scope for the display of ability. It was purely family interest and favour which made him a field-officer, and gave him subsequently the command of a regiment. As far as the responsible authorities knew, he might have been the great failure in that capacity which those who now-a-days oppose rapid advancement declare would be the result of the accession of young men to command. It is said by them that young men have not the moral force to command a regiment, that the responsibility is greater than their experience of men and affairs in general is calculated to enable them to support, and that they do not carry sufficient weight and influence with the men over whom they are placed. These assertions may be regarded as windy theory; they are based on no facts, and may be met with assertions of at least equally sound foundation. The practical details of the command of a regiment, the interior economy, and the drill, can and ought to be completely and thoroughly mastered in a few years; the moral force is acquired by and engendered in an able man by the sense of the very responsibility which renders it necessary; and, in fact, a man is able and fit to command a regiment after ten years' service, if ever he will be. It may be said that this assertion is even more aerial and more theoretic than the other, and that facts in the shape of living examples are against it. But this objection leads back to the point from whence the argument started, and a full and sufficient refutation lies in the contention that if living examples discourage the adoption of the theory of the ability of youth to command, the cause is to be found in the faults of the present system, under which young officers receive no encouragement to qualify themselves for command or high responsibility. It is no exaggeration to say that many an officer during his first fifteen years of service never handles a larger body of men than one company, and has never had more responsible duties than the command of a detachment of a handful of men; under such circumstances, he subsides into a state of mental stagnation, does no more work than he is actually obliged to do, has no incentive to qualify himself for a higher position, and is content generally to allow matters to slide, satisfying himself with the reflection that when the higher position does fall to his lot, he will, from sheer force of years, have acquired sufficient experience for it. Alter the circumstances, however; let the officer understand that he must of his own exertions acquire the experience for and the acquaintance with the duties of higher positions, instead of passively aggregating matter as years pass on, like a snowball rolling down-hill, and it will be seen that he will rise equal to the occasion. The inference which it is desired to draw from this argument is not that young officers make better regimental commanders than old ones, but that, allowing that history proves that men in the prime of life make better army commanders than those whose years have robbed them of some of their powers of body, if not of mind, and allowing that a man cannot arrive at the command of an army while in the prime of life unless he arrives at regimental command, or its equivalent rank, as a young man, then it is evident that a system which does not permit of an officer under any circumstances obtaining rapid promotion in the junior ranks, or obtaining the command of a regiment while still a young man, is faulty. The fourth point which has been originally stated as an object to be gained, viz., "the possibility of extraordinarily early advancement of exceptionally able men," may be perhaps conceded. In former days, this possibility existed, as political interest and personal favour were agents that were unhesitatingly and unquestioningly applied, and quick promotion and good appointments were regarded as the prerogative of good birth and family influence; and this system, by a happy-go-lucky chance, produced a Wellington. In these times, such influence would not be tolerated, and the only substitute which will secure the production of a second Wellington, when he may be required, is promotion by selection, based on purely personal merit. The apparent difficulties attending a system of selection are that in times of peace subordinate officers have little or no opportunity of showing individual merit, and at all times commanding officers cannot be entirely trusted to recommend those under their orders for any extraordinary promotion. They are too liable to be biassed by personal feelings; there would always be a great temptation to propose the supersession of an officer who happened to be an object of dislike by one who, though not a better officer, might be socially more popular, and the wish is so often the father to to the thought; on the other hand, a commanding officer might, from very dread of falling under the influence of personal feelings and fearful of being prejudiced, hesitate to recommend the supersession of a useless individual by one more worthy of promotion. These difficulties it is proposed to meet by this scheme of reorganisation, which, by increasing the efficiency of all officers, would raise their standard of attainments, and thus enable the capable individuals to bring into prominence the superiority of their own qualifications, and by distributing the powers of recommendation in various hands, would enable the chief authority to arrive at an approximate estimate of individual merit. The first point, then, is the establishment of a Military University, which should be the sole channel for obtaining commissions in the Combatant branches of the Service. The ages of admission should be from 16 to 18 years, inclusive. The qualification of admission should be the passing of a matriculation examination, coupled with nominations from the head masters of public schools, or in the case of boys who have not been educated at public schools, nominations from the Secretary of State for War, which nominations should be granted only on the production of satisfactory evidence relative to the candidates, so as to place them, as regards information of their antecedents and character, on the same footing as those from the public schools. The course at the University should consist of,—1st, drill, including minor tactics; 2nd, gymnastics, including fencing, single-stick, and the use of the revolver; 3rd, riding; 4th, mathematics; 5th, the Queen's Regulations and Military Law; 6th, fortification; 7th, military topography and reconnaissance; 8th, foreign languages (French and German). Voluntary instruction in drawing and sketching, and in other foreign languages, such as Italian, Russian, and Hindustani, should be also afforded. With reference to the second head of instruction, it may be observed that it is rather remarkable that the use of the revolver, which is now regarded as almost the sole weapon of offence or defence of an officer, should be entirely neglected. Officers are annually put through the farce of the sword exercise before their inspecting-general, but they are never shown how to handle a revolver, nor is any facility afforded for the private exercise of this weapon. To resume. The course should continue for twelve months, including a vacation, and should be concluded by an examination in the subjects numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8. In subjects 1, 2, 3, monthly reports should be made by the several instructors, under the supervision of the head of the University. From these reports, an average result of progress and efficiency to be obtained, and included in that of the examination. In addition to the above, tests should be applied in the following exercises:—(a) Walking, say, so many miles in heavy-marching order; (b) swimming; (c) rowing; (d) cricket, racquets, fives, tennis, football, running, jumping, &c. A good state of efficiency should be exhibited in at least two of the above four heads of athletic accomplishments, and failure should disqualify a cadet for a commission. The decision as to a cadet's qualifications under heading (d) could be arrived at from observation of the officers of the University, who, during the annual course, should have ample opportunity of judging. The results of the examination and reports would then be drawn up in order of merit. Special prizes might be given for the voluntary subjects, but they should not affect the result of the compulsory examination. The result of the annual examination having then been declared, those cadets satisfying a certain fixed standard of merit, or those showing proficiency in mathematics and drawing, should be given the option of commissions in (1) Royal Engineers and Royal Artillery, or (2) the Guards and Line. Of the remainder, those who satisfy a fixed qualifying standard of merit, to be given commissions in the Guards or Line; and those who fail to come up to the qualifying standard, to be informed that their services will not be required. No injury will be done to a cadet by dismissing him at this stage. He will ordinarily have come straight from school to the Military University, and he will there have received some useful instruction, which will be of service to him in any capacity in after-life. Those cadets who declare for the Royal Engineers or Artillery should then rejoin the University, for a second course similar to the first, with certain exemptions, but more advanced in character, and of a special nature, and at its conclusion they should be gazetted to commissions. The cadets destined for the Guards or Line should be put through a course of musketry, at the conclusion of which a certificate of qualification should be required in every case. Those failing to obtain certificates at the first trial should be put through a second course, and if necessary a third, until they succeed. Cadets on passing satisfactorily through the course of musketry should then be gazetted to commissions. On becoming officers they should be kept strictly to regimental or corps duties for four years from the date of their first commissions, and should not be employed in any civil capacity, or on any general, garrison, or personal staff duties whatever, except, if on active service, absolutely required for such. There is a regulation on this head now, but it is almost universally disregarded, especially in India. Particular care, however, should be taken under this scheme that this regulation should be rigidly enforced, as it is an essential part of it that an officer should be thoroughly trained at the commencement of his career. Every encouragement should be given to all officers in the acquirement of foreign languages. For instance, three to four months' leave might be given annually, out of the drill season, for the purpose of foreign travel, in place of the ordinary annual leave. Officers availing themselves of it might be given a travelling allowance, on the production, on their return, of a certificate signed on honour showing how and where the leave was spent, and a report of their proceedings, together with a geographical, physical, and statistical report of the country travelled over; this latter not for the sake of its intrinsic value, but as evidence of the use which the officer has made of his opportunities. A code of rules governing leave of this nature, with scales of travelling allowance, &c., might be drawn up without much difficulty. As a further inducement to the acquirement of foreign languages, frequent periodical examinations should be held, open to all officers; and prize-money should be awarded, according to the standard attained. At the end of five years' service, officers would be permitted to offer themselves as candidates for the Staff College. The admission to regulated as at present, but a greater number to be permitted to enter, especially in the Royal Engineers and Artillery. On the conclusion of the course, those passing successfully should be removed from their regiments and drafted into a Staff Corps, with the rank of captain, if that rank has not been previously regimentally obtained. Those preferring to remain temporarily with their regiments, to be permitted to do so, and to return to duty; but the promotion of subalterns in this case to be withheld until obtained in the ordinary course. All Staff appointments, not personal, on peace or active service, to be given to officers of the Staff Corps only. Promotions in the Staff Corps to be governed, first, by selection; secondly, by length of service. Thus, all captains to be promoted major at 20 years' service, if not previously promoted; lieutenant-colonel after 7 years' service in the rank of major; and colonel after 5 years in the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Officers of the Staff Corps could be appointed to regiments as captains, majors, or to command; but not retained on the establishment of a regiment, if afterwards accepting Staff or other non-regimental employ (subject to six months' grace). Officers of the Staff Corps in excess of the number of appointments to be available for temporary employment under other departments of Government, or to be attached as supernumeraries to regiments; or, if desired, to have facilities afforded them for travelling, perfecting their acquaintance with foreign languages, theatres of war, &c., and especially for attendance at all Continental camps of exercise ,manœuvres, &c., in as great numbers as may be permitted. All officers, other than those of the Staff Corps, completing 20 years' service, while still under the rank of substantive field officer, should not be compulsorily retired, but should be given the option of unattached majorities, to be drafted into a corps of "General Duty" officers, and detailed for field-officer's duties in large garrisons and other stations, where required. There are many garrisons, both at home and abroad, where the presence of a few extra field officers would be very useful and gladly welcomed, especially during the leave season. By the addition to the field-officer ranks also which the "General Duty" list would afford, commanding officers might be exempted from garrison duties, a matter which might not be undesirable. It might not be impossible, also, that the services of some of these officers might be fairly utilised in connection with the Auxiliary Forces; but this opens out another question, which may be postponed for subsequent consideration. Promotion on the "General-Duty" list would be regulated similarly to that in the Staff Corps. Officers on this list would be at liberty to compete for entrance to the Staff College, and it would be open to the Commander-in-Chief to transfer them to regiments in their higher rank. This list would also be made available in the case of officers not of the Staff Corps, who might be marked for special promotion. Thus there would be three classes of officers: the Staff Corps, the Regimental, and General-Duty officer, in one or other of which every officer who enters the Army might rise to the rank of Brevet Colonel. From that point, all officers would be graded together on one list, and their further promotion be guided by seniority, subject to the exception that an officer might be specially promoted to a higher rank as a supernumerary, at the will of the Sovereign, for service in the field.

To sum up, the advantages which it is believed would accrue from this scheme are,—that, firstly, a greater number of officers would pass through the Staff College, thereby increasing the efficiency of the Army, and while securing promotion for themselves, accelerating it in the regiments they leave; secondly, by the judicious interchange and transfer of the field officers, a healthy flow of fresh blood and spirit would be introduced into regiments, tendencies to prejudices and personal bias would be checked, and cliquism would be stopped; and thirdly, the system of confidential reports, by which alone, in time of peace, the Commander-in-Chief is able to arrive at an opinion of individual merit, would be greatly increased in value and reliability, by the extension and variety of its sources.

Reviews.

Imperial England. By Montagu Burrows, R.N., M.A., Chichele Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford. (London: Cassell, Petter, Galpin, and Co.)

A certain period of the later middle-ages, comprising a portion of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, has been called by a distinguished modern historian "The Age of the Lawyers," as, during that time, arose the movement which culminated in the emancipation of the Law, strictly so called, from the ecclesiastical thraldom to which for so many centuries it had been subjected. We have often thought, and we venture to prophesy, that the present age, the latter part of the nineteenth century, will be designated by some future historian "The Age of the Professors." Modern Europe owes much to this useful and estimable body of men. In Germany and Italy, while other classes of the population were sunk in a state of dormant apathy, they kept alive a steady flame of patriotism, which at last, by its own irresistible force, swept away all obstacles in the way, and brought about in our own day the unity of these nations. In France, too, the Professors have done a great work. But it must also be acknowledged that as a class they are subject, in a peculiar degree, to the temptation of imagining themselves almost omniscient. They are equally ready to criticise the religious systems of Buddha and Mahommed, the philosophy of Plato or of Bacon, the statecraft of Richelieu, or the campaigns of Napoleon. We all acknowledge that it is a misfortune to be king-ridden or priest-ridden, but surely it is, if possible, even worse to be theory-ridden. And yet it would seem that many Professors cannot avoid becoming, perhaps unconsciously, theory-ridden doctrinaires. It is needless to say that Professor Montagu Burrows is quite free from this danger, and one of the chief charms of the book now before us is its freedom from that spirit of hypercriticism which pervades so many of our modern historical works. Much of this is due, we imagine, to the fact that Professor Burrows represents in himself a happy combination of the theoretical and the practical,—for before proceeding to the University, he served for some time in the Royal Navy. His experience has thus resembled that of some of the very greatest historians, the patriarchs of the science, Thucydides, Tacitus, Machiavelli, Guicciardini, and our own Gibbon, all of whom, at one period or other of their lives, had been in the public service of their respective countries, military, naval, and diplomatic. A man who has had even a slight experience of this kind, can far more readily understand the difficulties which beset the career of a statesman or a soldier than one who has enjoyed a purely literary education. Professor Burrows begins his book by drawing attention to the effects of the insular position of Great Britain upon the character of its inhabitants,—and certainly no feature is more striking in the history of England than this insularity, from which, at various crises, the nation has been rudely awakened by its foreign Sovereigns. Canute of Denmark, William of Normandy, Philip of Spain, and George of Hanover, all more or less forced the English people to take a real interest in the politics of the Continent. Of all its foreign rulers, however, William of Orange, invited to rule over a free England, exerted, perhaps, the most powerful influence in the domain of foreign affairs. In his estimate of the character of Charles James Fox, Professor Burrows lays just stress upon the importance of a reputation for high moral character to any statesman aspiring to win the confidence of the English nation. It is indeed fortunate for England that the three greatest orators on the roll of her Prime Ministers, the two Pitts and the present Premier, should all have been distinguished for a force of character the moral grandeur of which has been recognised even by their enemies. The British nation has never been governed by phrases, and unless a man's words are borne out by his actions and mode of life, he has but little chance of acquiring its favour or confidence. As to the character of George III., Professor Burrows, we think, has not laid sufficient stress upon the fact that it was his extreme earnestness and sincerity which rendered him so dangerous an occupant of the throne, at such a crisis as the period of the American War of Independence. If the King had been more pliable and less earnest, the civil war might very probably never have arisen, with all its attendant misfortunes. His sincerity in this matter reminds us of the sincerity of the great Duke of Wellington in opposing all measures of Reform. to the very last moment. As to the American war, Professor Burrows has done good service in reminding his readers of the conflict of opinion raging in England at the time as to the justice of the case, on the American and English side. Surely it must have been difficult to arrive at a right conclusion, when men like Burke, Pitt, and Fox, Wesley and Johnson, were found on opposite sides. Again, judging the question from a military point of view, there would seem to be no reason to doubt that for a very long time the result of the war seemed to be trembling in the balance, and who can say what might not have happened if a Wolfe had been the commander of the English? The attention of the reader is also directed to an important event which occurred after the termination of the American war, to which due prominence is not always given in modern Histories of England. We refer to the efforts of the younger Pitt to restrain the growing power and to curb the restless ambition of Russia. It is curious and interesting to compare together some of the more important dates of this period. In 1772 the first partition of Poland was completed, just before the outbreak of those disputes in America which led to the final separation of the Colonies from England. In 1783, the annexation of the Crimea to Russia was effected; in the same year, peace was concluded between England and her colonies, and their independence was formally recognised. This step alarmed French and English statesmen alike, and was, in fact, the opening of the modern phase of the Eastern Question. In the appendices is a very interesting chapter on the true meaning of the balance of power. In Chapter vi. of the earlier portion of the book, the author says, speaking of India:—

> "Is it nothing that this gigantic wedge, thrust into the centre of Asia, surrounded by the sea and by the mountains, which enable it to be held by such a power as Great Britain, should thus be in a position to extend its own influence for good to China, to Burmah, and to the Islands of the East, may we not hope also—for it is even now opening upon us—to the fierce nations on the West?"

There are many other eloquent passages scattered through the book. An earnest and truly patriotic tone pervades it throughout. It is well printed, and not burdened with side-notes or foot-notes, which often divert the attention of the reader from the main argument. The book deserves to be carefully read and widely circulated, not only in the United Kingdom, but also in the Colonies and India, and even in America, where many persons take almost as great a pride in the greatness of the British Empire as in that of their own great Republic. In short, all who are interested in the past and in the future of England would do well to read, and read again, this book.

TORPEDO WARFARE.

Our Portsmouth correspondent writes:—The Nordenfelt service-gun did some remarkably good practice off the Isle of Wight last Tuesday. When the gun was tried against the Hotchkiss some time ago, it was fired from the Medway, a vessel having only some eight knots speed, and it then cut the torpedo-boat model all to pieces by 115 hits in the course of a 700 yards' run. The Admiralty now wished to ascertain if a torpedo-boat would stand any better chance against the gun at the full-speed of a torpedo-boat, and the Iris, Captain Seymour, was therefore ordered to make a few runs at full speed towards the bow of a torpedo-boat model to be used as a target. The Iris is one of the fastest vessels in the Navy, and starting with a couple of miles' spurt each time, registered 17·2 knots per hour when the firing began. As the tide gave two and a half knots more, the gun actually travelled at about 20 knots, or, say, 23 miles an hour. 1st Run.—The Iris steaming straight at the bow of the torpedo-boat, fired from 700 yards' distance until close up 102 shots in 1 min. 9 sec. 2nd Run.—Same firing repeated, 111 shots in 1 min. 10 sec. On inspection the torpedo-boat was found to be hit by not less than 110 bullets out of the total of 213 fired in the two runs. Result, 93 shots and 48 hits per minute. 3rd Run.—The Iris ran past the torpedo-boat, parallel with her, at a distance of about 200 yards, in order to represent the actual position when a torpedo-boat dashes past a vessel with a view to discharge a Whitehead torpedo. The gun was limited to an arc of 90°, and fired 58 shots in the 22 sec., during which the torpedo-boat remained within the range fixed. The number of hits was 38. 4th Run.—A 1st-class torpedo-boat was got under way, and ran parallel to the Iris, at the rate of about 18 knots per hour, the two vessels thus passing one another at 200 yards' distance at the rapidity of over 40 miles an hour. The gun was fired through the same limited arc of 90°, but of course this time with "dummy" cartridges, as the torpedo-boat was manned, so that the hits can only be assumed; but as 40 shots were fired in the 15 seconds within the limited range, it is certain that the torpedo-boat would have been disabled. These experiments thus show that excessive speed does not interfere with the efficiency of the gun, and prove, on the other hand, how short a period of time is given for defence against torpedo-boats, and that the Admiralty used a wise discretion in introducing rapid-firing volley guns such as the Nordenfelt into the Service.

ITALIAN HEAVY ORDNANCE.

The long looked-for trial of General Rosset's 100-ton gun, cast at the Turin Foundry, took place on the last day of June, at the fortress of Santa Maria, near Spezia, in the presence of the Italian Ordnance Committee and the representatives of foreign Governments. England was represented by General Younghusband, France by Major Brunnett and Captain de Belleisle, Denmark by Captain Madsen, Sweden by Lieutenant Frumerie, Austria by Baron de Ripp, Germany by Herr Haas—representing also Herr Krupp, of Essen—and the Swedish Nordenfelt Palmkrantz Gun Company by General Dunne. The trial proved to be of the utmost importance to Italy, for if the Government of that country can succeed in manufacturing heavy ordnance of such calibre at the moderate prices quoted in the present instance, Italy will soon be entirely independent of foreign aid in this respect, besides avoiding the transit through Austrian territory, as hitherto has been necessary in the case of guns purchased in Germany. The Italian 100-ton gun under trial is of cast iron, and the only points on which the Government observe any secresy are the proportions of the ingredients in the mixture, invented by General Rosset, from which the barrel is cast, and in the powder used at the trials. The gun is strengthened by means of three steel reinforce-bands, extending one over the other from the trunions to the cascable. These cost 128,000 francs, while the cost of the cast-iron barrel does not exceed 52,000 francs, thus bringing up the total cost of the gun to 180,000 francs, or £7,200, which is under half the cost of an Armstrong gun of similar weight. The projectile used at these trials weighed 2,240 pounds, or exactly one ton, and cost as near as possible £40. The charge of powder varied from 440 to 450 pounds. The gun is a breech-loader, worked on a most secure and simple principle invented by General Rosset. The mean initial velocity obtained was 446 metres, and the pressure in the chamber averaged 1,740 atmospheres. The recoil, taken up on elastic cushions, averaged 1 metre 71 centimetres. The time occupied in loading was six minutes, and the gun went through the severe test without giving any sign of weakness, flaw, or fault. All the officers present were unanimous in expressing their satisfaction, and heartily congratulated both General Rosset and General Albini on their success.

MIDSHIPMEN R.N.R.

The following Order in Council has been published in the London Gazette, dated June 28:—"Whereas, there was this day read at the Board a memorial from the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, dated June 19, 1880, in the words and figures following, viz.:—Whereas, your Majesty was graciously pleased by your Order in Council of Oct. 15, 1872, to establish the rank of midshipmen in the Royal Naval Reserve, and whereas, it has in our opinion become advisable to make provision for the promotion of the most deserving of these midshipmen to the higher rank of sub-lieutenant, although not fully qualified for that rank under existing regulations, and for the removal from the list of the Royal Naval Reserve of those midshipmen who have either failed to obtain the certificates in the Mercantile Marine suitable to their age, or to keep up their drills, we most humbly submit that your Majesty may be graciously pleased by your Order in Council to establish the following regulations:—1. Midshipmen Royal Naval Reserve who formerly passed through a course of training in the Worcester or Conway, to be eligible for promotion to the rank of sub-lieutenant on completing six years' service in the Royal Naval Reserve, provided—(a) That they hold master's or chief mate's certificates of competency under the Merchant Shipping Act. (b) That they are not in arrear in their drill, and have obtained a certificate from the commander of one of the drill ships that they are competent to instruct and drill men of the Royal Naval Reserve. (c) That they have followed the sea service as their profession throughout the time they have served as midshipmen in the Royal Naval Reserve. 2. The names of midshipmen who fail to obtain these qualifications for promotion at 25 years of age to be removed from the lists of the Royal Naval Reserve, except in any special case to be judged by us, where prolonged service abroad is the cause of the failure to qualify under these regulations. Her Majesty having taken the said memorial into consideration, was pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to approve of what is therein proposed. And the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty are to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.—C. L. PEEL."

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment will close to-day for the summer season, and after a few weeks tour in the provinces will reopen at ST. GEORGE'S HALL on Oct. 4.

The Army.

2nd Life Guards. The regiment took part in the review of the Aldershot Division in Windsor Great Park on Wednesday.

Royal Horse Guards left London on Tuesday for Windsor, to take part in the review of the Aldershot Division by her Majesty on Wednesday, and has now returned to its quarters at Knightsbridge.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards. The regiment will, according to present arrangements, embark at Capetown about the end of September for conveyance to India, to relieve the 15th Hussars.

4th Dragoon Guards. The regiment has received orders to be in readiness to proceed from York to Aldershot.

5th Dragoon Guards. The regiment has now received its orders to be in readiness to move from Aldershot to Brighton.

6th Dragoon Guards. Lieut. Massy's name, who holds a commission in this regiment, was inadvertently mentioned in our last issue, in mistake for that of his brother, Lieut. Harry Massy, of the 19th Bengal Lancers. Lieut Percy Massy has not been with the Ghuznee Field Force, nor have the Carabiniers.

5th Lancers. Orders have been sent to Aldershot directing the regiment to be held in readiness to march from that station to York.

6th Dragoons. All doubts as to whether the regiment will or will not proceed to India next winter are now set at rest by the orders which have been sent to the Cape, warning the King's Dragoon Guards to be in readiness to proceed thence.

8th Hussars. Friends of the regiment will read with interest an account furnished by a correspondent of an engagement in which two squadrons were employed lately in Afghanistan, which we publish under head of 14th Regiment.

11th Hussars. The regiment is under orders of readiness to proceed from Aldershot to Hounslow immediately.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Major Ward, commanding the Chestnut Battery of the 2nd Brigade, has submitted to Major-Gen. Fraser, V.C., C.B., commanding the Cavalry Brigade, an improved pattern of horse-blanket for use with mounted corps, adapted from the horse-rug, or jhool, formerly used in the Bombay Army. The improvement consists in the present white blanket being shaped to fit any horse at the shoulders and chest, webbing being sewn on in bands to fasten under the belly, across the chest, and above the hocks, the corners of the jhool being rounded off. The surcingle, price 2s. 4d., is thus dispensed with, the cost of the webbing substituted, being estimated at 1s, contract rate, the comfort of the horse greatly increased, with the probability of the jhool remaining serviceable a much longer period. The proposed jhool is now on trial.

The correspondent of the Bombay Gazette writes from Kandahar on the 7th ult. :—" I am sorry to say that Lieut. Plant, R.A., who was lately A.D.C. to the Governor, is still very unwell. The latest reports are more favourable, but his friends are still anxious about him."

Major C. E. Reid, 9th Brig., has been granted leave from India to England, for six months, on medical certificate.

The following appointments have been made to the Punjab Frontier Force :—No. 2 (Derajat) Mountain Baty. —Lieut H. J. The officers of the Coast Brigade held their annual dinner last night at the Café Royal, Regent Street. There were present :—Majors Robinson and M'Kown; Capts. Blades, Spall, Garnham, Sprent, Coleman, Groves, Dillon, Cooper, Ritchie, and Davey; Lieuts. Tracy, Sutherland, Kirkbride, Porterfield, M'Caffery, Tardif, Dixon, and Aldridge.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Lieut.-Col. C. A. Sim has been ordered to report to the Government of India on the fortified posts in the Naga Hills. Lieut. E. H. Bethell has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate.

Major G. V. Sivewright has arrived home from Gibraltar.

Coldstream Guards. Lieut.-Col. W. B. Northey, late of the regiment, died in London on the 10th inst., after a few hours' illness, aged 75 years.

3rd Buffs. Major T. Kains, late of the regiment, died at 15 Hanover Street, W., on the 12th inst., aged 58 years. The deceased entered the Army as ensign in the regiment, Nov. 29, 1839; became lieut., May 20, 1842; served with the regiment in the East Indies, and was present at the battle of Punniar (medal); obtained his company May, 1855; was present at the siege of Sebastopol, and at the assault of the Redan on Sept. 8 (medal and clasp); retired, Aug. 9, 1863.

8th King's. An exchange has been permitted between Lieuts. Mellor and Dundas, Lieut. Mellor joining the 1st and Lieut. Dundas the 2nd Batn.

9th Regiment. The 1st Batn. is under orders of readiness to move from Ireland to England.

11th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Vidal, 2nd Batn., a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to the 18th Bombay N.I., on probation.

12th Regiment. Capt. Brooke, 1st Batn., is a candidate for appointment to the Army Pay Department, and has been ordered to Dublin to join the District Pay Office there on probation.

14th Regiment. A Staff officer serving in Afghanistan sends us the following brief account of an expedition in which the 2nd Batn. played an important part, and acquitted itself most admirably :—" The little garrison of Peshbolak, which is composed of half of the 8th Hussars, the whole of the 2nd Batn. 14th Regt., L-5 R.A., and the 32nd Pioneers, sent a very compact little force of about 1,000 men on a five days' expedition lately into the heart of the Shinwarri country, to crush a rising which had been reported to our most energetic political officer, Mr. Merk, to be consolidating, under the directions of an Afghan priest and an influential chief. The object of this gathering was to make systematic raids upon the convoys and small forts between Jellalabad and Lundi Kotal. On the afternoon of May 18 Gen. Gib ordered four guns L-5 R.A. (Major Brough), 450 men 2-14th (Col. Warren), two squadrons 8th Hussars (Major Burke), the 32nd Pioneers (Major Cruikshank), and one squadron 5th Bengal Lancers (Col. Shakespeare), to march without delay. The troops had a cup of coffee at 10 o'clock, and started about 12 on the night of the 18th. There was very little moon, and a little hesitation arose among the guides, as they apparently changed their minds at the last moment about the road. However, a start was at length made, and the column plodded on over a rough country, and arrived at about half-past 8 or 9 a.m. on the 19th on its camping-ground. The distance travelled was about 17 miles, and the only feature worthy of notice was the great efficiency of the Artillery, the horses carrying their guns safely over stony ravines, banks, and ditches, obstacles to which I have seen many a well-dressed sportsman in England turn his back. We halted among trees, but as a night attack was probable the camp was moved about a mile and a-half to open ground. On the morning of the 21st the troops marched at 5 a.m., and after proceeding slowly about seven miles we were halted and prepared for action. The enemy had sent away all their women and children, and had placed themselves behind walls and in forts, and, until dislodged, could not be seen. After a little reconnoitring, the Artillery, directed by Capt. Domville, opened fire at about 3,000 yards, the 2-14th divided into companies, and, the ground being carefully selected by Col. Warren, advanced in skirmishing order, whilst the 32nd Pioneers, under Major Cruikshank, crossed the valley, and, advancing gradually, prevented the enemy from flanking us. The Shinwarries fought with great obstinacy, and were driven from their position slowly but steadily, the practice of the artillery being perfect. Holes were driven in the forts, and shells burst among crowds of men. The behaviour of the 2-14th Regt. was admired by all present, the young soldiers skirmishing as quickly and quietly as the oldest veteran could desire; their shooting was careful and accurate. On one occasion a sunger, or small circle of stones, was defended with such obstinacy that it had at last to be rushed by Capt. Noyes and his company; the officer killed two men with his own sword, and was himself wounded in the hand. Two of his men were shot dead; but the regiment succeeded in capturing a standard, and all the enemy were killed. At about half-past one or two o'clock the troops were halted to rest themselves in the shade, about three-quarters of a mile from the top of the valley, through which the enemy had fled to the hills. About half-past four or five it was reported that the enemy had streamed back and re-occupied some of the empty villages, so the 14th were again ordered to clear the valley, whilst the Artillery opened fire on the retreating masses. The 32nd Pioneers pushed on upon the right, volleying the enemy, and cavalry were occupied capturing the prisoners; but the ground was so irregular that charging in mass was impossible. The last trace of the at-last defeated Shinwarries was seen about half-past six retreating to the snows, so the troops returned and occupied the forts evacuated by the enemy. The two killed were buried that night, and thus ended a very pretty little engagement, in which 1,000 perfectly equipped soldiers had by their gallantry drove some 4,000 or 5,000 most courageous savages from their stronghold, after eight or nine hours' fighting, about 500 of the enemy being killed and wounded. Mr. Merk, the political officer, received a message from the enemy, in which they acknowledged their defeat, and stated that they did not wish to fight any more, but to treat with him. The 32nd Pioneers next day were ordered to blow up certain forts and villages, known to belong to the most intractable of the enemy's. Upon the night of the 21st we slept upon our first halting ground, for it was now considered unnecessary to reoccupy open ground at night. The whole force rested next day, with the exception of the ever-busy 32nd Pioneers, who, under the direction of the political officer, again blew up forts, &c. On the morning of the 23rd we all returned a much shorter and better way, and arrived in camp about ten o'clock. Considering the heat, time of year, the absence of tents, &c., and the fatiguing nature of the work, the men deserve the greatest credit for their cheerful endurance of hardships. Even the General had no change of clothes, and the physical labour was no joke. The political officer and the General expressed themselves much pleased. Certainly no expedition could have been better managed. After a long day's fighting it was found that the young soldiers of the 14th had fired with such steadiness and taken such care of their ammunition that their average was under nine rounds per man. They frequently skirmished to within 200 yards of the enemy almost unobserved, their more noisy brethren, the Artillery absorbing the Shinwarries' attention. Throughout the regiment behaved admirably, and Col. Warren deserves the highest praise for the excellent system he has introduced. The Horse Guards should keep this officer in view, for he is one well deserving its encouragement. Major Cruikshank commands a most wonderful all-round set of natives; they appear to be always in good humour and always working; they can make a road, a bridge, or a hut with equal facility, and can march all day and then use their rifles with great effect."

17th Regiment. Lieut. Justice, a probationer, officiating wing-officer 30th Bombay N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bombay S.C. from Feb. 27, 1879. 2nd Lieut. Egerton, 2nd Batn., has been appointed officiating aide-de-camp to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

19th Regiment. The 1st Batn. is under orders of readiness to proceed from Bermuda to Halifax, N.S., to relieve the 97th Regt. The aquatic sports of the 1st Batn. were held in St. George's Harbour, Bermuda, on May 24. The committee consisted of Major Handley (hon. sec.); Capts. Munro and Eden; Lieuts. Fearon, Handcock, Chauncy, and Hadow; and Quartermaster Heddingham. Judges: Capt. Eden and Lieut. Hadow. Starters: Lieut. Fearon and Quartermaster Heddingham. Sub-committee: Quartermaster Heddingham, and Colour-Serjts. Organ and Drew. The open boat-race for officers was won by the Foam, Lieuts. Hadow and Chauncy (yellow and blue); serjeants' four-oar race, by the Left half-Batn., Colour-Serjt. Drew acting as stroke; the St. George's stakes, by Lieuts. Hadow and Chauncy; the company four-oar gig race, by E Company; the swimming race (three men per company), by C Company; and the officers' tub-race by Major Handley's black tub, Piccadilly Penguin, sailed by Lieut. Maloney.

21st Fusiliers. We learn from Natal that Chief John Dunn has succeeded in recovering sword, pistol, and gold watch, belonging to the late Lieut. Scott Douglas, who was killed at Kwamagwaza. Lieut. Frere, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months, on medical certificate. Capt. M. H. Thunder, late of the regiment, died at his residence, Coolnagloose, county Wexford, on the 7th inst. The deceased was youngest son of the late Mr. P. Thunder, of Ashton Park, county Dublin, and Ballycanew, county Wexford.

25th Regiment. Extract from Indian Army General Orders :—" Capt. A. H. Hope, 1-25th Foot, is permitted to proceed to England, at his own expense, for the purpose of taking up the appointment of aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. W. Hope, C.B., commanding the North British District." An exchange has been permitted between Lieuts. Cavaye and Thompson, Lieut. Cavaye joining the 1st and Lieut. Thompson the 2nd Batn. 2nd Lieut. E. D. Los, 1st Batn., second son of P. R. Los, of The Hague, Holland, late Consul of the Netherlands, died at Pezan, Afghanistan, of fever, on May 31, aged 20 years. The deceased passed second out of Sandhurst last summer, and was gazetted to his commission Aug. 13, 1879. He joined head-quarters in October last, and was present at the action of Kan Dacca, where he distinguished himself by conspicuous bravery before the enemy.

28th Regiment. Capt. Marsham is about to be appointed adjutant of the Royal North Gloucester Militia, vice Capt. Bigg-Wither, retired.

41st Regiment. Capt. M. T. Quayle, late of the regiment, died at Buxton on the 10th inst., after a long illness, aged 41 years.

43rd Light Infantry. 2nd Lieut. Dobbs is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to do duty with the 32nd Madras N.I., on probation.

47th Regiment. Capt. Stuart completed his period of probation, and will shortly be gazetted to the Army Pay Department.

48th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Nicol is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 25th Madras N.I., on probation. Capt. Powlett is ordered home from India to take the place of Capt. Sedley, lately retired, at the depôt.

ROYAL MARINES.

Col.-Commandant H. Adair, Royal Marine Artillery, having been placed on the Reserved List by a recent Order in Council, the Lords of the Admiralty have appointed Col. and Second Commandant H. W. Mawbey to fill the vacancy.

An exchange on the general foreign-service roster has been sanctioned between Lieuts. B. C. P. Hamilton and J. C. R. Scott, R.M.L.I., both of Plymouth Division.

The Lords of the Admiralty have appointed Captain W. G. T. Bickford, R.M.A., to be military instructor to the Royal Marine Forces, in succession to Major C. C. Suther recently promoted.

60th Rifles. The " Celer et Audax " Gazette, a regimental paper of the 3rd Batn., made its first appearance from the regimental press at Fort Napier last March, and will be continued monthly. The first number contains an editorial début, an article on " Noncommissioned Officers," a memoir of the late Col. Northey and Lieuts. Mynors, both of whom have been lost to the battalion since it came to Natal, a letter on " Dancing Clubs," some lines of poetry on the death of a comrade, and a quantity of regimental and local news, including reports of rifle-shooting, cricket, &c. The following items are from the Gazette :—Leave of absence has been granted to Capt. Robinson, in extension to Nov. 19. Lieut. Allfrey has been transferred to the 1st Batn. The following figures of merit have been made by the Band and " K " Company :— Band, 108·82, best shot Pte. Carlton; " K " Company, 100·63, best shot Serjt. Shippam. " Fair-Play " writes :—" In justice to a deserving and hard-working officer, permit me to state, with reference to the paragraph of regimental intelligence, 60th Rifles, which appears in last Saturday's issue, that the 4th Batn. has been under the command of Major Algar since April, 1879, that he has actually commanded the battalion for more than half the period of Col. Hinxman's tenure of five years' command, and that Major Algar, not Col. Hinxman, will hand over the battalion to Lieut.-Col. Henderson. I state this not in any disparagement of Col. Hinxman's qualities as a commanding officer, which are admitted on all hands, but as a lover of fair-play." The 1st Batn. returns to Wincester from Aldershot after the drili season.

64TH REGIMENT. Capt. Richardson has been appointed Adjt. of the 3rd Royal Lancashire Militia, in succession to Major Berkeley, 47th Regiment.

67TH REGIMENT. The Pioneer reports that Lance-Corpl. Chappell has been tried at Cabul for cowardice before the enemy. The prisoner, with three other signallers (under an escort of six sepoys), was engaged in heliographing at Luttabund about the middle of May, when the party was attacked by a number of Afghans. Prisoner and another signaller retired towards camp, while their companions held their ground, and beat off the enemy. Chappell's companion returned to the party, after going a short distance. In consideration of the prisoner's youth and previous good character, he was let off with the light sentence of reduction to the ranks and 365 days' imprisonment.

79TH HIGHLANDERS. Major Allen and Brevet Major Everett have returned to Gibraltar from English leave.

80TH REGIMENT. Capt. Howard is a candidate for appointment to the Army Pay Department, and has proceeded to London, to complete his period of probation at the War Office.

87TH FUSILIERS will leave Limerick in the course of a few days, and embark in H.M.S. Assistance for the Channel Islands.

93RD HIGHLANDERS. Capt. Prevost has arrived home from Gibraltar. Capt. Fetherstonhaugh has returned to Gibraltar from leave to England.

95TH REGIMENT. Lieut.-Col. Parkinson completes his five years in command of the regiment on Wednesday next, when he will be placed upon half-pay.

97TH REGIMENT will be conveyed from Halifax, N.S., to Gibraltar in the transport which takes out the 26th Cameronians to Bermuda.

103RD FUSILIERS. The regiment is to be stationed at Bradford, instead of Fleetwood, as previously ordered. Capt. Hickey has joined the depôt at Naas, and is recommended for appointment as adjt. of the 66th Brigade Depôt, in place of Major Rogers, promoted. Capt. Heathcote has rejoined head-quarters from the depôt.

106TH LIGHT INFANTRY. Lieut.-Col. Robertson retires from the Army on a pension of £575 a year, and the honorary rank of col. Major Girardot has assumed temporary command of the regiment, to which he will shortly be promoted.

107TH REGIMENT. The move of the regiment from the Channel Islands to Ireland will be carried out in the course of a few days in H.M.S. Assistance.

RIFLE BRIGADE. The 2nd Batn., which has been some time under orders to return home from Gibraltar, will embark in the transport which conveys the Cameronians from England, and the 97th from Halifax to the Rock. Capts. Viscount Torphichen and the Hon. M. Curzon, 2nd Batn., have returned to Gibraltar, and resumed duty from leave in England.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

DURHAM ARTILLERY. This regiment was dismissed on Saturday last, after its annual training. Col. Collington, R.A., commanding Auxiliary Artillery, Northern District, made the inspection. The first day he saw the regiment in marching order in the barrack square, when the kits were laid down. In the afternoon he saw the various batteries at gun drill, mortar drill, gyn, and repository exercises. He expressed himself highly pleased at the smartness and proficiency of the men at these drills. He made a minute inspection of the battery and regimental books, afterwards visiting the quarters of the permanent staff in barracks, the recreation-room, clothing-store, armoury, &c. At the second day's inspection, the whole of the regiment was reviewed on the Town Moor of Hartlepool, in the presence of several thousand spectators. The inspecting officer was received with the usual salute, the regiment marched past, after which the commanding officer, Col. Stafford, put the regiment through various battalion movements. The following officers were present:—Col. Stafford, Major Robson, Capts. Shortis (hon. major), Greene, Chapman, and Scott; Lieuts. Murphy, Ditmas, Rawdon, Nielson, and Henderson; Capt. Grubb, R.A. (adjt.), Qrmr. Green, R.A., and Surg-Major Rawlings. The regiment now consists of 30 serjeants, 24 corporals, and 540 men. It has a very fine band of 24 performers.

2ND ROYAL DURHAM. The adjutancy is falling vacant by the promotion of Capt. Heathcote, who is about to obtain his majority in his regiment, the 106th.

ROYAL NORTH GLOUCESTER. Capt. Marshman, 28th Foot, succeeds Capt. Bigg-Wither as adjutant.

3RD ROYAL LANCASHIRE. Capt. Richardson, 64th Regt., has been selected for the adjutancy, vice Major Berkeley, 47th Regt., who reverts to his regiment on promotion.

ROYAL LONDON. The regiment, numbering near 700 of all ranks, under command of Lieut.-Col. Dundas (Major and Adjt. Savory and Capt. Sewell being the other mounted officers), was ordered to Hyde Park on Saturday afternoon last, by command of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, for inspection. The regiment marched from head-quarters at Finsbury Barracks, and displayed en route a most soldier-like appearance, the physique of the men being considerably above that shown by the majority of regiments of the Line and Militia. On reaching Hyde Park line was formed, and H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge was received with a royal salute. The line having been inspected, the ranks were closed, followed by a march-past; the bearing and precision of the battalion eliciting cheers from the numerous spectators present, and "Very good, very good, indeed!" from the Duke of Cambridge. The manual and firing exercises were then gone through, and various brigade movements followed (the London Rifle Brigade being also present for inspection). At the close of the movements H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge bestowed great praise on both regiments, remarking with evident pleasure on the readiness shown by the Militia, especially as the regiment had only completed thirteen days of its annual training. The corps then returned to its head-quarters. A regimental dance was held at Finsbury Barracks yesterday (Friday) evening, when a large number of guests were entertained by Col. Dundas and the officers. The regiment will be officially inspected on its own parade-ground at Finsbury Barracks on Thursday next, at 11 o'clock. On Monday last the Lord Mayor honoured the brethren of the Alliance Lodge (held at the Guildhall Tavern) with his presence, accompanied by the Sheriffs. A guard of honour was formed from the regiment; the guard, 100 rank and file, was under command of Major Savory, and officered by Capt. Coleman and Lieuts. Tenniswood and Adams, the last-named carrying the regimental colours. Bro. Major Savory and Bro. Lieut. Tenniswood remained for the banquet; Bro. Lieut.-Col. Dundas, Bro. Surg.-Major Childs, and Bro. Capt. Sewell, all being present at the banquet.

ROYAL MONTGOMERY RIFLES. The annual regimental dinner took place at the Pall Mall Restaurant on the 19th inst. The following officers were present, viz.:—Major Crewe-Read (in the chair, and commanding), Capts. Bowyer-Lane, 53rd Regt. (late adjt.), Langland, 43rd Light Infantry (adjt.), Agg-Gardner, and James; Lieuts. Kitching, 53rd Regt. (instr. of musketry), Lovell, Coldstream Guards, Hunter, and Safe.

CARLOW RIFLES. The regiment was inspected on Wednesday by Col. Parsons, 66th Brigade Depôt, previous to its disembodiment. After the regiment had been put through the usual evolutions the captains drilled the battalion for some time, and Col. Parsons expressed his satisfaction at the high state of efficiency of the men, and the report which he had received of their good-conduct. Col. Keogh was in command.

DUBLIN CITY ARTILLERY. Capt. and Adjt. Wheatly has been promoted Major in the Royal Artillery, and will shortly proceed to Gibraltar, to take command of No. 18 Baty. 7th Brig. R.A.

Only three regiments are ordered for training on Monday:—The Antrim Rifles, Belfast (train in camp); the Donegal (Prince of Wales's) Artillery, Letterkenny; and the Louth Rifles, Drogheda.

The following regiments, having completed their training, will be dismissed at the places indicated this morning:—1st or South Durham, Barnard Castle; 3rd King's Own Stafford, Newcastle-under-Lyme; 2nd Queen's Own Tower Hamlets, Victoria Park; 1st West York Rifles, Pontefract; Carlow Rifles, Carlow; and the Roscommon, Boyle. The Kerry completed at Tralee on Thursday.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

1ST LONDON ENGINEERS. Col. Dawson-Scott, commanding Royal Engineers, Home District, officially inspected the regiment in Regent's Park on Saturday night. The parade showed 445 of all ranks, compared with 373 last year. After the inspection in infantry drill, the corps returned to head-quarters, where work executed by the respective companies was inspected.

LONDON RIFLE BRIGADE. The Duke of Cambridge made his annual inspection of the regiment on Saturday in Hyde Park, where the Royal London Militia were also formed up for inspection by his Royal Highness. The regiment fully maintained its old reputation, though we share the opinion generally expressed that the first regiment in the City should be as strong as other well known brigades in England and Scotland. The Duke of Cambridge, at the close of the drill, praised the work of both regiments.

4TH MIDDLESEX (WEST LONDON) RIFLES were inspected on Saturday in Hyde Park by Col. Lyon-Fremantle, Coldstream Guards. The muster was good, and shows that the regiment, in the hands of Lieut.-Col. Somers Lewis, is making headway. Some of the movements were unsteady, particularly the attack, but the presence of a good number of recruits in the ranks may account for this. Col. Lyon-Fremantle advocated regular attendance at drill by all.

26TH MIDDLESEX (CUSTOMS AND DOCKS) RIFLES annual drill competition came off at the Tower on Saturday, when three companies competed. Lieut. Lloyd, acting adjutant, Grenadiers, was the judge. G (Capt. Sheppy's) Company was awarded first place, with 247 out of a possible 255 marks; M (Capt. Green's) Company second, with 241; and D (Capt. Beck's) Company third, with 228.

46TH MIDDLESEX (LONDON AND WESTMINSTER) RIFLES. This soldier-like regiment was inspected on Saturday last in Regent's Park, by Col. Logan, C.B. Lieut.-Col. Routledge was in command, and Sir Charles Russell, V.C., hon. colonel, who never misses an opportunity of being with his battalion, was also present. The parade state was as follows:—Present on parade, 21 officers, 39 serjeants, 39 band, and 583 rank and file; total, 682; absent with leave, 73; absent without leave, 29; total enrolled strength, 784. The drill over, the inspecting officers intimated his intention of making a most favourable report, and Sir Charles Russell also said a few words to the men, expressing his pleasure at the improved appearance and drill of the battalion. 2nd Lieut. Routledge, son of the commanding officer, did duty as aide-de-camp to Col. Logan. Considering what the 46th were when Col. Routledge took the regiment over, it is something astonishing to see them now, and that officer deserves the highest credit, for he has done more perhaps for the Service generally, than any Volunteer commanding officer in the Metropolitan district, whilst his interest in his battalion is unceasing.

7TH SURREY (SOUTHWARK) RIFLES, which has recently received a considerable accession to its ranks by the amalgamation with it of the 26th (Shaftesbury Park) Corps, was inspected on Saturday by Col. Sprot, of the Kingston Sub-district. The enrolled strength of the 7th is now 906, and it may, therefore, be said to again take its place as one of the big Metropolitan battalions. The uniforms of the late 26th harmonise in all respects but the facings with the 7th Corps, which the former will have to change. The inspection was very satisfactory.

The Engineer Volunteers, who encamped on Saturday at the usual camping-ground at Chatham, began their week's work in earnest on Monday morning. The operations have been under the direction of Major Merriman, R.E. Hitherto the Volunteers have been engaged on the Chatham side of the river during their first week, but this year the programme has been altered, and the work has been altogether confined to the Upnor side. An enemy has been supposed to be attacking the corps from the east, and it has been the duty of the Volunteers to defend the position. The conduct of the men while in camp has been most excellent.

The following is the official detail of the Volunteer battalions which have received permission from the Secretary of State for War to encamp at Aldershot and Colchester and drill with the Regular troops, next month. At Aldershot there will be eight and at Colchester two battalions, the total number of officers and men being set down as a little over 4,700:—Aldershot: July 31 to Aug. 7. 1st Provisional Battalion—4th Essex, 151; 1st London, 57; 4th Middlesex, 115; 28th Middlesex, 114; and 7th Surrey, 28; total, with one officer attached, 466 (Lieut.-Col. Birt, 4th Essex; Lieut.-Col. (as major) S. Lewis, 4th Middlesex; Major Ford, 2nd Essex; and Capt. Davis). 2nd Provisional Battalion—3rd Hants, 121; 46th Middlesex, 247; and 19th Middlesex, 57; total, 425 (Lieut.-Col. Routledge, 46th Middlesex; Major Hawkshaw, 46th Middlesex, and Capt. Lee, 46th Middlesex). 3rd Provisional Battalion—21st Middlesex, 57, and 38th Middlesex, 294; total, 351 (Major Edis and Capt. Elmhirst). 1st Derby, 568 (Lieut.-Col. Sir H. Wilmot, Lieut.-Col. Evans, Major Holmes, Major Bircham, and Major Balguy). Aug. 7 to 14. 4th Provisional Battalion—26th Middlesex, 139, and 49th Middlesex, 349; total, 488 (Lieut.-Col. Du Plat Taylor, Major Thompson, and Capt. Conor). 5th Provisional Battalion—4th Kent, 89; 2nd London, 68; 3rd Middlesex, 114; 2nd Surrey, 86; 6th Surrey, 115; and 1st Tower Hamlets, 113; total, 585 (Lieut.-Col. Tufnell, 4th Kent; Major Bevington, 6th Surrey; Major Despard, 4th Kent, and Capt. Belgrave, 4th Kent). Aug. 14 to 21, 6th Provisional Battalion—37th Middlesex, 68th; 40th Middlesex, 114; 1st Surrey, 157; 5th Surrey, 123; and 8th Surrey, 90; total, 452 (Lieut.-Col. Ommanney, 5th Surrey; Major Arnold, 5th Surrey; Major Alt, 40th Middlesex; and Major Urquhart, 6th Surrey). 7th Provisional Battalion—2nd Cheshire, 102; 15th Lancashire, 196; 2nd Middlesex, 73; 9th Middlesex, 67; and 20th Middlesex, 71; total, 509 (Lieut.-Col. Pierce, Major Townsend, and Major Leslie, 15th Lancashire).

Colchester: July 31 to Aug. 7. 8th Provisional Battalion—1st Essex, 405, and 2nd Essex, 58; total, 463 (Lieut.-Col. Tufnell and Majors Osborne, Vaizey, and Bannister). 1st Bedford, 398 (Lieut.-Col. Green, Major Pryor, and Capt. Webster).

THE ROYAL HIBERNIAN MILITARY SCHOOL.

The Crimean banquet fund prizes were distributed on the 8th inst. by the Lord-Lieutenant to the successful competitors at the recent examinations. The Countess Cowper accompanied his Excellency. The Lord-Lieutenant having taken his seat, the Commandant (Col. Cotton) said:—It is most gratifying to me that it has pleased your Excellency to consent to honour us by your presence here to-day. The history of the Crimean banquet prize fund, connected with this institution, is well known. By the records of the school it appears that no less than 215 men and boys, formerly pupils in this school, served in the Crimea. On Jan. 1 of this year there were serving throughout the Army, who were formerly boys in this school, no less than 1,005, of which the following is an analysis:—Commissioned officers, 17; sub-conductor R.A., 1; conducting clerk, 1; master gunner, 1; gunnery instr., 1; serjt.-majors, 22; bandmasters, 10; qrmr.-serjts, 9; enlisted schoolmasters, 22; troop serjt.-majors, 3; colour-serjts., 12; trumpet and drum-majors, 13; serjts., 123; lance-serjts., 12; corpls., 79; bombardiers, 43; lance-corpls., 32; musicians on regimental bands, 174; trumpeters, drummers, buglers, and boys, 227; gunners, sappers, and ptes., 203. Total, 1,005. As to their character, it would appear thus:—Very bad, 1; bad, 9; indifferent, 31; good and fair, 553; very good, 411. It will be seen that no less than 604 are in the higher grades, 174 are musicians in regimental bands, 227 are trumpeters, drummers, buglers, and boys, and only 203 are gunners, sappers, and privates, thus proving beyond all doubt the great value of the institution as a nursery for the Army. And I will mention a remarkable fact, that the boys of this school very rarely desert from the Army, and almost invariably re-engage after the first period of service, thereby securing to the nation good soldiers, and to a large extent that most valuable commodity, a good and trusty non-commissioned officer. The school has contributed largely to the scientific branches of the Army. In the Royal Engineers there are serving 129, of whom 70 are in the higher grades. In the Royal Artillery there are serving 248, 99 of whom are in the higher grades, viz., 2 serjt.-majors, 9 baty. serjt.-majors, 3 qrmr.-serjts., 1 master-gunner, 1 gunnery-instructor, serjts., &c., 83. It pleases me to be able to say that the conduct of the boys as a body is satisfactory, and their health is excellent.

The boys then sang "Happy is our Soldier's Band" and "Rule Britannia," after which his Excellency addressed them. The proceedings then terminated.

In the parade ground afterwards their Excellencies saw the boys at drill, and the Lord-Lieutenant congratulated the heads of the school on the proficiency, intelligence, and smartness of the boys.

THE HYDROGRAPHIC DEPARTMENT.

SIR,—An article appeared under the above heading on May 27 in a weekly "journal of science." The scientific side of the subject was, however, completely ignored, the article in question consisting chiefly of particularly unscientific personalities, which were apparently intended to throw discredit on certain statements made by me at the Society of Arts (see Journal of the Society for May 21). These statements throw some light, I hope, on the important question whether, as the first maritime and commercial Power in the world, England is doing as much as she ought to do for hydrography; and I therefore wrote to the editor, on June 2, to point out that no good end could be gained by calling me names, and that if my statements could not be disproved, they were incontrovertible witnesses to the fact that the Hydrographic Department was not equal to the demands upon it. After a good deal of correspondence, my letter was at length inserted on July 2, but with an editorial note appended, which I felt that I ought to notice. "Want of space," unfortunately, prevented the editor from "continuing the correspondence;" and I therefore beg, in the interests of those who are concerned in the safety of our ships, that you will give the public an opportunity of judging for themselves where the truth lies, by permitting my letter to appear in your columns.—I am, &c.,

July 14, 1880.

(Copy of said letter from Lieut. G. T. Temple.)

"In your notes on my letter dated June 2, inserted in your number for July 2, you throw doubt on my statement that the Hydrographic Department has 'deliberately given dangerous publicity to errors.' As this is calculated to mislead your readers, and increase the danger of which I have given warning, I must ask you to investigate the accuracy of my statement by inspection of the errors in the Admiralty list of lights on the Norwegian coast, which were published in the face of repeated warnings, and I am sure you will then withdraw your reflection on my accuracy. I may also state that my manuscript, in which the lights were correctly described, was in this office for more than five months before the erroneous list was published. You also inform your readers that my compilation (a volume of sailing directions called the 'Norway Pilot') is being revised by 'another authority.' No one would be more rejoiced than myself that my work should have such an advantage. But the correction of my proofs has been entrusted to an officer with no practical knowledge of the Norwegian coast, and unacquainted with the language, while I, the compiler, am not allowed either to revise my own work or to add various items of information which were necessary to bring it up to the date when it was ordered to 'stand over.' These are the facts, and it is important that they should be publicly known. With regard to the letter which appeared in the Shipping and Mercantile Gazette and Daily News, I have written to those journals to say that the Norwegian papers evidently 'interpreted my remarks on our own Admiralty charts as applying to the Norwegian charts.' In reality, the letter in question proves that my statements were strictly accurate, as you will see by comparing it with my paper."

THE COMMUTATION OF PENSIONS.

"Fiat Justitia" writes:—"I have heard it sometimes stated that an Englishman is too apt to grumble. Now, grumbling, vide Johnson and Webster, means to complain without a cause, and I have no wish to do that. But I should like to ask, through the medium of your influential paper, why officers retired on full pay from her Majesty's Indian Army cannot commute or capitalise such retired pension, as is permitted in all other branches of the public service under similar circumstances? The State can in no case be a loser by such capitalisation of pension, and at times it may be the means of saving a man from what is worse than death. What possible reason can there be to deny to these officers what is conceded to all other branches of the public service? It is, of course, only under exceptional circumstances that any man would wish to commute his pension, as he would almost invariably be a loser in a pecuniary sense. Why, then, refuse this privilege, which in some cases would act very beneficially?"

The nomination of candidates for the representation of Berwick-upon-Tweed took place yesterday. The Lord Advocate for Scotland (Liberal) was nominated by James Allan. Capt. Milne Home (Conservative) was nominated by Alderman Thompson. The voting is on Monday.

In another part of the paper will be found an advertisement of the Zoedone Company, Limited. Speaking from experience, we can assure our readers that this effervescing non-alcoholic beverage is the very thing for this hot weather. Its flavour is delicious, and Zoedone resembles champagne in all but the intoxicating properties of the latter. Zoedone has already become popular at some of the best clubs, and it only requires to be generally known to be largely consumed by private families.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

The Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, attended by several officers of the Horse Guards Staff, visited Sandhurst on Thursday, and presented new colours to the cadets at the Royal Military College. Shortly after 11 o'clock the cadets paraded in review order, and formed up in six companies, the detachment of cavalry attached to the College being on the right. The parade was held on the ground in front of the College. Col. F. D. Middleton, the commandant, having assumed command, the cadets were formed into line shortly before 12 o'clock. The Commander-in-Chief arrived at the Camberley station about 11.45, and was met by Gen. Napier, Governor of the College. As his Royal Highness entered the College grounds, a Royal salute of twenty-one guns was fired, and the cadets, in line, received the Duke with a Royal salute. An inspection of the line having been made, the ceremony of trooping the old colours—held by Under-Officers Peyton and Atherton, and Cadets the Hon. — Charteris and Wilkinson—was gone through. The old colours having been carried to the rear, the cadets were formed into three sides of a square, and the new colours were brought to the front and presented by his Royal Highness, who made a short but suitable address in doing so. Gen. Napier, in the name of the cadets, having thanked the Duke for making the presentation, the cadets reformed line and marched past. The Commander-in-Chief afterwards visited the Riding School, and saw a ride of the cadets, under Capt. Brooke. A number of the cadets also went through various gymnastic exercises at the gymnasium. The Duke of Cambridge left the College about 2.30 p.m. under a Royal salute, and returned to London. In the course of the afternoon the cadets left the College for the holidays.

PURCHASE OFFICERS.

"Miles Olim" writes:—"Concurring fully in all other respects with the opinions expressed by 'Equity' in your last number on the above subject, I venture to dissent from him only in the desponding view he still takes of the situation. No one knows better than I do, from experience, the reluctance of the Daily Press to take up the cause of injured officers. When war is waging or victories are gained, the newspapers can find no words too high-flown to express the 'gratitude' of the nation, or its 'confidence' in our 'gallant officers.' The most fulsome elegies on those who have fallen are penned by the so-called representatives of public opinion, but when the questions of some trifling remuneration, of some well-merited recognition of services, or even, as in the present case, of common justice, to men once bepraised and bespattered with their hypocritical ink arise, 'God is forgotten, and the soldier slighted.' In the words of Byron,—

> 'Trust not for freedom to the Franks,
> They have a King who buys and sells;
> In native swords and native ranks,
> Your only hope of freedom dwells.'

Nor are our military legislators more responsive to the call of their fellow-soldiers. Their apathy, indifference, or neglect arises, however, from causes quite distinct from those which influence the Press. Being themselves soldiers, and having reached the dignity of legislators late in life, they are, from their previous education and habits, generally incapable of presenting a plain case in terms sufficiently convincing to the preponderating civil element in the House, always disposed to view military grievances with disfavour. They are timid in speech; in action easily swayed by the current of opinion, in and out of the House, and still more governed by the smooth promises of Ministers to 'consider' the question, or overawed by the blunt refusal of redress. The longer, however, this feeling prevails, the more difficult will it be to obtain a hearing, even in cases of the most glaring injustice. Let the seniority Brevet be abolished, and there are numerous openings in the Warrants of 1877-1878 for the utter confiscation of officers' property, and disregard of their most cherished rights. Notwithstanding all this, I have great faith in the maxim, 'Magna est veritas, et prevalebit;' and instead of going cap-in-hand to editors of daily papers, or of interviewing M.P.'s who will profess great concern for their brother-officers, and promise to support any motion, if a mover be found and an opportunity given to move, might it not be well to circulate a brief, clear, incisive statement of the injustice done to the most ill-used class in her Majesty's dominions? Let this statement be sent to the Press, to notice, if its leaders have any sense of justice, or be placed in the hands of all M.P.'s not notoriously hostile to military institutions. If this fails, it may be time to despair. Will 'Equity' lend his able support to the proposal?"

Messrs. Cooper, Hall, and Co., of 46 Lombard Street, are prepared to receive applications for the purchase of £368,300 sterling, 5½ per cent. debentures of £100 each of the Imperial Brazilian Natal and Nova Cruz Railway Company, Limited, secured by the Imperial Government of Brazil and the Provincial Government of Rio Grande do Norte. The concession of the railway is in perpetuity, but subject to a power reserved to the Imperial Government to purchase the line after 30 years at a price to be reckoned, in default of agreement, on the average net revenue of the last five years, but not less than the amount of the guaranteed capital, and to be payable in 6 per cent. Imperial Brazilian Govt. Stock The line is under contract for completion by July 1, 1881, for the total sum of £800,000, which includes cost of concession, purchase of land, rolling stock, stations, &c., and a provision for the administration expenses during construction. The debentures are to bearer, and are redeemable at par by annual drawings, or by purchase, within 30 years, and the interest is payable in sterling in London, half-yearly, by coupons, viz., on April 1 and Oct. 1 in each year.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

F. G. F.—The statement is not borne out.

W. G.—Apply to the Crown Agent for the Colony.

TRUE BLUE.—There is no ironclad of the Royal Navy named the Revenge, nor has there been. The only ship of her Majesty's Fleet named Revenge is a wooden vessel employed at Queenstown.

WARD ROOM.—You have no cause for complaint. The case appears to have been most fairly dealt with.

ORPHEUS FUND.—Yes. A Committee has been formed. You will find particulars in another column.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1880.

THE tendency of most of our Army reforms appears to be to bring out in glaring relief the weakness of our system. This may be a strong assertion, but it is supported in the constant changes, demonstrating indecision, to which the Service is subjected; and that indecision and weakness are synonymous is incontestable. To resist progress is bad, but to further it, by allowing the pursuit of chimeras by the development of individual ideas, is worse, more especially when such ideas are emasculated through proposers whose self-opinion lands them high and dry above the counsels which have been built up on centuries of experience. One serious result of the weakness alluded to is a distrust in future legislation. Officers now fee that a contract with the Government is binding only for so long as expediency permits, and that at any moment their prospects, when at the brightest, may, by official caprice and a stroke of the pen, be felled to the ground. The British Army has from its infancy been officered by gentlemen to whom "honour" is a second nature; but the lessons inculcated by the radical and ruthless changes, owing to which the whole personnel of the Army is being rapidly transformed, are not calculated to inspire that high tone so essential to its existence, either in the preservation of its historic memories, the generating a pride in the profession, or faith and trust in the future. Recent innovations fully exemplify all that we advance, but we would point principally to the "compensation to Purchase officers," the "Army reorganisation" scheme, or "departmental" reform. Grumbling must and will often occur, and individual interests must suffer when any action calculated to promote the public benefit is carried into effect, but the most ardent reformer would fail to prove that it was conducive to the interests of the Army to swamp the country with men of experience, retired in the prime of life, and to fill up the gaps with mere boys. The value of "boys" on active service, whether they be privates or officers, was fully proved during the Zulu war. Again, the system of "selection" observed in the reconstruction of the departments would appear to be quite unconstitutional, as it places in the hands of one or two persons a power never before delegated to individuals when dealing with commissioned officers, viz., that of sitting in camera, and adjudicating without the possibility of appeal, upon the "ability and merits" of officers. The result of this unprecedented course has been by no means assuring to those who have been so fortunate as to be retained, and rumours are already afloat that further changes are contemplated, which will lead to a complete bouleversement of the latest reforms. A further sign of the times will be found in the appointment of an Artillery officer to the post of Surveyor-General of the Ordnance, when the feelings of that officer should be such as to enable him to exercise a neutral position on all ordnance and other subjects which may be submitted to his decision. Now, it is no secret that General Sir John Adye is wedded to the Woolwich system of rifled ordnance, and that on all Artillery matters his opinions are almost identical with those of the Director of Artillery, Sir Frederick Campbell. Under such conditions, it would be no matter of surprise to find that in the furtherance of individual opinions, private enterprise were stifled, and that such inventors as Palliser and other familiar names will continue to be fettered by an opposition which places them at a great disadvantage in their struggle with Woolwich. If Sir Henry Palliser had given way under the opposition he has encountered, the country would not now have the benefit of his effective light guns, ranging from three to five tons, and which, in point of economy, relative to their merits, are, beyond comparison, the best in the world. If a little of the talent in the Royal Gun Factories had been concentrated upon the Palliser system, and a helping hand held out to the indefatigable inventor, how different would be the results. Inventors, as a rule, are a nuisance, by reason of their enthusiasm and egotism; but it will be a bad day for the country should a faction succeed by its exclusiveness in damping all private enterprise, when the hopelessness of entering into competition is not so fully demonstrated. "The divinity which doth hedge" the Ordnance Select Committee is not calculated to open up the inventive genius of the country, but rather the reverse, and it is scarcely warranted, considering that no Artillery officer can lay claim to having invented a gun. The foregoing remarks are a protest against sectarianism and individualism, which have lately led to such clashing between the various elements of which the Service is composed, so much so that the future is far from hopeful. It may be necessary, in the march of events, to remove the boulders of ignorance and prejudice, but we would warn those who are pursuing "with eagerness the phantoms of hope" not to attach too much "credibility to the whispers of fancy."

Major-General H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught has been invited by the Emperor of Germany to be present at the manœuvres of the combined Guards and Third Army Corps, which begin near Berlin at the latter end of August.

When Colonel Gordon threw up his appointment, he had, with the extraordinary unselfishness and disregard of this world's goods which is one of his characteristics, parted with nearly all the modest savings which he had accumulated in the service of the Khedive to those whose needs were, he considered, more pressing than his own. We cannot enter into details, but never did knight-errant go forth with an emptier purse to liberate damsels from persecution, than Pasha Gordon did when he set out for China to preserve the peace.

General Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., on assuming command of the Division at Aldershot, has taken up his residence at Park House, Farnborough, until such time as the new official quarters about to be erected are ready for his occupation.

A class of 15 non-commissioned officers of the Royal Artillery have just completed a course of practical instruction at the War Office, in the keeping of Artillery store accounts. This War-Office course, which has been given at Winchester House, St. James's Square, by Mr. W. A. Browne, in the department of the Director of Artillery, is now required from all candidates for appointment as master gunners in the Royal Artillery.

There is a wide-spread rumour in military circles that the War Office contemplate reducing the number of Generals on the Active List to 150, excluding those apportioned to the Scientific Corps. It is further proposed, it is said, to apply to the promotions from the different grades of Generals rules as to age and non-employment which are now in force in the Naval Service.

It would appear on investigation that the number of General Officers actively employed are 50 Line and Cavalry, 6 Artillery, and 6 Engineers. Following the precedent of the Naval Service, in which 23 Admirals are employed, out of 63 on the Effective List, it seems that should that latter profession be taken as a pattern, as appears probable from the speech of Mr. Childers, that the Army may look forward to having a fixed establishment of 200 Generals on the Active List, excluding the Staff Corps, of which the Scientific Corps would furnish, perhaps, nearly one-fourth.

After the discussion that has taken place on the relative proportion of commands and Staff employ given to the officers of the Scientific Corps, as compared to the rest of the Army, it is interesting to observe that no full General of the Artillery is employed, but two Engineers are—Lord Napier of Magdala and Sir Lintorn Simmons. Of the Lieutenant-Generals, there are two Artillery officers,—General Phillpotts, as Inspector-General of Artillery, which is in reality a Major-General's appointment; and Sir John Adye, which latter can only be considered accidental. Of the Major-Generals, four Artillery officers have employment,—Sir F. Campbell, Director of Artillery; General J. Turner, commanding at Woolwich; General R. Radcliffe, D.A.G., hitherto held by a colonel; and General Macintire, commanding a division at Madras; also four Engineers—General J. Browne, as Governor of the Royal Military Academy; Sir R. Laffan, Governor of Bermuda; Sir W. Jervois, Governor of South Australia; and General Nicholson, Governor of Jersey. The proportion of Infantry and Cavalry officers employed is 9 Generals, 12 lieutenant-generals, and 29 major-generals.

A correspondent writes:—"In your impression of the 10th, alluding to the Chili-Peru-Bolivian war, you say that the movements of the land forces appear to be desultory, and scarcely intelligible. I have just returned from Chili, and was at the seat of war a few weeks before I left, and it is patent to all out there that the trio of insolvent belligerents are entirely exhausted. They have neither money nor men to carry on the war; the Chilians often have only a few days' provisions for the badly-clad, done-up soldiers, who have not had any pay for upwards of a year, and scarcely sufficient ammunition, and that within a very few days' march of the enemy, who, in his turn, is too exhausted and unprovided to move and drive them back. Hence all the marching, counter-marching, and halting, so unintelligible. All three are borrowing money at immense sacrifice, hoping to pay by-and-by from money borrowed on easier terms in Europe! It is time that the European Powers interfered, and put a stop to such utter and useless waste of life and property, for though there is not much bloodshed, sickness and privations carry away their hundreds monthly."

The scene in the House of Lords on Friday night last week, when Lord Strathnairn suddenly, and quite à propos des bottes, delivered his philippic against Lord Chelmsford, was highly dramatic. The speech was not reported, but it was very strong indeed, and was delivered in a nonchalant way, as if the scathing criticisms were the most easy and natural expressions of opinion in the world. Half-a-dozen Peers interposed to stop the torrent which was sweeping the late Commander-in-Chief in South Africa off his legs, in a metaphorical sense, but in vain, for Lord Strathnairn held on till it was made plain that the Lords thought he should have given notice of his indictment, and he then, we believe, declared his intention of renewing the assault in proper form. As Lord Chelmsford expressed his readiness for action, and his willingness to accept the challenge, we may expect a very instructive field-day in the House of Lords, ere the Session closes. And it will be no harm if there should be an opportunity of hearing Lord Chelmsford's defence, and of hearing what Lord Strathnairn has to say in condemnation of the war, which came on this country like a thunder-clap.

In reply to Sir C. Russell, Mr. Childers stated on Tuesday that it would not be convenient to lay on the table of the House the report of Lord Airey's Committee until the suggestions contained in it were conclusively dealt with. The committee was not a Royal Commission nor a departmental committee, but a committee of military officers, assembled to give the Secretary of State their confidential opinion on questions of military organisation.

The following are the range officers on duty at Wimbledon for the meeting of the National Rifle Asociation, viz.:—Brevet Major W. A. Bridge, 21st Foot (D.A.A.G. for Musketry, Malta); Captains M. C. S. Tynte, 4th Dragoon Guards (Adjutant Royal East Kent Yeomanry); Hon. E. Vesey, 9th Lancers (Adjutant Dorset Yeomanry); J. W. Pearse-Hobbs, 5th Foot (Adjutant 2nd Ayrshire Rifle Volunteers); N. P. O'Gorman, 10th Foot; C. E. Hussey, 20th Foot (Adjutant 7th Royal Lancashire Militia); E. C. Browne, 21st Foot; L. O. White, 22nd Foot; C. G. A. Mayhew, 23rd Foot; G. O. Stoney, 25th Foot (Adjutant 5th West York Militia); R. Waller, 53rd Foot; H. T. Hughes-Hallett, 57th Foot; H. P. M. Wylie, 60th Foot (Adjutant 5th Cheshire Rifle Volunteers); M. Hope, 92nd Foot (Adjutant 5th Lancashire Rifle Volunteers); A. Tower, 95th Foot; H. C. Symons, 105th Foot; R. P. Simpson, 109th Foot; V. D. Mathias, Royal Marine Artillery; H. J. L. Norcock, and C. S. F. Fagan, Royal Marine Light Infantry; W. B. Ferris, Cambridge Militia; A. T. Robson, West Essex Militia; and G. A. Raikes, 3rd West York Militia, and Hon. Artillery Company; and Lieutenants G. H. T. Swinton, 16th Foot; A. S. Woods, 32nd Foot; J. R. Rainsford, 36th Foot; W. H. M. Bent, 38th Foot; H. A. Taylor, 47th Foot; R. J. F. Banfield, 69th Foot; W. I. Eastman, Royal Marine Artillery; H. O. P. Wright, R. Denny, A. E. Houghton, C. H. Edge, and W. J. Langford, Royal Marine Light Infantry; and R. B. Maconochie, Royal Navy.

The following General Order was specially issued from the Horse Guards on Tuesday, signed by General Sir Charles Ellice, Adjutant-General:—"His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has received the Queen's commands to convey to the Volunteers of Great Britain her Majesty's congratulations on the completion of the twenty-first year of the existence of the force. The Queen has watched with much interest the steady progress of the force since its formation; and its present numerical strength, high training, and discipline have elicited her Majesty's unqualified satisfaction. While regretting that it has not been found possible to hold a review this year, the Queen hopes that an opportunity may present itself at no distant period which will enable her Majesty to inspect the Volunteers in Windsor Great Park." Her Majesty's message came opportunely, and has been read with much gratification throughout the kingdom. The force, after the rebuffs it has recently experienced in the matter of the proposed English and Scottish reviews, considered that it had not received the consideration it was entitled to. The Queen's gracious command, thus conveyed to the Volunteers, will do much to remove this impression, especially as, after all that has been said and done, there is to be a Royal Volunteer review, "at no distant date," to commemorate the event. The review should come off before the close of the present season, and it only needs the issue of an order to the effect that the Queen will, on a certain day in August or September, inspect her auxiliary troops, to secure an attendance of 40,000 or 50,000 men.

We suggest to the War Office that in the pages of the Army List connected with the establishment of General Officers, after the names of those that are employed the nature of their duties should be inserted, instead of the letter "S.," which, in most cases, seems thought sufficiently intelligible, while in others it is altogether left out.

At the All-Ireland Rifle Meeting, which took place at the Curragh last week, we are glad to see that there was a prize to be competed for by the cavalry, under somewhat similar rules and conditions to those of the Royal Cambridge Challenge Trophy, which was instituted last year at Wimbledon. This "cavalry dismounted competition" prize, as it was termed in the official programme, was eagerly competed for by the three cavalry regiments at present forming the Cavalry Brigade at the Curragh—viz., the Royal Scots Greys, and the 19th and 20th Hussars. The first-named regiment started two teams for it, while the other two corps had one team each. After a spirited contest, the prize was awarded to the 20th Hussars. The scores made at the two distances, 500 and 200 yards, by the respective corps were as follows:—Scots Greys, 1st team, 95 points; 2nd team, 69 points; 19th Hussars, 80 points; 20th Hussars, 98 points. All the three regiments finished well within the prescribed ten minutes, but the 20th Hussars did so in the least time.

"A Field Officer" writes:—"Thomas ('Tommy') White, of Aldershot, is dead. The majority of the officers of the Army who ever had dealings with him will drop a tear to his memory, for a more upright, generous, and respected man of business never lived. His familiar face will be much missed in the hunting-field, and the splendid, high-priced horses he used to ride—aye, and ride well—will pass into other, possibly less worthy, hands. Mr. White was ever ready to meet the wishes of all his numerous customers, and he has, to my knowledge, on more than one occasion behaved in a most generous and liberal manner to more than one officer in and late of the Army. His loss will be felt by many both far away and near, and Aldershot itself will be a long time before it forgets the familiar name of 'Tommy White,' who simply made the town."

Mr. Sprigg, the Cape Premier, has brought forward a proposal to detach from the Cape Mounted Rifles the artillery troop, and create a new force of 100 horse artillery. The cost would be £1,200. He pointed out, in bringing his proposal before the Cape Parliament, that there would no longer be any charge for Imperial troops, as they would be withdrawn this year—except from Simon's Bay. He insisted that a force of trained artillery was a necessary part of any scheme of defence. The motion was strenuously resisted, chiefly on the ground of expense. The new Commander-in-Chief, it was urged, had only just arrived, and it was suggested that he ought to be consulted before any definite step was taken. The Bill ultimately passed its second reading.

Previous to the embarkation of the Empress Eugénie at Cape Town for England, Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., received from Lady Frere (on behalf of the ladies of the Colony) a shield, as a recognition of his bravery during the war.

We are indeed glad to learn from Mr. Childers' reply to Major-General Sir Henry Havelock-Allan, V.C., C.B., on Tuesday, that the right hon. gentleman hopes in the course of the autumn to take up vigorously the question of the employment of non-commissioned officers in minor posts in the civil employment of the Government, in accordance with the recommendations of the Select Committee which sat in 1876 and 1877, and that he has directed a preliminary inquiry into the subject.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, July 12, 1880.

Staff Surgeon Charles James Devonshire has been promoted to the rank of Fleet Surgeon in H.M.'s Fleet, with seniority of July 6, 1880. Acting Chief Engineer Ebenezer Edwin Lucas has been confirmed in the rank of Chief Engineer in H.M.'s Fleet, with seniority of Dec. 6, 1879.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of Feb. 22, 1870, Paymaster William Elias Kelly has been placed on the Retired List from the 5th inst., and has been allowed to assume the rank and title of Paymaster-in-Chief on the Retired List from the same date.

ROYAL MARINE FORCES.

The following promotion, dated July 3, 1880, has taken place in the Royal Marine Light Infantry, viz.:—Lieutenant William Henry McCheane to be Captain, vice Isaacson, seconded on that date for duty as Deputy Governor of a Prison.

ADMIRALTY, July 13, 1880.

ROYAL MARINE FORCES.

The following promotion, dated June 8, has taken place in the Royal Marine Artillery, viz.:—Lieut. C. J. Cheetham to be Capt., vice Bickford, appointed Military Instructor from that date.

ADMIRALTY, July 15, 1880.

ROYAL MARINE FORCES.

The following promotions, dated July 3, have taken place in the Royal Marine Artillery, viz.:—Col. Second Commandant H. W. Mawbey to be Col.-Commandant, vice Adair, placed on a Reserved List, under H.M.'s Order in Council of June 28; Lieut.-Col. and Brevet Col. E. H. Cox to be Lieut.-Col. Second Commandant, vice Mawbey; Major H. B. Tuson to be Lieut.-Col., vice Cox; Capt. and Gunnery Instr. J. S. Derriman to be Major, vice Tuson; Lieut. and Assist.-Gunnery Instr. T. Moore to be Capt., vice Derriman.

RETIRED OFFICERS.

It is notified in the current quarterly Navy List that officers of the Navy and Marines on the Retired List who have commuted their retired pay must send annually between January 1 and March 31 a notification to the Secretary of the Admiralty of their being alive, otherwise their names will be removed from the List.

APPOINTMENTS.

Lieutenants—James H. T. Burke, to the Excellent, as junior staff officer; Gerald C. Langley, to the Excellent, for gunnery duties; C. F. M. Somerset, to the Tamar; F. W. Ingram, to the Bacchante; F. P. French and I. C. Faire, to the Miranda.

Navigating Lieutenant—C. W. Stuart, to the Miranda.

Sub-Lieutenants—Henry Grant Monckton, to the Dido; George Sarsfield Walsh, to the Ganges, for Sealark; William H. du C. Chads, to the Newcastle; and Charles H. Dundas, to the St. Vincent, for Martin; F. B. Henderson, to the Bacchante.

Staff Surgeon—M. U. Greany, to the Miranda, to date from the 22nd inst.

Engineers—Thomas Scott, to the Victor Emanuel, for Hong Kong Yard; John William Nelson, to the Terror, for Viper and Vixen; James Parry, to the Pembroke, for Slaney; G. Mackney, to the Indus.

Gunner—C. G. Crabb, to the Miranda.

Acting Carpenter—William Pound, to the Indus.

Clerk—C. D. M. Farrant, to the Miranda, to date from the 22nd inst.

Albatross, Com. A. Errington, from Labuan, en route for Singapore, called at Pinding on May 29 for coaling. After a short stay she sailed on May 31.

Alexandra, Capt. Lord Walter T. Kerr, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir F. Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., arrived at Genoa on July 10 with the Mediterranean squadron, consisting of the Téméraire, Monarch, Invincible, Rupert, Thunderer, Cygnet, and Helicon, and was to sail on Thursday for Villafranca, Hyères, Barcelona, Palma, Carthagena, Malaga, and Gibraltar.

Bacchante, Capt. Lord C. Scott, has made a trial of her machinery alongside the jetty at Portsmouth. The circumstances were somewhat peculiar. It was found during her recent cruise that on several occasions the engines had not moved after the order had been given, and in one instance, while the ship was in a critical position in the West Indies, as many as nine minutes elapsed before a start could be obtained. The captain reported the circumstances to the Admiralty, and the dockyard officers at Portsmouth were ordered to hold an enquiry. They discovered that both the low-pressure pistons had worked down, that the tongue-piece of the metallic packing rings had set fast, and thus been prevented from expanding, whereby the pistons were rendered leaky, and also that the packing of the working barrel of the low-pressure cylinders was defective. These defects having been remedied, steam was got up on Monday and the stopping and starting of the engines tried. The machinery was found to be under perfect control, 30 seconds being the maximum time required to make a move. Their Lordships, considering that the chief engineer of the ship should himself have discovered and reported the defects, have transferred that officer to another appointment. The Bacchante will proceed to Cowes next week to act as guardship during her Majesty's residence at Osborne, after which it is understood she will start for a cruise, with one or both of the Royal midshipmen on board.

Boadicea, Comdre. Richards, C.B., was at Simon's Bay on June 20, and was waiting for her banjo frame to be repaired before proceeding to sea. She was expected to leave Simon's Bay for a fortnight, most likely calling in first at Table Bay, and thence going to Saldanha Bay, expending ammunition en route.

Condor, Com. E. F. Day, arrived at Malta on July 4 from Civita Vecchia with mails and the following invalids:—Dr. Porter, of H.M.S. Rupert; Mr. H. A. Madge, of the Invincible; and two men from the Téméraire, for treatment in the Naval Hospital, Bighi. The Condor left on Saturday for Genoa with mails for the fleet.

Encounter, Capt. Hon. A. Denison, sailed for Foochow on May 22. While at Selangan in June, she visited Jugra, the residence of the Sultan, as did also the commanding and other officers, who paid their respects to his highness the Sultan, and were received with marked courtesy and consideration. The Sultan returned the visit of ceremony paid to him by Capt. the Hon. A. D. S. Denison, R.N. The ship was lying outside the river, and his highness was highly pleased at his reception, and all he saw. This ship is known in the China Squadron as "the Home," and it is said "every man forward is as content with his lot as though he was domiciled in Old England, the officers being most affable and kind towards the crew. Lieut. F. C. B. B. Simpson is very popular, as is also Lieut. H. B. Elwyn. The especial favourite of the crew amongst the officers is Lieut. C. H. Bayly; he takes a great interest in their amusements and welfare, and he and Mr. Pratt, boatswain, can provide a dramatic, musical, or Ethiopian entertainment at twenty-four hours' notice." Very successful entertainments have been given during the stay of the vessel in Hong Kong, and were to be repeated in Shanghai.

Foam, Lieut. and Com. J. A. Baker, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Wednesday morning from Sheerness, on her passage to the West Coast of Africa. She steamed into Barnpool in the afternoon to take in coal, and was to leave for her station on Friday.

Forester, Lieut.-Com. Sydney Smith, was searching for the missing boat of the mail steamer American on June 20.

Hecla, Capt. Morgan Singer, will shortly proceed to Malta, to be temporarily attached to the Mediterranean Fleet.

Miranda, Capt. the Hon. E. S. Dawson, will be commissioned at Plymouth on the 22nd inst. for the Australian station, with a complement of 138 men.

Modeste, Capt. J. G. Mead, was at Kanagawa on May 24, on which day a Naval Court was held at the British Consulate at Kanagawa.

Monarch, Capt. G. Tryon, C.B., left Malta on July 5 for Spezzia with mails for the fleet, with which she reached Genoa on July 10, and was to leave on Thursday for Villafranca, &c., with the flag.

Neptune, Com. Dowding in charge, steamed out of Portsmouth harbour on Monday for a further trial of her guns. Capt. Hopkins directed the trials. There were ten discharges, the two first being with charges of 100lbs. of gunpowder, and the remainder with 130 lbs. The two guns of the after turret were fired at an elevation of ten degrees on the starboard beam, the compressor plate being used to ascertain its capabilities, and there being also a boom boat in crutches for the purpose of trying it. The angle of training was twenty degrees abaft. The two fore-turret guns were next fired at the same elevation on the port beam and at fifty-one degrees abaft, a boat being hung in the davits; and from both these discharges, practically, no damage was done. All four turret guns were then discharged on the port beam, the angle of training being thirty degrees "before," the plate compressors being still used, the object of this broadside being to try the boom boat resting in the crutches, the plate-compressor, and also the forecastle. One of the after-turret guns was also fired on the starboard beam at an angle of training of twenty degrees forward, the hydraulic compressor being brought into requisition. The other discharges were to determine whether men could remain at quarters in the forecastle while the turret guns were being trained forward. The two fore-turret guns were fired horizontally, at an angle of training of forty-five degrees before, the right guns of the fore turret at sixty degrees forward, both fore-turret guns at the same angle of training, the fore-turret right gun at seventy degrees forward, both guns of the fore turret at the same angle, and the right gun of the fore turret at seventy-five degrees. All these discharges were on the starboard beam, and the results were very satisfactory, the concussion being less felt in the forecastle than in the turrets, although a number of fittings would have to be strengthened before the guns could be repeatedly fired well trained forward. As was expected, the discharge of her 38-ton weapons singly and simultaneously did not a little damage to joiners' and other contract work, but no material part of the ship was injured. The Neptune returned into harbour in the course of the afternoon, and, after having defects made good, will be reported ready for commission.

Newcastle, Capt. Edward Kelly, last from Portland on a cruise in the Channel for the training of young seamen, anchored at Spithead on Wednesday evening for the purpose of landing a few patients at Haslar Hospital, and exchanged salutes with the flagship of Admiral Ryder. She will remain a few days at Spithead.

Pioneer, Lieut.-Com. H. C. Carre, was at Simon's Bay on June 20.

Spartan, Capt. R. Tracey, arrived at Malta on July 9, and was to leave at the latter end of the week, homeward bound, to pay off.

Tamar, Capt. T. H. Royse, was taken outside the Plymouth Breakwater on Wednesday morning for a two hours' steam trial with satisfactory results, a speed of 10.5 knots having been attended. On completing the trial, she returned into harbour.

Vestal, Com. Tandy, which arrived at Portsmouth last week from the East Indies, was inspected by Flag-Captain M. Culme Seymour, in the absence, at the Atalanta Court of Inquiry, of the Commander-in-Chief. Commissioned at Portsmouth in June, 1875, she was recommissioned in January of last year on the East Coast of Africa, with part of her own crew and part of the Daphne's. She has been engaged in the suppression of the slave-trade, but she has passed through an uneventful period, her officers and crew having been principally engaged in boat cruising, with unimportant results, and her most notable casualty being the loss of two seamen early this year by the sinking of a whaler off the coast of Madagascar. She left Zanzibar on the homeward passage on April 18, stayed at Malta for a week, and at Gibraltar for a day. Favourable weather was experienced throughout. She pays out of commission into the 4th Division of the Steam Reserve next Friday, and before being engaged on further service will undergo a thorough overhaul and refit.

Vigilant, Lieut. Com. W. M. Annesley. During the stay of the Vigilant at Tientsin, H.E. Li Hung-Chang, the Viceroy of Chihli, paid a visit in state to that vessel, and had an interview with Sir Thomas Wade and Vice-Admiral Coote, which lasted about an hour. The Viceroy was received with the honours becoming his station.

Wye, Staff Com. H. D. Sarratt, ran aground on the Nore Sands at the estuary of the Thames and Medway on Sunday last. The steam-tug Sampson, from Sheerness, went to her assistance, and endeavoured to get her into deep water, but failed. When the tide flowed, however, she was removed from her perilous position. The Wye has recently returned from Malta and Gibraltar, and was waiting for a pilot to take her to Woolwich when the mishap occurred. But surely English men-of-war should be able to enter their own ports without such assistance.

A trial has been made on the measured mile in Stokes Bay, in the presence of the Controller of the Navy, of a service steam pinnace propelled by the Mallory screw, this being the first application of the invention in the Service. The propeller is capable of being turned to any angle by means of a pinion and gearing, like an ordinary rudder, with which it dispenses. The boiler is stowed away under the forecastle, while the cylinders are placed at the stern, and act directly upon the vertical shaft which turns the screw. Six runs were made with the engines going ahead and two with the engines going astern, there being scarcely half a knot's difference in the mean speed realised, 8·828 knots being obtained while going ahead with 339 revolutions, and 8·451 knots going astern with 340 revolutions. The engines were reversed from full speed ahead to full speed astern in 10 seconds. But the most remarkable results were attained in turning, the little craft showing such remarkable handiness that it not only turned in its own length, 42 ft., but was put by Col. Mallory through the movement of a quadrille, chaining, setting to partners, and galloping to places. She made a circle to starboard in 36 seconds, and without stopping made a second circle to port, thus completing the figure 8 in 37 seconds. The trial was deemed satisfactory, but the vibration at the stern was so great that the after-part of boats fitted with the Mallory propeller will require to be specially strengthened. This invention is applicable to any screw propeller, and the vibration could be greatly reduced, if not entirely done away with, by using a Cycloidal Screw fitted to the Mallory gearing.

Information has, says the Hampshire Telegraph, been received at the Admiralty that the ships which were despatched by Sir Beauchamp Seymour to look after some piratical craft alleged to be in the neighbourhood of Smyrna, have not succeeded in effecting a capture, but the Cygnet has been on their track, and has reason to believe that the rumour was correct, and that the vessels have taken shelter in the Mæander river.

The eleventh issue of the Royal Navy List has now been published, and continues to improve. The Admiralty have given their patronage to the Royal Navy List, by ordering a number of copies for issue to the libraries of ships. Considering that this List is the only personal record of naval services available to officers and men, their Lordships' action will be much appreciated. All officers are earnestly requested to send their services, or any alterations, additions, or corrections thereto, and any matter coming within the scope of the work, to the Editors, Royal Navy List, 325A High Holborn, W.C.

The ironclad corvette to be launched at Kiel on the 28th inst., is the fourth of a new type peculiar to the German navy. Her sister-vessels have been named respectively Baiern, Sachsen, and Wurtemburg, and the new ship is to be christened Baden.

At the quarterly meeting of the Directors of the Naval Medical Supplemental Fund, on the 14th inst., W. H. J. Domville, C.B., M.D., inspector-general, in the chair, the sum of £65 was distributed among the several applicants.

THE ATALANTA INQUIRY.

On Wednesday the Committee of Inquiry sat for the third time at the Sessions House, Westminster. Vice-Admiral Sir W. H. Stewart, C.B., Controller of the Navy, said he had nothing to do with the selection of the Juno. He had no reason to doubt she was perfectly sound, stable, and seaworthy after the report from the dockyard. It was decided she should have the same equipment as to masts, spars, and rigging, as all the ships of her class had always had. He had no reason to doubt the suitability of the rigging, though, after the loss of the Eurydice, it was a question of substituting rope backstays for wire, and of shortening the masts. That was suggested for the purpose of facilitating the handling of the courses by the young seamen, the masts being a little long. He had had considerable experience during a four years' commission in a similar Symondite ship, and they all thought it would have been better to have smaller courses, as the lower masts were long, and it required careful watching to handle the courses, with the watch only, at night. He had no idea, however, that change was required on account of any deficiency of stability. He had experience in six Symondite ships—three steamers and three sailers. They were very quick and lively in their movements, very handy, and rolled quickly, and very fine ships in bad weather with plenty of wind; but they were like yachts—you were able to get a good deal more out of them than out of the older class of vessels, but in working they required careful handling and watching. The selection of the ship rested with the Admiralty. The order for examination came in the usual way, under the signature of the First Lord, the late Mr. Ward Hunt. If he had thought she was an improper ship to be selected, it would have been his duty to have said so. No question as to the choice of the ships was put before him. No other sailing-ship was available. The Juno was the only one left after the Eurydice was taken. The order was to examine the ship with reference to her fitness. He saw her at various times while she was being refitted at Pembroke. She had been laid up in ordinary for 16 years, and she had been used as a police-ship, on account of her tightness and dryness. When the repairs were completed, she would be as good as a new ship. He submitted in detail the dockyard report of the repairs required to make her a sound ship for fourteen or fifteen years to come. The Eurydice was of a different design; but the reports received from the captain from time to time were most favourable. She was considered, up to the time of her sad loss, a great success as a training-ship for young seamen; and that was the general opinion in the Service. Asked whether anything smaller than a 26-gun frigate would have been more suitable for a training-ship, he said he did not think brigs or corvettes were more suitable, and the objection to a larger vessel was that, without steam power, it would have been beyond the strength of a young crew. In reference to the classification of ships in the Navy List, in which sailing-ships in harbour were divided into two classes, he did not know on what principle the division was made, or whether there was any justification for the inference said to have been deduced that certain ships were not intended to be at any time refitted for service at sea; but it was quite possible that a ship might be doing harbour service, as the Juno was, and yet be considered as a hull fit for sea service, and an appropriated ship was more likely to be a sound ship. The Juno, like the Eurydice, was tight in the bottom, and was probably selected as a police-ship because there was no chance of bilge water getting into her. He did not think £11,589 a serious sum to spend on a ship which originally cost £26,000. She was sent to Pembroke because the cost of repair had not been provided for by estimate, and at Pembroke men could be taken off the building of two brigs, and could devote their whole attention to this ship. At Pembroke she was thoroughly opened out before being repaired. If she had not then been repaired, she would probably have been broken up. It was thought it would be an improvement to fit her with bilge keels, which in former days were unknown. It was the opinion of constructive officers that bilge keels prevented rolling. The form was not a good one to develop a bilge keel upon, you were obliged to put it so low down. The bottom of the ship was perfectly sound, and the leaking on the voyage in the West Indies was supposed to have been through the upper works and through the bolt-holes of the bilge-keels. He should not have thought it unusual in Symondites that the decks strained and lifted and the pumps were broken. He remembered that they were obliged, owing to the working of the ships, to keep the wedges of the masts down on the main decks. It used to be the practice on these frigates to wedge the masts on the upper deck too. He had known these ships to lurch 40 to leeward and roll 20 or 22 to windward. Everything done in the Atalanta which tended to increase her stability would also tend to increase the liveliness of her motion. He had talked to the captain between her cruises, and he said she was particularly dry when lying-to, and that there was less liveliness than might have been expected in a "Symondite." Reminded that the Atalanta made 12 to 13 oscillations in a minute, and that would take a man on the topgallant yard through the air at the rate of 17 miles an hour, irrespective of the wind being against him, and he would make an arc of 127 ft., he said he had seen the same conditions in other ships, but he did not know that a man would be required to go on to a topgallant yard under such conditions. Arrangements would be made not to send a man there at such a time, and if it were necessary the man would not be an ordinary seaman. Of course such a condition would be trying to a man's energy, which would be largely employed in taking care of himself. He would have to look out and to hold on; but a good many seamen would do whatever was required. If a ship was running with the wind on her quarter and the sea on her beam, it would be desirable, if it were possible, to lay the ship in a quieter position before sending a man aloft. "Symondites" would lay-to very well, and going before the wind they were very steady. On returning from the West Indies, he did not understand that the Atalanta had strained at all; it was more a matter of caulking. He could say offhand that there were no other frigates available for training-ships. The Calliope had been turned into a factory, and the Alarm into a coal-vessel, and the Cruiser was a training-ship for the Mediterranean only. When the guns were removed from the Juno, the openings in the sides were built up. No doubt, if she had shipped a quantity of water in heavy weather, it would have gone through the ports, if arrangements had been made to open them. If it had occurred to any one that freeing scuttles might have been provided, it should have been done; but the suggestion was never made by any one, and he much regretted it. The Eurydice had not freeing scuttles, nor did he know that any sailing ships of the same size had them; but still they would be fitted now in any sailing ship. He never heard it reported that the Atalanta shipped water on the upper deck. As he had said, a lurch of 30 and a roll of 20 were not unusual. He could recollect them occurring to the Caryfort, a sister ship, in the Sea of Marmora. He had frequently seen her lee nettings in the water. He should not expect this in ships of the present day. He begged Capt. Stirling to make any suggestion he could for the improvement of the ship. In his last interview with Capt. Stirling, whom he admired as an officer and respected as a friend, Capt. Stirling had said that the whole care of the Admiralty and of Portsmouth had been directed to do everything they could for the Atalanta, and he was very grateful for it. Capt. Stirling reported that the bilge keels were out of water when the ship rolled, showing that they ought to have been put on lower. The department would now recommend that they should be put on any ship. Freeing scuttles used to be fitted in the old 10-gun brigs, and they were now adopted in the ironclads; but they were not liked, because they interfered with washing decks by letting the water off quickly. He was an advocate for them personally. There were gangways and Bollard ports in the Atalanta which would let off water. No freeing scuttle would relieve the deck of a ship of a large body of water. Freeing scuttles would be about 4ft. long and 1ft. deep.

Mr. N. Barnaby, C.B., Director of Naval Construction, said that, the Juno having been indicated for this service, she was examined by him and the officers under him. He was of opinion that she was a perfectly sound, stable, and seaworthy ship. He was responsible for the rigging and equipment, as to which they had records of her previous commissions; but they rearranged her weights by omitting part of the armament and increasing the quantity of water. That was the main change, and the ballast was slightly increased at the desire of the captain. The stability of a ship was the force with which she tends to right herself if inclined, or with which she resists inclination. That stability may be increased or diminished by variations in the form below and at the water-line, or it may be modified by weights; but the amount is measured by the distance of the metacentre from the centre of gravity and by the weight of the ship. In former commissions the Juno had 30 tons of ballast, which was carried by other ships of about the same size. He compared her with the Calliope, designed by Sir Robert Sepping, whose displacement was 968 tons, while that of the Juno was 1,055 tons, the Calliope being 5½ ft. narrower and of the same length. The Calliope was reported to be very crank when she had 55 tons of ballast, and it was increased to 94, with 80 tons of water, excluding tanks. The Atalanta had 109 tons of water, or 131 tons with the tanks. Increasing the ballast in the Atalanta would carry over a few degrees the angle of maximum stability and the angle of vanishing stability. If he were designing a 900-ton sailing-ship he should be inclined to obtain stability by ballast, and to go back to the wholesome rule which obtained at the beginning of the century, when a vessel of such a size—and they had built very good ships at the time—would have had from 90 to as much as 100 tons of ballast. In putting bilge keels on the Atalanta they expected to prevent great angles of rolling, and he had been much disappointed at the result, for she had rolled them out of water, and now they would be put lower down. When a ship was struck by a squall she often heeled twice as much as she would with the same force of wind in the form of a steady gale. Increasing the stability of a ship made it roll more quickly and more deeply, and diminished stability meant more steadiness. Increased stability meant increased tendency to roll. The same vessel, if you changed her so as to increase her stability, would roll both more quickly and more deeply in bad weather. Stability meant the tendency of a vessel to right herself to resist heeling over. A vessel that was very stable in smooth water would heel over less than one that was less stable. A vessel in smooth water having great stability would incline less with a given area of sail and pressure of wind than one having less stability; and a vessel having greater stability would in smooth water incline less than a vessel having less stability, with the same area of canvas and the same pressure of wind. In rough water the effort with which a vessel endeavoured to accommodate herself to the changing surface was great in proportion as her stability was great. In a heavy sea a vessel which was exceptionally stable would roll quickly and deeply, owing to the great effort she made to accommodate herself to the water. There would be great danger in an over-stable vessel taking water on her deck, and, therefore, there would be the greater necessity for freeing ports. The alterations that were made in the Atalanta tended to put her centre of gravity lower down, and to make a greater difference between the metacentre and the centre of gravity. This would give a little more stability. It was thirty-five years since he set foot on the Juno. He depended upon the reports of officers. They did not know accurately the metacentre; she was never inclined to ascertain it; her stability was known by estimation from her similarity to other ships. As to the ballast, it was intended to make the Atalanta what she had been before. The idea was rather to risk her being uneasy and carrying away her spars than to risk her being capsized. The load-draught had been the same in her last three commissions. In her last commission but one her stability was considerable, and, if it erred at all, it erred on the side of excess. When, therefore, on that occasion, Capt. Stirling asked for more ballast, he was told that the department would much prefer his trying her as she was. He did so, and, having again asked for more ballast, he was conceded ten tons. Being examined as to some returns of the weights in the ship at different commissions, water and provisions figuring for 218 tons in 1845, and for 31 only in October, 1879, he said they were erroneous. He assented, however, to her total weight being 592 tons in 1845, and 421 tons in 1879, which made a difference of three-quarters of an inch in her draught. He saw no reason now, notwithstanding what had happened, why she should not have been recommended for repairs. He thought she was still worth the large outlay. Her uneasiness as a seagoing ship was a quality she had in common with a large number of vessels that had received the highest commendation from the best sailors. He had heard how she had rolled with bilge keels, and he doubted whether she would roll more without them. In the Atalanta they were not efficient; they were too near the water, and he was responsible for that. He had no reason to believe she had not sufficient means of freeing the deck of water, but he should be glad now to have known that she had freeing scuttles as well. Her metacentric height was 6 ft. 2 in., but he would rather decline to answer offhand what he thought the proper height for such a vessel should be, as many considerations were involved. The weight of the armament in her early commissions was not wholly put into her hold as a training ship, but the change would make her a stiffer ship and less easy. He understood the masts were shortened to make the lower canvas more manageable by the young crew. Her power of carrying canvas was not excessive for her size. It was said that she had lurched over 40 deg. under close-reefed topsails and courses; but it was very difficult to measure the angle of a lurch, the pendulum being a wholly untrustworthy instrument, and apt to record far beyond the truth. This was when she had her bilge keels. He saw by the relative draughts of water given that the weights stated to have been on board in 1845 could not have been 500 tons, but 411 tons. She must have had lightning conductors. He had heard of ships under bare poles going on their beam ends, and remaining so for hours till the masts were cut away. If not battened down they would then sink. He should expect the Atalanta would often lurch beyond her angle of maximum stability. He could not conceive her having been lost as a consequence either of having too little or too much stability.

Mr. W. B. Robinson, Chief Constructor at Portsmouth Dockyard, was not in any way responsible for the selection. He believed her to be a sound, stable, and seaworthy ship. She was at the time used by the water police as a hulk. He did not understand that to involve that she was a condemned ship. The extent of the decay was not more than was to have been expected from the length of time she had been lying by. It was a comparatively slight examination to see whether the timbers were rotten, and the conclusion was that she might be repaired so as to be fit for a training-ship. He understood that the distinction of appropriated and unappropriated harbour vessels in the Navy List did not imply any difference between the two classes as to their seaworthiness. The preliminary examination consisted of boring holes with augers. Some of the timbers were found to be rotten and some defective. The custom was to bore a hole about every 4 ft., but not to remove planks. He had not to decide whether she should be repaired, the final examination being reserved for Pembroke. The vessel was fit for further examination with a view to being adapted, like the Eurydice, for a training-ship. He attributed the decay found in the Juno to the vicissitudes of climate as much as anything, and the non-circulation of air in the ship.

Mr. James Elliott, Constructor, Devonport, said a few of the timbers were defective; the upper deck was much worn; a piece of keelson was rotten. He signed the report that she was sound enough to be repaired on the plan of the Eurydice. It was not desirable to take out planks, as she was going to Pembroke. Borings often deceived, as they did in this case; but he did not think the defects would have prevented her being sent to Pembroke for further examination.

Mr. C. Ballard, leading man of shipwrights, superintended the boring at Portsmouth, which occupied six men seventeen days. They made several thousand borings. With the exception of the bread-room, she was supposed to be sound. The stern-post, which was rotten, came in the bread-room. It was a full five-eighth auger that was used. The borings were made at the head, heel, and middle of each timber, to the depth of about two-thirds of the timber. The timbers of the keelson were 4 in. hard on the surface, then came 4 in. or 5 in. of bad wood, and then it was hard again.

Mr. Barnaby, recalled, said he did not know whether the masts of the Atalanta were wedged on the upper deck; he should have preferred that they were not. The strain on the deck would be lessened by wire rigging, the rigidity of which would throw the strain on the sides of the ship.

Capt. Parkin, of Pembroke Dockyard, was of opinion that the Atalanta, when she left there, was perfectly sound and stable, and that the rigging and equipment were satisfactory. He was sorry the ship had not freeing scuttles, but he did not anticipate that she was lost for want of them. Under all the circumstances, he thought the ship's company sufficient to meet its requirements. He approved of wire rigging for the lower masts.

The inquiry was adjourned for a week.

The Clothworkers' Company have subscribed £105 to the fund now being raised at the Mansion House for the relief of the sufferers by the loss of her Majesty's ship Atalanta; and Mr. Willing, the proprietor of the Alexandra Palace, has sent the Lord Mayor a cheque for the same amount, as the proceeds of a recent fête there.

ON ELECTRIC AND BROADSIDE FIRING FROM SHIPS-OF-WAR.

The principle upon which electric firing is based may, I think, be fairly thus described. An instrument called a director is used for taking aim, with the axis of which the guns are laid parallel or in concentration, and from the position of which, its freedom from obstruction to view all round, its accurately graduated arcs, and telescopic power, not only can a far better aim be taken than by the sight of the guns, but also all necessary allowances required for the strength of the wind, the speed of the ship, or that of the enemy, or for changes of inclination caused by the action of the helm, or otherwise, can be more correctly applied. The director is to be manipulated by the most skilful artillerist in the ship, who will have absolute control over the fire of every gun included in the system, thus ensuring that none will be fired inopportunely or when they do not bear. The view of the officer charged with the direction will not be interfered with by the ill-timed smoke from independent guns. Absolute simultaneity of discharge of all the guns is secured whenever required. And it is considered at least as free, if not more so, from liability to misfire, as the ordinary firing by hand. These are, it is believed, the principal, though perhaps not all the advantages claimed for it. The director is an instrument, if not somewhat complicated, at any rate requiring various adjustments for all changes in the distance and bearing of the object, which must, of course, be perpetual in an engagement on the open sea, as well as for the speed and rolling motion of the ship. It is admitted that to make these adjustments with rapidity and accuracy requires a special, high training, above what the average gunnery officer can be expected to have. It has been suggested that he should be accustomed to compare the amount and period of the roll of his ship with the time that vessels are passing his sights under different circumstances; the effect of the helm in giving the ship a heel, in order to judge when it may be necessary to supplement the natural roll by artificial means, such as doubling the men across the deck; and that he should be enabled to obtain the actual measured distance of the object the moment before firing. The process is on this wise. The captain having determined that the broadside shall be delivered on a certain bearing, say the bow, beam, or quarter, the guns are trained accordingly. The officer at the director adjusts his instrument for the speed of the ship, the bearing on which the guns are ordered to be laid, for the distance at which it is proposed to open fire, and finally, for the requisite elevation. He then orders this elevation to be given to the guns, which being done, these become fixtures on the deck. The object is then brought on with the sights of the director, by the action of the helm and the roll of the ship, and the directing-officer fires when this is accomplished. Now, if a captain is at liberty to steer his ship with this sole object, or at the pleasure of the artillerist, there may be no objection so far; but as this is obviously impossible in a squadron, it does not seem so satisfactory. Ships are not, and cannot be, at liberty to use their helms as they please for this purpose. It is evident that if one uses her helm one way and another in another, there is at once an end to all order or station-keeping, to all idea of ramming or other tactics, and a scene of confusion must ensue more dangerous to friend than foe. The helm then, cannot be depended upon in the slightest degree. Nor will the roll be found much more at command. It is true that in all firing at sea, when there is rolling motion, the roll must be watched for the proper moment to deliver the fire; but the chances appear infinitesimal that the exact period in the roll should coincide with the second at which the sight of the director covers an object passing, say at 16 to 20 knots (i.e., if ships are going 8 to 10 in opposite directions). A difficulty of the same sort, of course, attaches to the independent fire of each gun, but with this great difference in degree, that each will have more time during which it can fire effectively, and as all cannot be supposed to bear at the same instant, so neither will they be all simultaneously baulked. I say, each gun will have more time, because if a ship 300 feet long passes quite close at 16 knots, each will have 10 seconds of time; and more, of course, in proportion to any greater distance or slower speed at which the ships may pass; whilst under the electric system they must all fire at the single instant when the director bears. It is true that if this covers the centre or mainmast all might hit, but if it bears upon either extreme, all guns placed on one side of it, either right or left, according to circumstances, necessarily miss. Moreover, in passing across the bow or stern of a ship 60 ft. wide, all guns parallel with it, placed 30 ft. or more on either side, will miss if the director covers the stem or stern post; and if the guns are concentrated for the favourite range of 800 yards, those which are placed at the above named distance will hardly touch a ship end on within 400 yards. But the system depends not only upon the accuracy of the director, and its skilful manipulation, but very much on the uniform or nearly uniform condition of those circumstances for which, as we have seen, allowances and adjustments have to be made, viz., the speed of the ship, the heel, and any change of course. So much is this the case, that the writer has known it to be required that other guns must not fire, not only because of the smoke, but also because of the disturbing effect on the heel of the ship caused by the working of such guns. Any sudden or considerable use of the helm is for the same reason deprecated. Much importance is attached to the idea that the view of the directing officer will not be interfered with by the smoke of independent guns. Thus all bow fire is silenced, and even at this cost the advantage seems only possible for the first round, and probably not even for this should the enemy open fire first. No doubt your own smoke is more obstructive than that of the enemy, but the latter is by no means unimportant. Every action must be expected to be a scene of smoke and some confusion, amidst which every clearance and every opportunity should be availed of to the utmost by every gun, which cannot be done under the broad-side system; if the other guns are not silenced, their utility, instead of being due to the system, is exactly proportionate to your departure from it. But supposing that a broadside can be more accurately aimed by means of the director than by the sights of the guns, it remains to be proven that these will be, or are likely to be, in action laid in equally exact correspondence with the director. It is submitted, with some confidence, that whatever precision in this respect may be attained by highly-trained crews in the calmness of target practice will not be realised even by the same men in the storm of battle, however carefully the bearings may be marked upon the deck. When it was contended at the United Service Institution that no gun does its utmost duty unless it strikes every blow it can, which is impossible if, when it bears and is ready, it must wait for others, the reply was that there was no waiting under the electric system,—that whenever the object was on, the officer fired. It mattered nothing whether the gun was ready or not. If not it did not go off, and that was all. But what the utility would be of such firing was not explained. If some were ready and went off, that would not be broad-side firing. It is contended, however, that the system is one of almost universal waiting. The guns, being laid as directed, become fixtures, and no officer or man, excepting the directing officer and his assistant, has anything else to do than wait, les bras croisés, until called upon to reload. Nay, it has been suggested that they may be removed from the guns under cover, or even to roll the ship. Thus the whole issue is left absolutely in the hands of one individual, who claims command of the helm, as well as the guns, and may most probably never have been in action before. The qualifications considered necessary or desirable for this officer have been shown, and if such can be supplied to all our ships in peace-time, will they be forthcoming on a war establishment? If it be said this is no objection to the method, whenever it can be worked,—that when it is neither possible nor desirable, you have only to fall back upon the usual method, and are no worse off than before, it must be remarked that in proportion to the extent to which you have accustomed officers and men to this mechanical method, under which they have only to place the guns in a given fixed position (which it is a wonder somebody has not invented a plan for doing by machinery, and so dispensing with a crew altogether, except for loading), just in this proportion will you unfit them for recurring to the personal-manual system; and if you commence action under the new, you will never get the same practice or steadiness when you return to the old method, as if they had been taught always to rely upon themselves. Again, it is required that there should be order, and even total silence to enable the requisite orders to be given to the batteries. The officers of these are not in view of the directing officer, and the voice even through a tube will often be drowned. Then the guns are paralysed. In ordinary practice by electricity, the guns are relaid after firing, as before, unless other orders are given; but as it is utterly impossible for any mortal to foresee upon what bearing they will next be required, except at target practice, it is not easy to see what order can be given with any advantage; and in any case, the chances seem to be enormous against any bearing at all being the right one for all the guns, if more than one enemy be present, and then what calamitous delay is inevitable before the training can be changed! It is admitted that relaying cannot be as quickly effected as in independent firing. On Feb. 21, 1879, the attention of the United Service Institution was called, in a paper read there, to the fact that in electric firing nobody can be sure whether individual guns have fired or not. The directing officer goes on pressing his key, and thinking he is firing whenever his object is covered by his instrument. If none go off, he must be aware of it; but if one or more do, he is ignorant of any failure. On the other hand, no captain of a gun or battery officer can know if a gun has missed fire, because he does not know that the attempt has been made. By a somewhat curious coincidence, within an hour or two after this was read, the First Lord of the Admiralty made an announcement in the House to the effect that even worse than this was the case when the Thunderer's accident occurred, for those in the turret were ignorant whether the gun had gone off or not. It is not improbable we may hear of more accidents from guns being fired without warning to the crews, who may be caught incautiously unobservant of the strictest precautions. No reflection will here be cast on the trustworthiness of electric-firing in respect of missing fire, for the most experienced officers seem to have unbounded confidence on this point, but notice cannot be avoided of the frequency with which we hear of failures experienced abroad being attributed to the ignorance or want of training of those who have the manipulation of the instrument or invention, whatever it may be,—a galvanic battery, a torpedo, a rocket, or a Nordenfelt hydraulic apparatus, or anything else. Now, instead of this being a defence, it would seem to be a most valid and important objection. Anything that requires a more than average amount of proficiency to handle successfully must not be relied upon in war, and if such an average is not attained in peace-time, how can it be expected from those far less trained officers and men of whom our crews will be largely composed in war-time? Let us remember the consequences of a broadside missing its mark. No gun remains ready for any other enemy, however favourable a chance he may offer, until all are reloaded, and relaid, ten chances to one, in a wrong direction, which therefore requires changing; any modification of this picture is pro tanto a departure from its essential principle, and we have seen that alteration of training is slower than in independent firing. Hitherto, we have treated the subject in view of engagements between more than one ship on either side, but even in the comparatively rare event of single combat, all the objections apply equally in principle, though some of them in less degree. These duels were exceptional in the past, and will be more so in future. It may surprise some to find, as they will from "James's History," that in the fifteen years of war with France, from 1793 to 1807 inclusive, there were not more than 50 such actions; whilst there were 246 line-of-battle ships engaged, or belonging to the English fleets or squadrons, wholly or partially engaged, without counting frigate squadrons. Single combats almost invariably arose out of the necessity of defending merchant ships, which roamed under sail over the whole wide ocean; whereas, now valuable trade will either protect itself by its speed, or be confined to certain nearly direct routes, much more easily protected by a patrolling force. Maritime war will very certainly be shorter—indeed, very short—and this duty will not fall within the province of the ironclad. We have been considering the subject so far on the supposition that firing by broadsides, if successful in hitting, will be found more efficacious than independent firing. But on what ground can this be maintained? Where is the proof either in history or experiment? Actions have often been decided by a single shot or shell, many by a series of independent ones; but when by a broadside? At Lissa one shell set fire to the Palestro, and she blew up. One shell in the Huascar's turret, it is understood, caused her surrender to the Chilians. A single one has often blown up a magazine, as at Acre, Odessa, Fort Constantine, &c. There are many instances in the American Civil War, vide Boynton's "History." The Merrimac set fire to the Minnesota with one, and blew up the Dragon, tug, with another. The Atlanta was settled by one shot from the Weehawken, and no one doubts that one may be sufficient to disable a rudder, a gun, a boiler, an admiral or captain, or even a turret or a screw. If it be replied that each shot of a broadside has the same chance as if fired independently, this cannot be admitted, because if the fire be concentrated, it should logically hit near one spot; and if one shot would suffice, the rest are wasted; and if not concentrated, they should still strike only as far apart as the guns are which fired them. But even if they have the same chance, an equal number cannot be expected to be fired, nor can any gun avail itself of its own best opportunities. Much light might be thrown on the subject, if two ships went through a course of rehearsals of sham-fights with blank-cartridge, either with liberty to manœuvre at discretion, or ordered to carry out each a prescribed programme. Let umpires watch the fire of each gun, and decide whether it should have been a hit or not, by an average or good gunner giving marks on some scale, such as three for a good chance, two for a fair one, and one for a slight or possible one. Such a practice might be extended gradually to groups or squadrons of small vessels, and would lead to most valuable results and conclusions on many other questions besides that of comparative chances of hitting,—such as obstruction by smoke, and even the transcendent one of the ram or broadside tactics. Now, it is understood to be admitted that electric firing is not advisable in turret-ships. That central-battery ships, such as the Alexandra or Téméraire, could place few guns under it without sacrificing much of the use of their heavy and important end-on fire. That it is hardly consistent at all with ramming tactics. It has been shown, it is believed, that its application must at best be very limited in engagement with more than one enemy. That single combats are likely to be the rare exception, and not the rule, and will generally be confined to the armour-belted or unarmoured cruisers. If these premises are accepted, the issue becomes narrowed to small dimensions; and even within these limits the advantages claimed must be balanced by considerable counterweight, as follows:—If the aim of an electric broadside be generally more true, a miss is also more serious. If the hit be made, it is not at all certain that the effect will be greater than that of a round fired independently. If the effect be greater, the opportunities of firing each gun will be fewer. If the effect of a single shot is often decisive, in such case the remainder are a dead loss of power. If there will be any damaging effect upon crews accustomed to the system, when required to fall back upon firing by hand. If it will be impossible to supply ships in war with highly-trained directing officers. Then, considering the magnitude of the stake, it seems unjustifiable to rely upon a method of such delicacy and refinement, attended at best with such uncertain and questionable advantages. If a captain is at liberty to reject it at his discretion, it must be observed that, as a rule, officers are prone to take for granted that a system inculcated by our most valuable and unsurpassed school of gunnery must be the best, and would hesitate on their own judgment to reject it, having in view the certain condemnation they would incur in case of failure, where others might be of opinion that it could have been advantageously adopted. The writer has no means of ascertaining how far the foregoing views may be shared by the profession, but he knows that many officers in whose judgment he has the greatest confidence agree to no inconsiderable extent. Officers on full pay cannot give their opinions unless called for. Those on half-pay are deterred, not only by modesty, but, perhaps, also by an impression that it would be considered officious, and might be injurious to their interests. My boldness is the result of a deep conviction that the experience of the Service at large is far from being generally in favour of electric firing, and of a feeling that whilst the errors of the foregoing views will be easily exposed, it is of the greatest importance that a confidence now wanting should be inspired by their refutation.

George G. Randolph, Vice-Admiral.

In accordance with the decision of the Admiralty to employ convicts in the Royal dockyards, the Defiance has been brought down the harbour, and placed alongside the dockyard to be prepared for the reception of those convicts who will be employed at Devonport. The Defiance is a sailing line-of-battle ship, and has never been to sea, having been built about the time of the adoption of steam in the Navy.

Rowland's Kalydor cools and refreshes the face and hands of all exposed to the hot sun and dust, and eradicates all Freckles, Tan, Sunburns, Stings of Insects, and Cutaneous Eruptions; gentlemen will find it allays the smarting and irritation of the skin after shaving. Rowland's Macassar Oil prevents the hair falling off during hot weather. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. Ask for Rowland's articles.

Epps's Chocolate Essence.—Product of a special refining process. It is chocolate devoided of its over-richness and substantiality. Sugarless and, when made, of the consistency of coffee. An afternoon chocolate. Sold only in packets, 6d and 1s, labelled, "James Epps and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, 48 Threadneedle Street, and 170 Piccadilly, London."

INDIA.

The Government of India has ordered the withdrawal of the extra company which is attached to regiments serving in Southern Afghanistan, so soon as it is possible for the regiments to be completed with recruits.

It is officially notified that "the Viceroy and Governor-General has been pleased to make the following appointments on his Excellency's personal staff, from June 9, 1880: —To be Military Secretary—Major G. S. White, 92nd Foot. To be Aides-de-Camp—Capt. Lord W. L. de la P. Beresford, V.C., 9th Lancers; Lieut. C. W. Muir, Bengal S.C., squadron-officer and adjutant Governor-General's Body-Guard; Lieut. E. L. S. Brett, 2nd Batn. Scots Guards; Capt. F. O. B. Foote, R.A., and Subadar-Major Nutha Sing, "Sirdar Bahadur," 23rd Punjab N.I. (Pioneers). To be Extra Aide-de-Camp—Capt. the Hon. W. C. W. Fitz-William, Royal Horse Guards. To be Honorary Aides-de-Camp—Lieut.-Col. A. J. Hadfield, Madras Invalid Establishment; Col. J. W. W. Osborne, C.B., Madras S.C., Resident, 3rd class, Central Indian Agency, and Political Agent, Gwalior; Col. B. Walton, C.I.E., Bengal S.C., superintendent and agent for army clothing, Bengal; Col. T. E. Gordon, C.S.I., Bengal S.C., D.A.G.; Col. C. J. Godby, Bengal S.C., commandant 4th Punjab Cavalry, Punjab Frontier Force; Lieut.-Col. G. F. Graham, Bengal C.C., commandant Calcutta R.V.C. and Administrative Battalion, Presidency Volunteers (ex officio); Col. H. N. D. Prendergast, V.C., C.B., R.E., commandant 'Queen's Own,' Madras Sappers and Miners; Col. C. M. Macgregor, C.B., C.S.I., C.I.E., Bengal S.C., 1st A.Q.M.G.; Col. J. E. Sordner, R.A.; Lieut.-Col. D. W. Campbell, commandant East-Indian Railway R.V.C.; and Ressaldar-Major Khanan Khan, 'Bahadur.'"

The loss of the Eurydice and the Atalanta has led the Admiralty to order the formation of a small squadron for the training of ordinary seamen, each vessel having steam power as an auxiliary force. The advantages of such a squadron are various. Evolutionary movements will be practicable, and dangers of many kinds will be avoided, at the same time that the number of seamen being simultaneously trained, will be almost indefinitely multiplied, and their training will in all respects be of a more complete character. In all probability the squadron will consist of three vessels. The Inconstant is mentioned as likely to be the flag-ship. The other vessels of the squadron are likely to be the Rover, iron screw-corvette, and the Carysfort, one of the new steel despatch-vessels built by Messrs. Elder, of Glasgow.

New Swimming Bath.—It will interest those who delight in the indulgence of this health-giving exercise, to know that a large swimming bath has been constructed at Ilfracombe. The surface is 138 feet long and 34 feet wide, with a depth varying from 3 to 9 feet. The sides are lined with white glazed bricks, and the bottom with tiles. It contains 178,000 gallons of sea-water, which can be changed at every tide. Convenient dressing-rooms, spring boards, diving tables, and every requisite for swimmers are provided, and 100 bathers can be accommodated at a time. Private hot and cold baths are included in the scheme, and a heating apparatus for the swimming baths will also be added. There is a promenade erected over the dressing-rooms, and the whole will be covered in with a roof of iron and glass. A movable floor will be provided, so that the building may be used as a grand concert-hall, capable of holding nearly 1,000 people. This large and convenient bath has been constructed by the Ilfracombe Hotel Company, on their own property, but is intended for the accommodation of the public, as well as visitors to the hotel.—Morning Post.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "Perfected" Oil. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

The death is recorded of Mr. E. A. Seagrove, Naval outfitter at Portsea, at his residence at Emsworth. Mr. Seagrove was much respected in the borough, and his death is regretted by a large circle of friends. The business will be continued by Mr. Seagrove's widow.

Obituary.

Major-Gen. T. Raikes, C.B., died on Saturday in the 59th year of his age. Born in 1822, he entered the Army in 1840, was promoted to a lieutenancy in 1845, and obtained a captaincy in 1854. He served with the 1st Madras Fusiliers in the Burmese war of 1852-53, including the relief of Pegu and subsequent operations in its vicinity, and commanded a detachment at the recapture of Beeling. He also served in the suppression of the Mutiny in Bengal in 1857-58, and was present with Gen. Havelock's column at the actions of Futtehpore, Aoung, Pandoo, and Cawnpore. He commanded a detachment under Gen. Neill for the defence of Cawnpore during Havelock's first entry into Oude, and was afterwards present at the actions of Bithoor, Mungarwar, and Alumbagh, the relief of Lucknow, and the defence of the Residency. He also took part in the occupation of Alumbagh under Gen. Outram, and also in the capture of Lucknow. He was engaged in the campaign in Oude in 1858, including the passage of the Goomtee at Sultanpore, and other minor affairs. He also commanded a field column of all arms from Oct. 7 to 22, 1858, and defeated the enemy at Shahpore. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath (Military Division) in 1869, and became Major-Gen. in 1877.

Capt. Alfred Markham, R.N., who died at Weymouth on the 7th inst., aged 41, entered the Navy in 1852, and served as mate in the Royal Albert, 14, flagship in the Channel Squadron, from June 25, 1859, until promoted to lieut., Nov. 26 of the same year. From Jan. 24, 1860, until paid off and transferred to the Forte, he served in the Emerald, 51, at Devonport and in the Channel. He served in the Forte, 39, flagship, from June 25, 1861, until paid off, Sept. 8, 1864, on the south-east coast of America, and from Sept. 22 of the year last named until promoted to commander, Feb. 18, 1867, served in the Achilles, 26, with the Channel Squadron. He obtained command of the Boscawen, 20, training-ship for boys at Portland, Feb. 19, 1873, which command he held until posted, Dec. 31, 1875.

Capt. Richard Browne, R.N., retired, died on the 13th inst., in his 84th year. He entered the Navy in March, 1810, and was employed in the North Sea and Baltic, and was present in the gale in which the St. George, Hero, and Defence were lost, and only escaped their fate by putting back to the anchorage under Huen Island, with a large convoy with which she had just cleared the Sound; and was often in action with the Danish gunboats. He afterwards escorted a convoy to the West Indies in the Cressy, and subsequently joined the Dragon, and served until the end of the war with the United States in 1815. He was present in the various attacks on the enemy in the Chesapeake, in the expedition up the Penobscot, which resulted in the capture of the towns of Hamden and Bangor, the destruction of the American corvette Adams, of 26 guns, and eight other vessels, and the capture of two ships, one brig, six schooners, including the Decatur (privateer), and three sloops; and at the capture of Cumberland Island, on the coast of Georgia. He attained the rank of master, Sept. 30, 1831, and subsequently served in the Calliope, in the operations against Canton and subsequent capture of that city in 1841. He became retired captain May 22, 1857, and was awarded a Naval pension Nov. 14, 1865.

Sub-Lieut. Egerton Beresford Cleeve, R.N., who died at St. Leonard's-on-Sea on the 3rd inst., aged 22, served as a Naval cadet in the Hercules, 14, Capt. W. M'Dowell, C.B., with the Channel Squadron, in 1871-72, and on Jan. 15, 1873, was transferred to the Immortalité, 28, Capt. Algernon McL. Lyons, with the Detached Squadron, and remained until appointed, Sept. 1, 1874, midshipman to the Audacious, 14, Capt. Philip H. Colomb, fitting for the flag, at China, of Vice-Admiral Alfred P. Ryder. He was promoted in the Audacious to the rank of sub-lieut., April 1, 1877, and remained until May, 1878, and subsequently studied at the Royal Naval College, at Greenwich. He was afterwards attached, from June until Aug. 1879, to the Hector, 18, Capt. C. H. Simpson, at Southampton.

Amusements.

With this week terminates the season of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden. Mdme. Sembrich has appeared as Queen Margherita in "Les Huguenots," again showing herself an effective bravura singer. On Monday "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" was advantageously substituted for the previously announced repetition of "Estella." Thursday was set apart for "Semiramide," when Mdme. Adelina Patti took her benefit. A varied programme, comprising selections from "Mignon" and "Norma," was associated on Friday with the benefit of Mdme. Albani; and "La Traviata," with Mdme. Patti, Signor Nicolini, and Signor Graziani included in the cast, closed on Saturday night the operatic campaign.

At Her Majesty's, the opera of "Mefistofele" has been repeated with increased success, and the bold originality of the composer, Signor Boito, has won the general admiration of the public. The success of this remarkable production will lead to a prolongation of the season.

With this week the season of French plays at the Gaiety Theatre is brought to a termination, and on Monday next Mr. John T. Raymond, the American comedian, makes his first appearance in England, as Colonel Mulberry Sellers, in Mark Twain's dramatic sketch of "The Gilded Age," which has had a long run on the Transatlantic boards. The piece is founded on the novel written by Messrs. Clemens and Warner, and an adaptation has already been acted in this country under the title of "Millions in It."

Drury Lane will be reopened at the end of the present month, with a new sensational drama in four acts, called, "The World," written and constructed by Messrs. Paul Meritt, Henry Pettitt, and Augustus Harris.

Early in August, Mr. John S. Clarke will take possession of the Haymarket, and produce Mr. Boucicault's comedy of "Matrimony," brought out in America a few years since.

The Court Theatre closed its season this week, but Madame Modjeska will reappear in October, when her assumptions will include a series of those impersonations previously identified with her success in the United States.

A benefit for Mr. Maddison Morton, the well-known farce writer, who is now past his seventieth year, is arranged to take place at the Gaiety Theatre on Wednesday afternoon next. Mrs. Keeley emerges from her retirement to play her original part in the farce of "Betsy Baker;" the musical triumviretta of "Box and Cox" will have the advantage of Mr. Arthur Sullivan conducting his own music, with Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Corney Grain, and George Grossmith as the representatives of the three characters, and in "Woodcock's Little Game" the characters will be sustained by members of the Dramatic Authors' Society.

The Lyceum season will terminate on Saturday evening, July 31, when Mr. Henry Irving takes his annual benefit. "Charles I." will be revived for the occasion; Mr. Sims Reeves and his son will sing two popular songs; Mrs. Bancroft will recite "Major Namby;" Mr. Toole will give his famous monologue of "Frying a Magistrate;" and Miss Ellen Terry and Mr. Irving will declaim the poems of "The Captive" and "The Dream of Eugène Aram."

Sadler's Wells is now occupied for a short term by Mr. and Mrs. George Knight, who have transferred to the Metropolis their American eccentricity of "Otto: a German," already popular in the provinces. The piece, illustrative of the trials of a German emigrant in the United States, has been cordially received, but the actors are under the disadvantage of following many others who have made the portraiture of Anglo-Dutch character their special study.

The attractions of the Royal Westminster Aquarium have been greatly increased by the engagement of Mr. J. H. Crowther, the remarkable roller-skater, who astonishes the spectators by his singular feats, displaying equal grace and daring. This is the expert evolutionist who created such a sensation at the Brighton Aquarium, where he was engaged for seven consecutive weeks.

The deeply-regretted death of Mr. Tom Taylor has deprived the stage of the most accomplished dramatist of the day. His decease, which took place on Monday last at his residence, Lavender Sweep, Wandsworth, was somewhat unexpected. Mr. Tom Taylor, who was born at Sunderland in 1817, was the author of more than 100 successful productions, many attaining unexampled popularity. He was besides an art-critic of considerable powers, and since the death of Mr. Shirley Brooks, had filled the position of editor of Punch, to which periodical he had been for many years a valuable contributor.

EAU DE SUEZ.

There is no malady more general than toothache; it is common to young and old, rich and poor, and is more or less dreaded by all. From the cradle to the grave, the teeth are a source of trouble; therefore, a cure for this evil, not only immediate, but permanent, must be welcome and interesting to the whole human race. M. Suez is the fortunate discoverer of a remedy which although so perfectly innocuous that it may be taken internally, has been proved infallible in all cases of toothache and decay, and so valuable that it has been with justice termed "Vaccine for the Mouth," thus placing it on a par with Jenner's immortal discovery. He calls his invention "Eau de Suez," and first tested its powers in France, where in a few years it has attained an enormous sale and immense popularity. Thousands attest its efficacy, and the Parisian Press has had much to say about it. Articles from the Paris Figaro and other newspapers have been translated and inserted in the English prospectus. M. Suez is convinced that there will be no more toothache, extraction, or false teeth needed, if people will but follow his instructions and use his preparations. There are three kinds of the Eau de Suez, distinguished from each other by a green, yellow, and red-silk thread attached to the bottles. The green thread must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouthwash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath will never suffer again, and will preserve their teeth sound and white till the end, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning. The yellow thread instantly stops toothache, however violent it may be. The red thread is for children's use, and those happy exceptions whose teeth are quite sound. Besides daily using the green thread, M. Suez recommends his orange tooth-paste for the removal of tartar and whitening the teeth; and also a particularly good kind of tooth-brush, made from the finest badger hair, instead of the ordinary hard ones, which he terms "criminal instruments," for by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will become spongy and weakened, and the roots of the teeth get exposed, thus imparting an offensive smell to the breath. That the English public may benefit by his great discovery, M. Suez has established a dépôt for its sale at the well-known foreign chemists, Messrs. Wilcox and Co., 336 Oxford Street, London, where his preparations may be obtained, as well as prospectus with fuller particulars. The following is a list of his articles, with prices attached:—Green Thread, 4s; Yellow Thread, 2s 9d; Red Thread, 3s; Orange Paste, 4s 6d; Tooth-brush, 1s 6d. People residing in the country may also obtain through their own chemist; and M. Suez has made arrangements that will enable Messrs. Wilcox, for the present, to forward these preparations, carriage free, to any part of the United Kingdom. So great is the popularity of M. Suez's preparations in France that several imitations have been made; see, therefore, that each brush bears the name "Suez" stamped on the handle, and each bottle the name of "Wilcox and Co." on the labels.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Though good health is preferable to high honour, how regardless people often are of the former—how covetous of the latter! Many suffer their strength to drain away ere maturity is reached, through ignorance of the facility afforded by these incomparable Pills of checking the first untoward symptoms of derangement, and reinstating order without interfering in the least with their pleasures or pursuits. To the young especially it is important to maintain the highest digestive efficiency, without which the growth is stunted, the muscles become lax, the frame feeble, and the mind slothful. The removal of indigestion by these Pills is so easy that none, save the most thoughtless, would permit it to sap the springs of life.

60 QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, LONDON, E.C.

The IMPERIAL BRAZILIAN NATAL AND NOVA CRUZ RAILWAY COMPANY, LIMITED, was incorporated on November 9, 1878, for constructing and working a Railway from the Harbour of Natal, in the Province of Rio Grande do Norte, to the City of Nova Cruz, in the same province, a distance of about 75 miles.

The Concession of the Railway is in perpetuity, but subject to a power reserved to the Imperial Government to purchase the Line after 30 years, at a price to be reckoned, in default of agreement, on the average net revenue of the last 5 years, but not less than the amount of the Guaranteed Capital, and to be payable in 6 per Cent. Imperial Brazilian Government Stock.

By Decrees of the Imperial and Provincial Governments, interest is guaranteed at 7 per cent. per annum for 30 years upon a capital of £618,300, with a provision that half the surplus profits above 8 per cent. per annum shall be paid to the Government until reimbursed its advances for interest under the guarantee.

12,500 Preferred Shares of £20 each ...	250,000
9,085 Deferred Shares of £20 each ...	181,700

The Preferred Shares for £250,000 have been issued, and the full amount subscribed and received.

The Deferred Shares, which are to be taken by the contractors in lieu of cash, receive no dividend until a Cumulative Dividend of 7 per cent. per annum has been paid on the Preferred Shares.

The Debentures for £368,300 in 3,683 Debentures of £100 each, bear interest at the rate of 5½ per cent. per annum, payable by Coupons half-yearly in London, on the 1st days of April and October in each year, with a sinking fund of 1½ per cent. per annum, for the redemption of the principal within 30 years out of the 7 per cent. interest guaranteed by the Imperial and Provincial Governments, and are secured as a first charge by Deed, dated the 14th day of July, 1880, by which the interest guaranteed by the Governments on £618,300 and all other revenues of the Railway are assigned to Messrs. Richard Biddulph Martin, of 68 Lombard Street, London, Banker, and Charles Richard Fenwick, of Abchurch Chambers, Abchurch Lane, London, Merchant, as Trustees for the Debenture-holders.

The sum required for interest and sinking fund on the whole issue of Debentures is £25,781 per annum, the amount guaranteed by the Brazilian Government being £43,281, leaving £17,500 for interest on the Preferred Shares.

The Line is under contract for completion by the 1st July, 1881, for the total sum of £800,000, which includes cost of concession, purchase of land, rolling stock, stations, &c., and a provisiou for the administration expenses during the construction.

The time limited by the Government Decree for the completion of the works does not expire until October 18, 1883.

Messrs. Sir Charles Fox and Sons, the Company's Engineers, whose Official Report is annexed, state that the works of the Railway are far advanced, and are being carried out with great activity, there being over 2,600 men employed; that nearly all the permanent-way materials and other ironwork, and a considerable portion of the rolling stock, have been delivered on the works, and that the remainder of the rolling stock is in course of manufacture. Their Report further states that at the present rate of progress the line will be completed by January next.

Messrs. Sir Charles Fox and Sons' Report to the Government on the course of the Line and its construction and cost contains full particulars of the district traversed and estimates of a very satisfactory traffic, the summary of their Report showing an estimated net traffic return equal to more than the amount guaranteed by the Government.

The sanction of the Government for the raising of the £368,300 in Debentures, being the balance of the Guaranteed Capital, of £618,300, of which the £250,000 Preferred Shares already subscribed and paid up in full is part, is certified by the following letter from his Excellency the Brazilian Minister to the Secretary of the Company :—

Brazilian Legation,
London, June 3, 1880.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 27 last, in which you inform me that the Imperial Brazilian Natal and Nova Cruz Railway Company, Limited, are about to issue £368,300 in Debentures, bearing 5½ per cent. per annum interest, and 1½ per cent. per annum sinking fund, making together the 7 per cent. guaranteed by the Imperial Brazilian Government, the proposed issue being the balance of the Guaranteed Capital, as authorised by the Imperial Decree, No. 7,048, of October 18, 1878.

In reply to your letter, I have to state that the Company is authorised to raise and call up at once the said sum of £368,300, being the balance of Guaranteed Capital, and that the guaranteed interest of 7 per cent. is payable thereon for 30 years, half-yearly, in London, reckoning from the date of the deposits with the Company's Bankers, and the Certificates thereof being lodged with the Delegate of the Imperial Treasury in London.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed,) PENEDO.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association and Special Resolutions of the Company, the Trust Deed, the Government Concession and Decrees, Transfer, Contracts, Reports, and other Documents, can be inspected at the Company's Offices.

ENGINEERS' REPORT.

July 1, 1880.

GENTLEMEN,

Since the date of our Report of March 15 last, every effort has been made by the Contractors to push forward the construction of this Railway, and we are glad to report that the works have been carried on to our satisfaction.

In order to avoid any delay in the setting-out of the works additional engineers were sent out to strengthen the staff, and, by the employment of a large number of men, the earthworks have, in spite of the rainy season, now about to terminate, been carried on very rapidly, and follow closely upon the engineering parties. The construction of the bridges and culverts, the erection of the fencing and telegraph, the laying of the permanent way, and the preparation of the various station buildings, machine shops, and water supply, show good progress.

Our Resident Engineer telegraphs us from Brazil, under yesterday's date, that the permanent way has been completed for a length of 27 miles (out of a total length of 75 miles), and that 2,600 men are employed upon the works. He confirms our opinion that, at the present rate of progress, the Railway will be ready for opening throughout by January next.

We have already reported the arrival in Brazil of the "Sarmiento," "Chiswick," "Nora," "Alice," and "Palo Alto," laden with materials for this railway. Since then the following vessels have been despatched, and their arrival has been duly advised, viz. :—the "Lucille," "Glenlogan," "James Miller," "Walter Plummer," "Granada," "Capri," "Larch," and "Edward Johnson;" the "Mary C. Commery" is on her voyage out, and the "Rialto" is under charter.

Almost the whole of the materials required to be imported have, therefore, now been received in Brazil.

A portion of the locomotives and rolling stock have also been delivered, and the remainder are in course of manufacture in this country.

We are, GENTLEMEN,
Yours faithfully,
CHARLES FOX AND SONS.

Have received large Shipments of well-matured

AUSTRALIAN WINES,

were awarded in Australia, and at Vienna and Paris.

These Wines are strongly recommended by several of the leading medical men, both in London and the Provinces. They are free from any added alcohol (which makes other wines so injurious to health), and are a sure cure for Gout and Rheumatism.

In the leading cities of Australia, and also in the country districts, the greater part of the Hospitals and other sanitary institutions use the Australian Wines, almost to the entire exclusion of Port, Sherry, and other foreign wines.

In introducing these Wines, MESSRS. WILKINSON and Co. have placed the prices as low as possible, so as to be within the means of all classes.

Prices range from 16s to 60s per dozen, delivered free of carriage at any railway station in Great Britain. Vide Circulars, posted free on application. Samples sent free.

—CANDIDATES can now be RECEIVED and thoroughly PREPARED by a late Captain of Artillery and a late Adjutant of Militia.—D. C. FENNY, B.A., 37 Cambridge Gardens, Notting Hill, W.

MILITARY EDUCATION, HANOVER, GERMANY.

—Prof. C. RUEHLE, for several years German and French Master at the Military School, Woolwich, whose Pupils have taken high places at the Woolwich and Sandhurst Examinations, assisted by an able staff of Masters, prepares Gentlemen for the Military Competitive Examinations. Militia Officers have an opportunity of beginning their course of preparation immediately after their training, and continuing the same without interruption to the date of the Examination. —Apply for terms, direct to Professor C. RUEHLE, Brühl Strasse 9C, Hanover, Germany; for reference, to Professor WOLFFRAM, Manor House, Lee, S.E.

MILITARY EXAMINATIONS.

Professor WOLFFRAM, of the MANOR HOUSE, Lee, S.E., begs to inform his Old Pupils, their relatives, and friends that—to meet the requirements of Militia Officers under the new Regulations—he is about to organise SPECIAL CLASSES for the Spring and Autumn Examinations, both Literary and Military, entirely distinct from his Sandhurst and Woolwich Departments. The first Special Class for the October Literary Examination will open on the first week in August next.

The Special Class for the FINAL Military Competitive Examination (in accordance with the new scheme published by the Military Authorities and coming in operation in 1881) will open in January, 1881, under the superintendence of a retired Artillery officer. The course of studies in this Special Class will embrace the following subjects:—Military Tactics, Military Law, Fortification, Military Topography.

SEPTENNIAL REPORT of Educational Results obtained by Professor Wolffram. Number of pupils passed into her Majesty's Service,

In 1873, Seven.
1875, Twenty.
In 1877, Twenty-nine.
1878, Thirty-four.

QUADRENNIAL REPORT.

During the last four years (1876-77-78-79), EIGHTY-ONE Pupils passed into the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and TWO into the Royal Marine Light Infantry, out of one hundred and two sent up by him for Examination; of the remaining NINETEEN, SIXTEEN passed for commission through the Militia.

TWENTY-SEVEN Candidates from Militia Regiments passed for Commissions in the Line, out of THIRTY-ONE sent up for Examination, thus making in all a total of ONE HUNDRED and TWENTY-SIX Gentlemen, who have passed into her Majesty's Service from Professor WOLFFRAM'S Establishment during the last four years.

MILITARY EXAMINATIONS.

The MANOR HOUSE, Lee, S.E.—At the last Preliminary Examination for Cadetships at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, held on April 7 and 8, 1880, EIGHTEEN Candidates passed from Professor WOLFFRAM'S Establishment.

At the Preliminary Examination immediately preceding that, held on February 25 and 26, 1880, FIVE out of SIX Candidates sent up by him were successful.

At the last Literary Examination for Militia Officers, held on April 8 and the days following, ALL THE THREE CANDIDATES sent up from his Establishment were successful.

THE ARMY, viâ Sandhurst, Woolwich, or the Militia.—The Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., late Scholar of his College, &c., assisted by able tutors of special experience, offers careful PREPARATION for the QUALIFYING and COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS. Few pupils taken, and great individual attention given to each. References to parents of former pupils who have taken high places, as well as to successful Militia and University Candidates.—Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath.

LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA desirous of competing, this year or next, for Line Commissions can be RECEIVED by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., at Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath. They will be thoroughly prepared in all Military Subjects by Major R. V. DICKENS (late 11th Foot), who, besides having passed the Staff College, and held several Staff appointments, has for some time past been successfully engaged in coaching Lieutenants of Militia, and also Sandhurst Cadets for their final examination in the same subjects. Other competent Tutors assist in preparing for the qualifying Examinations.

A SUCCESSFUL ARMY TUTOR will receive into his house (from August 1), a few PUPILS, to prepare for the Preliminary and Militia Lieutenants' Examination. Last year passed 9 out of 12.—For terms, address "COACH," May's Advertising Offices, 159 Piccadilly.

PUBLIC SCHOOL EDUCATION.—TRINITY COLLEGE SCHOOL, Stratford-on-Avon.—The Warden, Richard F. Curry, M.A., is assisted by Seven Resident Masters, Two being specially for Modern Languages. Classical and Modern Sides. Special preparation for the Universities, Army, Navy, and all competitive examinations. Large playgrounds, gymnasium, &c. Terms, 50 and 60 Guineas.—Apply to the WARDEN.

A CAMBRIDGE M.A., experienced in preparing for Woolwich, Sandhurst, &c., wishes to take a few PUPILS to the East Coast for AUGUST.—"CANTAB," Relfe Brothers, 6 Charterhouse Buildings, E.C.

ARMY.—21 Berners Street, London, W.—Mr. LAWRENCE has passed all his Candidates for Sandhurst or Examination for Militia Lieutenants, since 1877. Preparation for the Military Competitive.—For particulars, address as above.

CARSHALTON HOUSE SCHOOL, SURREY.

Boys prepared to pass into Woolwich, Sandhurst, and the Navy. Military Drill and Discipline.—For particulars, apply to the HEAD MASTER.

EDUCATION.—Mr. THOMAS JONES, F.G.S., F.R.A.S., formerly a Master in the Woolwich Common and Oxford Military Schools, RECEIVES a FEW BOARDERS. Thorough grounding, careful training, and home comforts. Terms moderate. Address, BROOMHILL, Shooters' Hill, Kent.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL L. GRIFFITHS, late Royal Artillery, for many years Instructor at Sandhurst, afterwards Garrison Instructor at Devonport, Editor of the eleventh edition of "The Artillerists' Manual and British Soldier's Compendium," wishes his former Pupils and Friends to know that he has joined the Establishment of the Rev. G. FAITHFULL, for instruction of his Militia Officers (of whom there are generally thirty at Storrington), in Fortification, Military Topography, Military Law, and Tactics, so as to enable them to compete successfully for Army Commissions under the recent Regulations. After this year no Commissions can be obtained except by successful competition in these subjects, which require at least one year's study, so that officers intending to compete in 1881 should at once apply to Lieutenant-Colonel L. GRIFFITHS, Storrington, Sussex, for admission to these classes for instruction.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

ZOEDONE.—OHNE PHOSPHOR,

KEIN GEDANKE.—There has long been a desire to obtain a sparkling and agreeable beverage combining sustaining and invigorating qualities without intoxicating effects. This want is now, in every respect, supplied by

ZOEDONE, a non-alcoholic nutrient Tonic Beverage, which will be found invaluable in all cases of mental or physical strain, while its refreshing properties and pleasant flavour render it a delicious drink for daily use.

ZOEDONE is recommended by the Faculty. Dr. Simpson says:—"Zoedone contains two of the most important elements of the human organism, viz., phosphorus and iron, in a state easily assimilable, supplying exactly what is required where any extraordinary waste of tissue has been induced—a condition too common in this competitive age."

Pamphlet of particulars, with list of Agents, free.

Price, including bottles and packages, free on rails at Wrexham, 6s 6d per dozen in half-champagne bottles—in six-dozen cases; 12s per dozen in large champagne bottles—in three-dozen cases.

REPORT.—"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch No. 17,179, of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-1876 in the Arctic, and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the 'Discovery,' and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactory."

WE referred in an article on Military Prisons last April to the appointment of a Committee to investigate the best mode of dealing with military prisoners, and our remarks were stimulated by Colonel Stanley's statement in the House on the 2nd of the previous month, that this Committee was "appointed partly in consequence of a promise he made in the House, and partly in consequence of what passed on the Army Discipline Bill." He further stated that the Committee was presided over by Mr. Liddell, the Permanent Secretary of the Home Department, and among its members were Sir Charles Du Cane and Mr. Knox. He added that they were engaged in "very practical researches," and that he had every reason to hope their report when received would be such as "could be promptly acted upon." More than four months have elapsed, and we now learn, from the reply of Lord Morley to Lord Strathnairn in the House on the 9th inst. that the Committee presented the result of their labours to the Secretary at War two months ago, but that it deals with questions "so important and complex" (we trust, some sweeping reforms) as to take some time for those who would have to carry out these suggestions to digest, and "come to some definite opinion upon them." However, we may hope to be, ere long, enlightened upon the report that Colonel Stanley hoped could be so "promptly acted upon." At any rate, Mr. Childers must feel anxious to show in what way he can give the suggestions of the Committee his support, for when addressing the electors at Pontefract, on May 30 last, he said:—"I have frequently expressed my conviction that every branch of our comparatively small Army ought to be maintained in a high state of efficiency and usefulness, and it is in the hope of contributing to this end that I have undertaken my present duties." With all respectful deference to the Honourable Arthur Liddell, we have yet to learn when and where he had the opportunity of gaining practical experience of the habits and disposition of soldiers; and in what manner can Sir Charles Du Cane, ex-Governor of Tasmania, or Mr. Knox, be specially qualified to sit on such a Committee? The former may certainly be conversant with the usages and abuses of penal servitude, and would, moreover, have at his elbow the advice and experience of his brother, the Chairman of the Prisons Department; but, surely, "practical researches on the best mode of dealing with military prisoners" should have been investigated by a committee of military men at the War Office, and not by civilians at the Home Office. We have not heard that any evidence of military-prison officials was taken by the Committee; but we trust such was the case, for would it not have been more than desirable, on such "important and complex questions," that advantage should have been taken of the practical experience of one or more governors of the few military prisons still in existence, two of whom, we find, are officers who have been in this department over 21 years, besides a previous service of many years in the Army? Also, would not the opinions of some of the intelligent old non-commissioned officers serving as warders in these establishments have been worth inviting; and we go further, for we think the practical experience of soldiers who have undergone imprisonment and punishment in military prisons, convict establishments, and civil gaols, would have afforded the Committee some very valuable and interesting information. Without such evidence, we venture to predict that the report of the Committee, although most elaborate and exhaustive as to the essential conditions of a perfect army, in regard to a thorough reorganisation of its several branches, and the introduction of a well-digested system of armament, superior, if possible, to that of other countries, both as to defensive and offensive arms, must fall short in its main points of recommendation,—as to "the best mode of dealing with military prisoners." A contemporary informed us some six weeks ago that "one result of the recommendations of the Committee will be a change in the arrangements with respect to military prisons, and that these establishments will again be brought under direct military control, the present system being, in the opinion of all regimental officers, most injurious to the well-being of the Army." We hope this statement may be the shadow of a coming event. We believe one step in the right direction has already been taken, and the sending of some 600 soldiers to Millbank, to be classed with convicts, has been discontinued; but they are still sent by hundreds for purely military offences to civil gaols all over the country, to associate with professional pickpockets and accomplished villains; and while this is done, it must and does keep a vast number of thoroughly respectable and educated young men, who would not be proof against breaches of military discipline, from enlisting in the Army. Such a class of men will only be drawn to the Service when they see the uniform of the soldier treated with respect by the lower orders, and soldiering looked upon by them as at least as honourable and respectable a calling as any trade; otherwise, our recruits will continue to be supplied from the dregs of our cities and large towns,—ruffianly, undeveloped boys, of no stamina, and only fit for a reformatory. We admit that not a few respectable young men, with good moral qualifications and physique, and even sons of gentlemen of good families, are to be found in the ranks; but you must look for them in the Cavalry and the Scientific branches of the Army, and this only shows that a taste for military life exists with most lads; and when the State sees that it is to its interest to raise the moral and social status of the soldier to such a standard that he can feel his position in society not to be secondary to his civilian friends, then, and not until then, shall we see our Army filled with a very superior class of men, and "Oh, he is only a common soldier!" will cease to be a by-word.

We published last week a communication from Lieutenant Temple, R.N., forwarding a letter written to a weekly journal of science, which "want of space" prevented their inserting. Our scientific contemporary appears to have been lured into three serious errors, viz., attacking Lieutenant Temple, defending the Hydrographic Department, and not inserting the Lieutenant's reply to remarks made in his disfavour. It is generally thought throughout the Service that Lieutenant Temple has been treated with scant courtesy by the Hydrographic Office, for when employed in compiling the "Norway Pilot," he was suddenly, in July, 1879, ordered to send in his account to date, for final discharge. On asking for some explanation, he was told that, for "departmental reasons," there was no cause to depart from the arrangements already conveyed to him. Had the Hydrographic Office allowed Lieutenant Temple to complete his labours, the public would now be in possession of the "Norway Pilot." At present, all we know of this much required work is that Captain Evans issued a promissory note on this and other subjects in his annual Report on Admiralty Surveys, made to the Royal Geographical Society in May last. On May 27 last our contemporary published an article handling Lieutenant Temple in a rough manner. He is described as making "a rude and ungenerous attack on the Hydrographic Department of the Admiralty;" called "a small, obscure, but self-asserting clique;" and his knowledge termed "of a very superficial kind." Lieutenant Temple answers this attack by a letter dated June 2, which letter, however, is not inserted until July 1, and then with an editorial note stating, first, that it "would be contrary to the traditions, and certainly to the interests, of any public office connected with the practical and working world," to deliberately give dangerous publicity to errors; secondly, that the Department was pursuing a prudent course in causing a revision to be made of Lieutenant Temple's compilation by another authority; and, thirdly, that the prudence of the latter step was confirmed by a significant letter which lately appeared in the Shipping and Mercantile Gazette and in the Daily News, from the Norwegian Government, written in order to correct the erroneous statements contained in Mr. Temple's paper (read at the Society of Arts) respecting the charts and descriptions of the Norwegian coasts. In answer to these statements, Lieutenant Temple replies that an erroneous Light list for the Norwegian coast was published by the Hydrographic Office in 1880, in the face of repeated warnings; that an officer with no practical knowledge of the Norwegian coast, and unacquainted with the language, cannot fairly be termed "another authority;" and that the Norwegian papers evidently interpreted his remarks on our own Admiralty charts, as applying to the Norwegian charts. Our scientific contemporary, in alluding to the letters in the Daily News and Shipping and Mercantile Gazette, must hav written without any acquaintance with Lieutenan Temple's paper, read at the Society of Arts, on May 19, 1880, wherein he states that "the Norwegian charts, which are on a scale of about three-quarters of an inch and 1·5 inch to a mile, are very good, and may be bought in all the principal towns in Norway; but it would be necessary for English seamen to master the Norwegian abbreviations and conventional signs before they could use them. It is a matter of regret that these Norwegian charts are not republished on the same scale by the Admiralty." The ordinary mind has also observed that in Lieutenant Temple's paper on "Hydrography, Past and Present," printed in extenso by the British Association for the Advancement of Knowledge, in 1879, as well as in his "Voyage to the Coasts of Norway and Lapland," printed in the May number, 1880, of the "Proceedings" of the Royal Geographical Society, he speaks in the highest terms of the charts published by the Norwegian Government. We likewise notice that the Daily News and Shipping and Mercantile Gazette at once inserted Lieutenant Temple's letter explanatory of the mistake made by the Norwegian Government. We make these remarks for the benefit of our learned contemporary in the same spirit with which the young pages flapped the wise men of Laputa, whom Lemuel Gulliver describes as forgetting what they were about "till their memories were again roused by their flappers."

The combination of European fleets in the Mediterranean, which has been spoken of, is now said to be on the eve of being carried into effect "on the coast of Dulcigno-Perseca." According to this intelligence, Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour will be called on to detach two of his ships for service with this International Demonstrative Squadron, as it may be called for want of a better name. The Vienna correspondent of the Standard says:—"Although, so far as I am aware, the fact has not as yet been anywhere officially made known, I am able to inform you that an agreement has already been arrived at among the Great Powers on this matter. In accordance with this agreement, Austria and Germany are each to send two ironclads to join the Anglo-French fleet when it is ordered to the Turkish Adriatic coast. One of the Austrian vessels selected for this work is the Prince Eugène, an ironclad with eight 21-centimètre Krupp guns, and crew of about 500 men. The allied squadron will at first simply make a demonstration on the Turkish coast. It will proceed to more earnest operations in case the new Vali of Scutari, Dervish Pasha, does not carry out the Act of April, or Corti Convention. Everything depends on the conduct of the Albanians, who still persist in refusing to make any cession of territory. If they do not yield in time, there will be an active intervention by the collective fleet." On the other hand, we may again remark that the Alexandra, the flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir F. Beauchamp Seymour, Téméraire, Thunderer, Monarch, Invincible, Rupert, and Helicon are continuing on their pre-arranged cruise, and arrived at Villafranca from Genoa on Thursday.

Her Majesty has approved of the appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel Robert Bland Hunt to the post of Marine Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, vacant by the promotion of Major-General Hamond Gwyn.

Rear-Admiral Hood, C.B., and the captain and officers of the Hecla, together with other officers who took a prominent part in the recent torpedo experiments in Bantry Bay, have been acquainted that the Admiralty are much pleased at the zeal and intelligence displayed by officers and men in carrying out the programme of the trials.

In the match for ships' boats at the regatta of the Corinthian Club at Portsmouth, on Saturday, the first prize was won by the Helena, belonging to the Royal Yacht, Captain Frank Thompson steering; and Captain Culme Seymour and Captain Lord Charles Scott were among the naval officers who piloted the other craft.

Last week we called attention to several ships requiring relief, and a correspondent asks us not to forget the Fawn, which has now been more than four years from England surveying. The first part of her time was spent in the Red Sea and on the East Coast of Africa; the work was continuous, and entailed a good deal of hardship to all concerned. Nearly two years ago the ship was ordered from Zanzibar to the Sea of Marmora, and now it seems only fair that she should be paid off, so that the present crews might have an opportunity of seeing their homes and families. Surely there are other officers and men competent to complete the survey of the Sea of Marmora, and it is needless to condemn the present ship's company to longer exile.

At the close of the recent machine-gun experiments at Portsmouth, where the Hotchkiss revolving cannon competed with the Nordenfelt Naval gun, their Lordships offered to purchase the revolving cannon, by way of recouping the inventor the expense he had incurred. This offer Mr. Hotchkiss declined to accept, intimating at the same time that he would be willing to supply a larger number of his guns. Their Lordships, having taken the whole circumstances of the case into consideration, and recognising the fact that much useful information was derived from these trials, have decided to purchase a battery of six guns from Mr. Hotchkiss. These will be used as experimental weapons in future trials, but the system will not be adopted in the Navy, the recent trial of the Nordenfelt $1\frac{1}{2}$-inch gun having served to prove that this calibre of the Naval gun can do double the work performed by the Hotchkiss revolving cannon of the same calibre, it having completely perforated a 2-inch plate, in which the Hotchkiss projectiles had, made but slight indents.

The combined Channel and Reserved Squadrons consisting of the Minotaur, Agincourt, Northumberland, Achilles, Hercules, Defence, Valiant, Audacious, Warrior, Lord Warden, Hector, and Penelope, accompanied by the Salamis, which were to have left Berehaven on Monday last, were subsequently ordered to await the arrival of the Bacchante, which will make the cruise with them. The Fleet, under the command of Rear-Admiral Hood, left Berehaven on Thursday for a cruise, arriving at Vigo about August 1. After coaling at that port, the ships will leave Vigo on the 5th, again going through a series of manœuvres, and arriving in England by August 15. The Agincourt, Northumberland, and Achilles, will part company at Plymouth, the Minotaur and the Bacchante proceeding to Portsmouth, and the Reserve ships to their several stations.

On Tuesday afternoon the Mutine was launched from Devonport Dockyard, the ceremony of naming the vessel being performed by the Lady Harriet Elliot. The Mutine is a 6-gun composite sloop, and is sister ship to the Phœnix and Miranda, both of which were built at Devonport, and of the Espiègle, which will be ready for launching at Devonport early next month. She is of 900 horse-power, her engines being supplied by Maudslay, Field, and Son, of London; length, 170 feet; breadth, 36 feet; weight at time of launching, 560 tons; weight when complete for sea, 1,124 tons.

Captain Jasper Harrison has resigned his commission in the Royal Marines.

Sub-Lieutenants Charles R. Payne, June 20, 1878; Henry W. Sharp, June 19, 1879; George S. Walsh, June 25, 1879; Charles H. Dundas, July 16, 1879; William H. Chads, July 16, 1879; and Henry G. Monckton, August 8, 1879, having completed their examinations and passed successfully, have been confirmed in their rank.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir Thomas Symonds, G.C.B., was always known as one who would speak his mind, even to the extent of offending such an august body as the Admiralty Board. It was, therefore, with more than ordinary interest that his evidence before the Atalanta Inquiry was looked for. It is more than plain that had Sir Thomas Symonds been at the Admiralty, he would not have selected the Juno for conversion into a training-ship.

Navigating-Lieutenant Maunsell and Mr. Warwick Green, clerk of the Wild Swan, have been successful in passing an examination in Hindustanee.

The following have been given as the probable dates of the arrivals and departures of Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., on his present tour of visits in the Euryalus, which was to leave Tamatave on July 21, arrive at Seychelles on July 27, and sail August 3; arrive at Zanzibar August 11, and remain one week, leaving then for Trincomalee, where the ship will be due on September 5.

The United States Government has despatched Admiral Wyman to Havana, to inquire into the firing upon American traders by a Spanish man-of-war.

Commander Lord Ramsay, whose return to the House of Commons was recognised as a gain to the Navy, has been removed to the Lords by the death of his father, Admiral the Earl of Dalhousie. The only war service the late Earl has seen was, we believe, during the Russian war, when he was in command of the Euryulus and blockaded the Russian fleet at Helsingfors.

The London Naval Artillery Volunteers have had the Esk placed at their disposal for summer drill. One battery has already been embarked, and the gunboat will remain at the service of the Brigade throughout August. The Liverpool Brigade has the gunboat Tay detailed for drills.

The Director of Navy Contracts has this week been making an official visit to the Naval establishments at Devonport.

Captain Archibald Douglas, who has this week been promoted, stood No. 58 on the Commanders' List, and attains the rank of captain at a fair average age, he having obtained special promotion from the Lieutenants' List as a staff officer of the Cambridge. Commander Dugdale stood No. 60 on the Lieutenants' List, and has passed over the heads of many who believed their turn had come at last, but who have lived to be disappointed.

The Earl of Northbrook, as First Lord of the Admiralty, has kindly consented to preside at the distribution of prizes at the Royal Naval School at New Cross, which will take place this afternoon.

Kensington House will, we trust, be thronged this afternoon, for many who would otherwise have left town have stayed behind to assist at the concert and garden party in aid of the Atalanta relief fund.

Commodore Thomas Smith has been absent from Hong Kong on leave, during which time Captain East, of the Comus, performed the duties of senior officer. In future, the Victor Emanuel will have an officer capable of taking over the duties of the Commodore, as Commander John G. Jones joins that ship on paying off the Wivern.

Vice-Admiral Robert Coote has been making a visit to the Peiho River, but is now on the Japan division of the station. It is not unlikely that the Admiral will pay another visit to the northern portion of his command, where he will shortly have the pleasure of meeting the newly-appointed Russian Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Lessovski.

We are requested by the Admiralty to state that candidates at the recent examination for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, who wish to be considered applicants for commissions in the Royal Marine Artillery, should send notice at once to the Secretary to the Admiralty.

After the promotions now due have been gazetted—after Captain the Hon. R. A. J. Talbot, 1st Life Guards, has been given his brevet majority—there will remain thirty-seven captains on the list of 1867 to be promoted. The following is the order in which the names stand, viz.:—Captains G. Baker, 67th Foot; G. K. M'Callum, 92nd Foot; H. G. Carleton, 10th Foot; A. G. Lowry, 8th Foot; J. S. Smyth, 17th Foot; G. Cox, 87th Foot; C. H. Boileau, 61st Foot; M. M'N. Rind, 107th Foot; R. F. Stirke, 69th Foot; R. S. Shinkwin, 59th Foot; P. M'Laren, 74th Foot; C. Middlemass, 17th Foot; J. E. Forster, 3rd Foot; T. G. Crawley, 8th Foot; P. Murray, 109th Foot; H. H. Griffiths, 59th Foot; J. E. Wetherall, 108th Foot; L. A. Gregson, 70th Foot; C. W. H. Wilson, 6th Foot; J. O. M. Vandeleur, 75th Foot; W. F. Thacker, 18th Foot; R. Nagle, Staff, Canada; R. H. Fawcett, 33rd Foot; G. Forbes-Robertson, 93rd Foot; W. W. Taylor, 87th Foot; M. D. Hill, 99th Foot; H. H. Hooke, 45th Foot; E. B. St. John, 35th Foot; A. H. Luck, 84th Foot; P. A. Howley, 58th Foot; C. Thackeray, 28th Foot; C. T. Wallace, 74th Foot; A. Tanner, 7th Foot; G. C. S. Ducat, 28th Foot; E. Jervis, 8th Foot; F. W. H. D. Butler, 9th Foot; and J. J. F. Grant, 46th Foot. It would be most unfair to draw a hard-and-fast line, and deny to those officers who have the ill-luck to be Captains on October 1 next privileges which have been extended to all senior to them. The officers who would be kept out of their brevet, were the clause in the Royal Warrant acted upon, have many of them twenty-five years of service—Captain Shinkwin, of the 59th, will complete twenty-eight years in December next. It would be a most iniquitous thing to stop the promotion of these officers, when the brevet step was guaranteed to them at the time they purchased their companies, and the prospect of ultimately succeeding to field-rank, should regimental promotion not have passed to them by the time they became the senior Captains in the Army, was one of the inducements held out to them and influenced them in purchasing their companies. Despite the ruling of the Warrant, we do not see how it is possible for the Government to sanction the discontinuance of the Seniority brevet. The Royal Commission on Promotion and Retirement saw the great difficulty which stood in the way of such a measure being carried through, and decided that brevet promotion by seniority could not cease until every Purchase captain had been disposed of; and Mr. Childers cannot fail to see, should he go into the matter, that the view taken by the members of the Royal Commission was a right and proper one, and we yet hope to learn that the right honourable gentleman has advised her Majesty to cancel the clauses in the Warrant to which exception has been so properly taken.

Whilst British officers are naturally looking most anxiously to Colonel North to ventilate their grievance in the matter of the contemplated abolition of the seniority brevet, it is interesting to know that the idea has not found favour with the Indian Government, for we learn that "inquiry having been made of the Government of India, whether it is the intention of her Majesty's Government that the brevet rank for length of service heretofore granted to officers of the Indian services should entirely cease, the Secretary of State has replied that, considering the circumstances under which the rank was originally introduced, and the fact that its immediate cessation would lead to supersession of some Staff officers and Majors and Captains of Cavalry, under the old conditions of service, by the officers of the General List, he considers that these brevet promotions should not cease in each rank, until the extinction of that rank among the officers of the Local Service." But the question may well be asked,—How is the Imperial officer to fare in India, if seniority promotion is abolished by the War Office, whilst all the time the Government of India is giving steps to those who are the seniors in its Service? The ruling of the Government of India is an equitable and just one, and our War Office, in the face of this decision, will be bound in common fairness to rescind the Clause in the Warrant, otherwise the British officer in India will serve on most unequal terms with his brother of the Indian Army. Supersession will become more common than ever, and the Imperial Government will add one more to the grievances which have grown out of the abolition of Purchase.

The vacancy on the Establishment caused by the retirement of General H. D. Griffith, dated May 22, having been absorbed, that by the retirement of Lieutenant-General T. S. Conway has, of course, been filled. There are now three vacancies, those occasioned by the deaths of General Lord George Paget and Major-Generals T. R. Crawley and T. Raikes, C.B., but only two of these can be filled according to the ruling of the Warrant. Steps, therefore, are due to Lieutenant-General Sir E. H. Greathed, K.C.B., Major-General C. H. Morris, C.B., Colonels G. N. Boldero, of the Taunton Brigade Depôt, and J. Peel, half-pay, late of a Depôt Battalion, Assistant-Adjutant-General for Recruiting on the Staff of the Home District. The death of Major-General J. H. Stewart, Royal Marines, and the promotion of Colonel H. Adair, Royal Marine Artillery, give steps to the two senior Majors and Captains of the Army. Thus four steps are due to these ranks, and the names of Majors E. J. Oldfield, 5th Foot; A. E. Fyler, 50th Foot; F. B. Sandwith, 10th Foot, and F. L. H. Lyon, half-pay, late Royal Artillery; and Captains C. A. Denny, 10th Foot; St. J. Bally, 48th Foot; J. H. Tulloch, 23rd Foot; and Hon. R. A. J. Talbot, 1st Life Guards, will appear in an early Gazette.

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

The meeting of the National Rifle Association, which closes to-day with the mounted competitions for the Royal Cambridge Challenge Trophy and the match between Great Britain and the United States, has passed off most successfully. The shooting, taken altogether, has exhibited a remarkable advance on that of last year, especially as regards the Volunteers, with the Martini-Henry, which the Auxiliaries have evidently made their weapon, notwithstanding the advice given them at the last business meeting of the Association by the Commander-in-Chief to cultivate more extended acquaintance with the Snider, because "it would continue to be their arm for a very considerable time,—probably beyond his own life." There has been a marked improvement in the discipline of the camp. The saluting of officers, however, still appears to be ignored, and it is evident that there are many Volunteers who do not yet know the distinction between uniform and mufti. Time, it is hoped, will change this, and impart a more military aspect to the camp. At Shoeburyness, as every one knows, the Volunteers who compete for the prizes of the National Artillery Association are under strict military rule. They are supposed to be at Wimbledon, but they are not. The match, on Thursday, for the United Service Challenge Cup was a very close affair between the Army and the Volunteers, the former leading at the first distance by only one point, but losing way at the second range by nine points. They wanted 200 points at 600 yards to win, but succeeded only in obtaining 196. The range scores are given below, and show the positions at each range. Sir Garnet Wolseley visited the Canadian Camp on Tuesday, and a large number of distinguished visitors were present at the garden party on the following day. Seven regiments will be represented in the contest for the Royal Cambridge Challenge Trophy to-day, viz., the 3rd, 4th, 11th, and 18th Hussars, 16th Lancers, and 5th and 7th Dragoon Guards. This was the event of the meeting last year, and it promises to be even more interesting to-day, when their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will be present to witness it, the Princess of Wales subsequently distributing the principal prizes. In our last impression we gave the results of the Inter-University long-range match, the Alfred, the Trial Stakes, the Daily Telegraph Cup, and the 1st Stage of the Queen's. Appended are the principal winners, with the scores since Saturday :—

Battalion Sweepstakes (in connection with the 1st Stage, Queen's Prize).—£9, 1st Renfrewshire, 533 points; £6 15s., 15th Middlesex, 530; £4 10s., 1st Warwick, 526; £2 5s., 2nd Middlesex, 526.

Glen Albyn.—Seven shots at 200 yards with the Snider. £20, Pte. McKenzie, 10th Forfar, 35 points; £8 6s. 8d. each, Lieut. Mitchell, 1st Cumberland, Corpl. Munro, 1st Glamorgan, and Serjt. Wilkins, 1st Stafford, with 34; £5 each, Serjt. Brown, 1st Roxburgh, Pte. Whitelaw, 1st Lanark, Corpl. Lascelles, 4th Essex, Pte. Leckie, 7th Ayr, Serjt. Dutton, 6th Cheshire, Qrmr. Grier, 3rd Renfrew, and Capt. Starkie, 22nd Middlesex, with 34. Eighty-three prizes were awarded.

Alexandra.—Seven shots at 500 and 600 yards, with the Martini-Henry. Three hundred prizes, value £900. Winner of £30, Serjt. Bartlett, 1st Hants Artillery, 66 points; winner of £20, Corpl. Walker, 42nd Foot; and Major Young, 39th Middlesex.

AN ARMSTRONG FIELD-DAY.

Seldom has Shoeburyness been the scene of a more distinguished and influential gathering than was the case on Wednesday last, when, in response to invitations issued by Gen. Sir F. Campbell, Director of Artillery, the Right Hon. Hugh C. E. Childers, Secretary of State for War, the Earl of Northbrook, First Lord of the Admiralty, and about 100 Naval and Military officers and scientists of diverse nationalities, met on the marshes, to witness the latest development of the inventive skill and genius of that celebrated firm Sir W. G. Armstrong and Co., of Elswick, the owners of the largest great-gun producing works in the world, next to those of Herr Krupp, of Essen. To the uninitiated, the target practice carried out on Wednesday would doubtless appear very wonderful, and has already come to be regarded by the general public as "a series of most interesting and instructive gunnery experiments," carried out with a view to the selection of the best ordnance it is possible to procure for the armament of the land and sea forces of this kingdom, while in reality the programme constituted nothing beyond an Armstrong field-day, with Capt. Noble, late Royal Artillery, but now a partner in the Elswick firm, on the spot, to explain the nature of each invention in its turn to the heads of the Naval and Military Departments represented on the ground. It cannot, therefore, be said that Wednesday's demonstration represented in any way the progress of British Artillery, for beyond the Albini and Moncrieff gun-carriages, and the Gatling gun, the novelties exhibited were invented by the Elswick firm, which also manufactures for the inventors just enumerated. Hence, we repeat, the day was essentially a show day for Elswick and all things appertaining to that firm, and though such experiments may be all very well in their way, very much more is required to be done, for it is high time that a great mechanical nation like England should no longer be behind its rivals on the Continent. The new Elswick productions comprised an experimental 8-inch and a 6-inch breech-loader, the former on a Naval and the latter on an Albini carriage; the new 13-pounder field-gun, seven feet long, with the French interrupted screw-breech action; and a new mountain gun, unscrewing in rear of the trunnions in such manner that each half of the gun weighs exactly 200 lb. This is meant to be used as a mountain gun, to be carried on mules, and the only objection raised as to its efficiency lay in the possibility of two muzzles or two breeches arriving together, instead of the two halves forming the gun. These can be screwed together or unscrewed in about two minutes. The Gatling gun, manufactured by Sir W. G. Armstrong and Co., was also tried. Capt. O'Callaghan, R.A., Assistant-Inspector of Experiments, had caused forty dummies, representing infantry soldiers, to be sawn out of wood, and these were set up about 800 yards from the gun, which, with two drums containing 240 solid drawn cased cartridges, awaited the inspection of the assembled party as the clock was striking the hour of noon Capt. O'Callaghan sighted the gun, and, having ascertained by several trial shots aimed at the target in rear of the dummies that he had the exact range, proceeded to work the gun with the energy and thoroughness which are characteristic of this officer. The first drum was fired in about 55 seconds. The second drum took longer, and was not fired under one minute 25 seconds, owing to repeated jambs taking place between the cartridges, the carrier, and the casing. These 480 shots only succeeded in hitting 16 of the 40 dummies, two of which were struck by two bullets and the others by one. The opinion of all the experts present was that the gun had proved a decided failure. Captain Noble was now called upon to explain the working of the new 13-pounder field-gun to General Sir John Adye, K.C.B., the reintroducer of the muzzle-loading system, and the opponent of the breech-loader. In the present instance, the 13-pounder made a determined attempt to rid itself of its enemy. The horses were harnessed to the limber as Sir John was standing between the wheels of the limbered-up gun. Just then a small field-piece was fired hard by, causing the horses to start with a bound. The axle of the 13-pounder caught Sir John Adye just below the waistcoat, and dragged him backwards some paces. Another instant, and the General would have been down, with the gun-wheels running over him, when a gunner caught the leaders by their heads and threw them on their haunches. Sir John Adye was saved, and will now no longer oppose the introduction of breech-loading artillery into the English Service, lest next time he has anything to do with such ill-mannered creatures they succeed in crushing him entirely. A chilled iron shot was next fired from a 38-ton gun at one of Messrs. Cammel and Co.'s 18-in. steel-faced armour-plates, against which it crumbled and broke up. The whole party now proceeded to the spacious marquees, where, as remarked by Capt. Hopkins, of the Excellent, the guests of Gen. Sir F. Campbell "were invited to pass judgment on a description of muzzle-loading few men, except, perhaps, the American fasting-man, would be found willing to condemn;" and what with the saltpetre from the powder and the sea-breeze sweeping over the marshes, appetites appeared so sharpened that the mess waiters found it was as much as they could do to respond to the numerous calls made upon them. During lunch, rain began to fall, and seriously marred the pleasures of the remainder of the day. The ladies, however, scorned the accusation of fearing damp grass, and stood gallantly by their husbands, relations, or friends, during the remainder of the day, sharing with them the discomfort of having to witness some heavy-gun practice in the midst of one of those heavy downpours of rain for which Essex is so famous. The new Armstrong breech-loading heavy ordnance was now fired, and Capt. Noble was called upon to explain the action of the flanged disc resting on a spheroidal plate placed over the face of the breech-piece, a combination made to prevent the escape of gas. A kind of competitive trial was then made between two 38-ton guns in casemates, the one being worked by hand and the other by steam. The gun worked by hand had decidedly the best of it in the present instance, owing to the steam having lost its head. But, in the long-run, there seems to be no doubt that the gun worked by steam and mechanical power would beat the one worked by hand-power or manual labour. In all these experiments there was not one new to officers of either Service, while the plate-testing at Portsmouth affords Naval officers numerous opportunities of witnessing experiments of this nature carried out on a scale seldom now attempted at Shoeburyness. Indeed, as observed by Mr. Nathaniel Barnaby, C.B., Director of Naval Construction, the experiment with the Cammel iron and steel plate was "rather rough on the gun," it being a well-ascertained fact that, had the plate been made of wrought iron, a Palliser chilled shot weighing 828 lb., striking with an energy of 12,300 foot tons, would pierce it. But as the plate was steel-faced, the total energy obtained, 12,545 foot tons, only served to break up the chilled shot, without inflicting any serious damage to the plate. Indeed, had one of the chilled iron plates cast by Herr Grüson, of Buckau, near Magdeburg, been used, instead of the much more costly compound steel-and-iron plate manufactured by Messrs. Cammel and Co., similar results would have been obtained. The day's doings were under the command of Col. Hastings, R.A., Capt. Pearse acting as brigade-major. Lieut.-Col. Keith was in regimental command, with Capt. Hubbock as his adjt. Capts. O'Callaghan and Skinner, R.A., assist.-superintendents of experiments, conducted the whole of the trials, with their usual skill, and by their tact, judgment, and kindness succeeded, as usual, in giving general satisfaction, and in sending all who were brought into immediate contact with them away fully convinced that the authorities have for once selected the right men, and placed them in the right place. The instruction staff was under Col. Betty, R.A. The first siege battery, forming the heavy siege unit, and the 16-pounder and 9-pounder field guns, manned by officers and non-commissioned officers under instruction, were commanded by Major Trench. The light siege unit was commanded by Capt. Saunders, while the new 13-pounder field gun, manned by young officers, was under the command of Major Lloyd. Among the guests of Sir F. Campbell, Director of Artillery, may be mentioned Admirals Herbert, Boys, Hoskins, and the Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, who had come across in the Duncan's steam barge; Generals Bulwer, C.B.; R. P. Radcliffe; Sir J. L. Simmonds, G.C.B.; J. E. Gordon, C.B.; Sir A. Alison, Bart., K.C.B.; Gosling; Turner, C.B.; Maxwell; Sir J. Adye, K.C.B.; Gallwey, R.E.; Sir E. Hodge; Sir F. C. Patrick, Esq., M.P.; H. Campbell-Bannerman, Esq., M.P.; F. Walrond, Esq., C.B., and others; besides Capt. Noble, late Royal Artillery, partner in the firm of Sir W. G. Armstrong and Co., in whose interests Wednesday's field-day was apparently organised and carried out,—at least that was the impression created in the minds of most of those present by the day's proceedings. But the most remarkable feature of the whole performance is that there was no single result obtained on Wednesday but what has been already excelled in other countries. The exhibition cannot, therefore, be said to have been in any way creditable to the engineering skill and inventive genius of England.

SIR GARNET WOLSELEY'S RANK.

Sir,—Ministers must necessarily depend upon their subordinates for the text of their answers to the thousand and one questions which are put to them. One of these subordinates has served Mr. Childers badly in drafting the explanations which he has given me, with respect to certain articles in the Royal Warrant on "Pay and Promotion," for he stated that no officer had ever been promoted under certain specified articles in the Warrant of 1878, or under any articles corresponding to them in previous Warrants. Now, one of those specified Articles (the 48th) provides "that temporary rank and command as General may, for the convenience of our Service, be conferred, without regard to seniority, on a lieutenant-general, or on a major-general or colonel who has been employed in the temporary rank of lieutenant-general. If in such temporary rank he shall have conducted himself to our satisfaction for five years in time of peace, or for any shorter period in time of war, he may, upon the special recommendation of our Commander-in-Chief, be granted a step of permanent rank." And Order No. 668 of June 6, 1856 (see Army List, July, 1856), runs as follows: —"Major-Gen. Sir William Codrington having, with the local rank of General, commanded-in-chief her Majesty's Army in the Crimea during a period of war, and entirely to her Majesty's satisfaction, her Majesty has been pleased to command that, as a mark of her royal approbation, he be promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general in the Army under the 10th Clause of the Royal Warrant of Oct. 6, 1854." It is unnecessary to trespass further on your space.—I am, &c.,

The Army.

1st Life Guards. Col. Keith Fraser commands the 1st Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot for the drill season, with Capt. Hon. R. Talbot as his brigade-major.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). After a very severe contest, the electors of Berwick have returned the Conservative candidate, Capt. Milne Home, by a majority of two. At the general election Capt. Home, who was returned in 1874, and sat as Member for Berwick throughout the late Parliament, polled only 457 votes. On Monday his numbers were 584, whilst those of the Lord Advocate, his opponent, showed a falling off of over 100 in comparison with the votes recorded in favour of Sir D. C. Marjoribanks, the senior Liberal Member.

1st King's Dragoon Guards. The Morning Post says: —"Instructions have been sent to the Cape directing the military authorities there to hold the King's Dragoon Guards in readiness to embark in Sept. next, and H.M.S. Euphrates has been placed under orders to leave England in a month's time, to embark the regiment at Cape Town and convey it to Bombay." 2nd Lieut. Goold-Adams is about to be promoted to a lieutenancy.

2nd Dragoon Guards. It has been arranged that the regiment shall remain in Ireland until next year, when it will be relieved by the 21st Hussars.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Capts. Bolitho and Amyatt-Burney have passed the qualifying examination for promotion to the rank of major.

4th Dragoon Guards. Capt. Pope is acting as brigade-major of the 2nd Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot for the drill season.

5th Dragoon Guards. Capt. Lawrence is acting as aide-de-camp to Col. Keith Fraser, 1st Life Guards, commanding the 1st Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot, for the drill season. The appearance of the regiment at the field-day on Thursday before H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge is pronounced by a distinguished cavalry officer to have been "magnificent." "The greatest credit is due to Lieut.-Col. Marsland and his officers," writes our correspondent.

7th Dragoon Guards. Lieut. Day is expected to obtain the troop vacant by the retirement of Capt. Weston.

1st Royal Dragoons, on arrival in Ireland shortly from Manchester, will occupy quarters at Ballincollig.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). Mr. J. Dickson, died at 6 Philbrick Terrace, Nunhead Lane, S.E., on Sunday last, aged 90 years. The deceased was one of the survivors of Waterloo, having been in the famous charge of Heavy Cavalry when the almost annihilated 42nd and other Highland regiments opened up to let them come to the rescue, after the French Cuirassiers had sadly thinned their ranks. The old soldier, to the last day of his life, took the keenest and most intelligent interest in all the topics of the day, and especially in subjects connected with the Army. The son of a Paisley manufacturer, he became infected with the war-fever (for the suppression of Bonaparte) at the commencement of the century, and left his father's business to enlist in the Greys. In many respects he was a remarkable man, estimable in all the relations of life, and highly respected in the different parts of the country in which he at various times sojourned. The following extract, copied from our issue of June 26, 1875, will be interesting at the present time:—"The detachment at Woolwich, a few days ago, entertained an old Waterloo hero, Mr. John Dickson, who joined the Greys in 1807. He held the rank of corporal at the battle of Waterloo, and was discharged as troop serjt.-major, after an honourable service of 27 years. Mr. Dickson is believed to be the only representative of the regiment living who charged with the Greys at the battle of Waterloo, where he had two horses shot under him, and one severely wounded. It is worthy of remark that he served in the same troop with Serjt. Ewart, who captured the 'eagle' on that memorable day. On his arrival at Woolwich the detachment was turned out, under the command of Major Browne, in order to give Mr. Dickson an opportunity of seeing his old regiment, after so many years' absence. He then visited the stables and rooms, after which he was entertained by the serjeants in their mess-room, at a dinner given specially in his honour, the wine for the occasion being provided by the officers of the detachment. In responding to the toast of his health, he expressed himself in a few feeling remarks, and especially impressed upon his young comrades that they should serve their Queen and country with honour and fidelity, and always take God as their guide. Every one connected with the regiment united in showing this distinguished veteran every attention in their power, and he took his departure amidst the hearty good-wishes of all present." Capt. the Hon. W. Alexander has been granted leave from the 29th inst. to Nov. 8, with permission to proceed to America.

4th Hussars. The regiment has held its own at Aldershot, and a cavalry officer who saw it in the field the other day tells us he was struck by the manner in which all ranks acquitted themselves. "The men are young," he says, "but they have evidently endeavoured to maintain the reputation of the old 4th Light, and despite all the inconveniences of a wet season under canvas, they turned out this week in splendid form, and showed themselves capable of doing good service."

5th Lancers. A cavalry officer who has witnessed the movements of the Aldershot division this week writes:— "A word for the 5th Lancers. I was much pleased to notice their turn-out, and Dunham Massy may rest assured that his old regiment, which he did so much to get into shape after its return from India, has been able to earn fresh laurels, and I never saw it in better form than it appeared on Thursday."

9th Lancers. His many friends, says the Pioneer, will be glad to learn that Col. Cleland, who was dangerously wounded while leading his regiment into the fatal charge on Dec. 11, is now making rapid strides towards recovery, though it is extremely doubtful that he will ever again be fit for military duty. He has been for some weeks past at Murree, under the care of Sir F. and Lady Maude.

10th Hussars. It is stated by the Times of India that Lieut. Rose recently came home to become an equerry to the Prince of Wales.

11th Hussars. Capt. Watson is acting as A.Q.M.G. of Cavalry at Aldershot for the drill season. The "Cherubims" will carry away with them the best wishes of all classes when they leave Aldershot. The conduct of the regiment has been deserving of all praise, whilst as regards general efficiency, they have excited the admiration of all competent critics.

12th Lancers. Lieut. Newton, who has recently exchanged from the 20th Hussars with Lieut. Nelson, has been granted leave to the 17th prox., pending embarkation for Madras to join head-quarters.

16th Lancers. Capt. Maillard, brigade-major of cavalry, is acting as A.A.G. of cavalry for the drill season at Aldershot.

19th Hussars are to be moved from the Curragh to Dublin for the winter at the termination of the summer drills, and will occupy Island Bridge Barracks. 2nd Lieut. Anderson, promoted from the Carabiniers to a 2nd lieutenancy on Tuesday, is to have the adjutancy.

20th Hussars. Capt. Blake has passed the qualifying examination for promotion to the rank of major.

21st Hussars. Capt. the Hon. H. G. L. Crichton, Brigade-Major of Cavalry in Ireland, has passed the examination to qualify him for promotion to the rank of major.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

F. Baty. 2nd Brig. is under orders to proceed to Afghanistan from Hyderabad.

Gen. the Right Hon. Sir John Michel, G.C.B., has inquired personally of Major Ward concerning his improved pattern of horse blanket, or jhool, a brief description of which appeared in our issue of Saturday last. The Commander of the Forces has shown considerable interest in the proposed alterations to the blanket now in use, and the jhool is now on trial by the Royal Scots Greys, in view to being tested in every way before being recommended for adoption into her Majesty's Service. Several experienced officers of horse artillery and cavalry, to whom the jhool has been submitted, have expressed their approval of its appearance, utility, and design.

The Artillery camp at Okehampton was broken up on Saturday, after a successful series of experiments with case shot and rockets. The last week was occupied by competitions for prizes between the batteries, and both the square targets and the infantry dummies have been completely shattered. The site is found to be so well adapted to the purpose of artillery experiments, that preparations are to be made for an encampment on a much more extensive scale next year.

Extract from Bombay Army Orders, dated June 18 :—"The Commander-in-Chief is pleased to make the following appointments :—No. 1 Mountain Baty.—Lieut. J. S. Minter, 2nd subaltern, is transferred to No. 2 Mountain Baty. as 3rd subaltern, but will officiate as 2nd subaltern at the public expense at Quetta ; Lieut. H. T. Butcher, A-2, is appointed 2nd subaltern, vice Minter, transferred."

It is announced that the designation of the appointments of "Inspector-General of Ordnance and Magazines" in India will in future be "Inspector-General of Ordnance."

Lieut. C. Richards, 2nd Brig., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Col. C. M. Govan, 1st Brig., has been appointed to the Brigade Staff of the Bombay Army temporarily, with the rank of Brigdr.-Gen., vice Col. E. W. Bray, C.B., 4th Foot, retired upon half-pay.

Lieut. H. N. Jervois, 1st subaltern, No. 1 (Kohat) Mountain Battery, Punjab Frontier Force, has been granted leave to England for one year, on medical certificate.

Major G. H. J. Candy, 9th Brig. (late Madras), has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

Col. Arbuthnot, formerly M.P. for Hereford, writes to the Daily News to protest against the decision of the Government to issue a small committee of a mixed military and departmental character to inquire into the pay, promotion, and employment and conditions of service and retirement of the officers of the Ordnance Corps, instead of a Royal Commission as agreed upon by the House of Commons last year. He points out that Mr. Childers, the present War Secretary, then paired in favour of a Royal Commission, and that all the Liberals except two who took part in the division voted with him.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Irish Times points out that "General Lord Napier, although attaining his 70th year this year, will be allowed to retain his post as Governor of Gibraltar, to which he was appointed in 1876 for the usual period of six years."

Col. Sir Andrew Clarke, who proceeded to India with the Marquis of Ripon, vacated his seat as a member of the Executive Council a few weeks ago, and has returned to England, has been appointed Agent-General for New South Wales.

Grenadier Guards. Capt. Mackinnon is acting as brigade-major and Lieut. Lloyd as A.D.C. to Col. Gipps, Scots Guards, commanding a brigade at Aldershot for the summer drills. Capt. Percy becomes capt. and lieut.-col., vice Villiers, seconded.

Scots Guards. Col. Gipps is commanding the 1st Brigade 1st Division at Aldershot for the summer drills.

3rd Buffs. Capt. A. Pachey, late of the regiment, died at Gravesend on the 19th ult., aged 47 years. The deceased served the campaign of 1854-55 on the medical staff (medal with clasps, and Turkish medal). He became ensign, Dec. 14, 1855 ; lieut., March 23, 1858; and capt., July 19, 1864, retiring after a few years' service in the latter rank.

4th King's Own. Col. Bray, C.B., 2nd Batn., has had to vacate his brigade command in India, on his retirement upon half-pay, under the five years' rule. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Stokes becomes lieut.-col., vice Col. Bray, C.B., Capt. Borrett obtaining the majority. Lieuts. Shephard and Gawne and 2nd Lieut. Carleton, 2nd Batn., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

5th Fusiliers. Lieut.-Col. Rowland, promoted on Tuesday last, remains with the 1st Batn., Major Oldfield joining the 1st from the 2nd Batn., and Capt. Kilgour the 2nd from the 1st Batn. The Calcutta correspondent of the Times writes, on July 11 :—"Gen. Doran's despatches describing the operations in Besud between May 19 and 24 are published in the Government Gazette. Besud, which is a very small district in the angle between the Cabul and Kunar rivers, had been for some time threatened by a gathering of Safis, under Mollah Khalil, and Brigdr. Doran, commanding the second section of the Khyber Line Force, deemed it necessary to dislodge them. Accordingly, he advanced into Besud with a small force, took several towers, and drove the enemy out of the district. The principal fort was first entered by Colour-Serjt. Woods, 1st Batn. 5th Fusiliers, who was closely followed by Capt. Kilgour, of the same regiment. Gen. Doran remarks of their conduct that a finer display of courage cannot well be imagined, and that it deserves the highest reward which valour can obtain. This recommendation has been endorsed by Gens. Stewart and Bright, and the Viceroy has expressed his entire concurrence as to the judicious and successful manner in which the operations were carried out by Gen. Doran and his officers and men."

8th King's. A correspondent writes :—"Can any of your readers inform me how Capt. A. Fawkes, 8th Regt., obtained a pension ? His name appeared in the Gazette of July 6. He is not 18 years' service till August. I know of no provision in the Warrant which gives a pension before 20 years' service. He is not even eligible for the gratuity of £2,000, on completing 18 years' service. I see he purchased his ensigncy and lieutenancy, so conclude he can have no service from the ranks. If any one can enlighten me in this, I shall feel obliged."

9th Regiment. The head-quarters and six companies of the 1st Batn. proceeded on Saturday from Kinsale to Limerick.

11th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. at Hyderabad and Bombay, has been ordered on service to Afghanistan. Lieut. Vidal, 1st Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

12th Regiment. Orders have been received at Portsmouth for a draft to be prepared from the 2nd Batn. to embark for India, to join the 1st Batn. in Afghanistan. The draft will consist of 3 serjeants, 2 drummers, 3 corporals, and 200 privates, under the command of Capt. Brereton, 81st Foot, and Lieuts. Ussher, 80th Foot, and Lloyd, 12th Foot, and will embark in H.M.S. Euphrates on the 17th prox., proceeding to Bombay viâ the Cape.

13th Light Infantry. The 1st Batn., under command of Brevet Lieut.-Col. England, underwent an official inspection at Raglan Barracks, Devonport, on Monday, for the first time since June, 1877, when they were paraded before Sir Arthur Cunynghame in Pretoria, South Africa. The field-state was—38 serjeants, 15 buglers, 28 corporals, and 494 privates, with two depôt companies of about 100.

14th Regiment. A draft is ordered to be prepared from the 1st Batn., at Parkhurst, to embark for India, to join the 2nd Batn. at Peshawur. The draft will consist of 2nd Lieut. Watts, one serjeant, two corporals, and 100 men, under the command of Capt. Clayton, 34th Foot, and Lieut. Lloyd, 1st Batn., 24th Foot. The draft is to be in readiness to embark in H.M.S. Euphrates on Aug. 17 for Bombay, viâ the Cape.

17th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Thompson, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Bombay Staff Corps. Capt Gordon has been gazetted adjutant of the 1st Suffolk Rifle Volunteers.

18th Royal Irish. Capt. Blair, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months, on medical certificate. Capt. Phillips, who was promoted on Tuesday, remains with the 1st Batn.

19th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Barrett has received orders to hold the 2nd Batn. in readiness to leave Aldershot for Sheffield, to relieve the 76th.

20th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. is to remain at the Curragh for the winter, and the detachment at Mullingar will rejoin head-quarters at the end of the month. Capt. Festing, promoted on Tuesday, is transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn.

21st Fusiliers. We regret to learn of the death of Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. A. G. Hazlerigg, 2nd Batn., which occurred at Pretoria, Transvaal, on the 16th inst. The deceased officer was the eldest son of Sir A. G. Hazlerigg, Bart. He was 43 years of age, and entered the Army Jan. 16, 1855 ; became lieut., May 11, 1855; capt., Sept. 11, 1860; brevet major, May 15, 1873 ; major, May 23, 1874 ; and brevet lieut.-col., Nov. 29, 1879. He served with the regiment during the latter part of 1855 at the siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with clasp, and Turkish medal). Served in the Zulu war of 1879 in command of the 2nd Batn., and was present at the engagement at Ulundi, (mentioned in despatches, brevet of lieut.-col.) Commanded the battalion during the operations against Sekukuni in 1879, including the storming of the stronghold (mentioned in despatches). Brevet Major Bainbridge will, no doubt, obtain the majority thus rendered vacant.

22nd Regiment. The 1st Batn. proceeds shortly from the Curragh to Newry, furnishing a detachment to Newry. Brevet Major Molyneux, A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Peyton at Aldershot, is employed as A.A.G. of the 1st Infantry Division for the drill season ; Capt. Hare as A.A.G. to the 2nd Division. Lieut. Ussher, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months, on medical certificate.

24th Regiment. Capts. Browne, V.C., and Curteis, promoted on Tuesday, remain with the 1st Batn. Lieut. Lloyd, 1st Batn., is a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, and leaves England for Bombay on the 17th prox., in the Euphrates.

26th Cameronians. A shooting-match was fired on Saturday at the Milton Ranges between seven serjeants of the regiment and seven of the Royal Engineers. The distances were 200, 500, and 600 yards, the Cameronians scoring 540 and the Royal Engineers 533. The victors have reason to be proud of their victory, the Royal Engineers' team not having been beaten for a period of four years. The match was a very close and exciting one throughout, and whilst the last two or three shots were being fired, it was impossible to say which would be the winners.

28th Regiment will leave the Curragh about the 31st inst. for Fermoy.

34th Regiment. Capt. Clayton is ordered to be in readiness to embark for India on the 14th prox. in the Euphrates, in charge of a draft for the 2nd Batn. 14th, proceeding viâ the Cape.

35th Regiment. The following obituary notice of the late Major Barnes appears in the Kimberley paper of the 14th ult. :—"We regret to hear of the death of Major Edward R. B. Barnes, 35th Regiment, which occurred at the Carnarvon Hospital on Friday morning last. The deceased was the third son of Major Barnes, formerly magistrate of Caledon, and in the Kaffir war of 1852 he served as an officer of the native levies, and was present at several engagements. Obtaining his commission in the Army in 1854, Major Barnes was, after a varied service in all quarters of the globe, selected as one of the special officers for service in the Zulu campaign, but landed when that war was practically at an end. Owing to his knowledge of the Dutch language, he was offered the post of Commissioner in the Bloemhof district by the Transvaal Government, and subsequently became Acting Landdrost at Christiana, on the death of Mr. Best. Unwilling to leave his post, and away from medical advice when suffering from diabetes, Major Barnes's health gradually gave way, and when removal to Kimberley became imperative he was in a most critical state. Pneumonia set in, and death followed after five weeks, in spite of careful nursing and unremitting attendance. The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon with military honours. The procession left the hospital at half-past three, headed by a firing party of the G. W. Constabulary with reversed arms, under the command of Capt. Ramsay Steuart. The coffin was drawn on a gun-carriage of the G. W. Artillery by six horses, a Union Jack served as pall, surmounted by the sword, sash, and helmet of the deceased. The pall-bearers were the Colonial Secretary, the Attorney-General, the Treasurer-General, the Auditor-General, Major Maxwell, Inspector-General of Prisons, and Major Rolleston, C.M.G., commanding Diamond Field Horse. His Honour the Administrator and Lieut.-Col. Moysey, R.E., were chief mourners, followed by Capt. Ward, mining surveyor, Mr. Hayes, late 33rd Regt., and others. The rear was formed by the G.W. Artillery, under command of Capt. Runchman. Three volleys over the grave marked the last salute to the remains of a soldier cut off at the age of 46, leaving in England a wife and children to mourn his untimely loss."

ROYAL MARINES.

The exact number to which the Royal Marines are to be recruited is 12,750, that being the number provided for in the Navy Estimates for 1880-81, for although the authorised strength shown in the Estimates is 13,000, an abatement is made in providing for pay, &c., for 250 men "assumed to be short borne throughout the year." This order for recruiting, which was accompanied by an increase in the standard of height, is at least sufficient to show that the rumours of reduction have been without foundation, and the admission of five lieutenants to the Royal Marine Artillery should also prove that the abolition of the blue Marines is not a very likely thing to happen at the present moment.—Hampshire Telegraph.

53rd Regiment. Capt. Mein has been gazetted adjutant of the 2nd Shropshire Rifle Volunteers.

60th Rifles. Capt. Crosbie, who was aide-de-camp to Sir T. Steele at Aldershot, acts as extra A.D.C. to Sir D. Lysons for the drill season. The following correspondence will prove interesting to the friends of the 2nd Batn. :—"No. 862 K. D.A.G. and Q.M.G.'s Office, Ghuznee Field Force, Kabul, May 7, 1880. To the officer commanding 2nd Batn. 60th Rifles. Sir,—I am desired by Lieut.-Gen. Sir Donald Stewart, K.C.B., to acknowledge the services of the company (G) 2nd Batn. 60th Rifles which has formed part of the Lieut.-Gen.'s escort during the march from Kandahar, and for some weeks previous. 2. The conduct of the men of the company has at all times been exemplary, and the manner in which duty has been performed reflects the greatest credit upon the officer in command. 3. Lieut. A. Davidson has been in command of the whole escort—one company 2nd Batn. 60th Rifles, one troop 19th Bengal Cavalry, and one company 25th Punjab N.I.—and has been entrusted with the control of the head-quarters camp. In the exercise of his responsible duties he has shown much judgment, and Sir Donald desires to place on record his appreciation of the good services he has rendered. 4. To Lieuts. Davidson and Couper Sir Donald would express his thanks for the unfailing attention with which his wishes have at all times been met, and for the zeal and alacrity displayed upon all occasions.—I have, &c., (signed) E. F. Chapman, lieut.-col., D.A.G., and Q.M.G. Forwarded for communication to Lieut. Davidson, with the congratulations and best wishes of R. Barter, brig.-gen., commanding 1st Brig. Camp Jubber, May 16, 1880." The following casualties occurred in the company alluded to :—Colour-Serjt. Chessum, Pte. Blake, and Pte. Ward, all three killed in action at Ahmed Kheyl on April 19; Bugler Fitzpatrick, severely wounded at Ahmed Kheyl on April 19; and in the other companies of the battalion, Pte. Bungay, severely wounded on April 19 at Ahmed Kheyl; Pte. Crook, killed in action on April 23, at Urzoo." Lieut. Holbech obtains his company, vice Capt. de Robeck, retired.

64th Regiment. The regiment will leave the Curragh and proceed to Templemore at the end of this month. Capt. Richardson has been granted leave of absence to the 30th inst., on which date he will assume duty as adjt. of the 3rd Royal Lancashire Militia.

65th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. W. C. Newhouse, formerly of this regiment, who died a few days since, at St. Kilda's, the Park, Cheltenham, in his 80th year, entered the Army in Sept. 1815, and served in the Light Division of the Deccan Army in the Mahratta war of 1817 and 1818 as extra aide-de-camp to Sir Lionel Smith, commanded a rassela of the Poona Auxiliary Cavalry, and was wounded and had his horse shot in the cavalry charge at the battle of Ashta, in 1818. For his services at the battle and taking of Poona in 1817 he received a medal. He obtained his commission as lieut. in 1818, and subsequently served in two expeditions to Cutch, the first in 1819, under Sir W. K. Grant, in which he volunteered with the grenadier company of the 65th in the storming of the hill fort of Bhooj, which was taken by escalade; the second, in 1820, with the right wing of the 65th, with the force under Col. the Hon. L. Stanhope. He served also on two expeditions to the Gulf of Persia, the first in 1819, under Sir W. K. Grant, and the second in 1821, under Sir L. Smith. He attained the rank of lieut.-col. in 1854, and subsequently retired.

70th Regiment. Extract from Indian Army orders:—"Col. H. de R. Pigott, 70th Foot, who was removed from the command of his regiment on June 21, 1880, is, at his own request, permitted to proceed to England at once."

71st Highland Light Infantry. Capt. Craigie is acting as brigade-major on the staff of Major-Gen. Spurgin, C.B., C.S.I., commanding the 2nd Division at Aldershot for the summer drills.

75th Regiment. Brevet Major Essex is acting as A.Q.M.G. on the staff of Major-Gen. Spurgin, C.B., C.S.I., commanding the 2nd Division of the Field Force at Aldershot for the summer drills. Lieut. Woodward obtains his company, vice Capt. Cotton, retired on a pension.

76th Regiment. The regiment is under orders of readiness to proceed from Sheffield to Ireland, where it will occupy quarters at Kinsale.

77th Regiment. The depôt companies, with Capt. Jervis-White and Lieut. Norton, returned to Hounslow on the 17th inst., on the conclusion of the annual course of target practice at Aldershot. There is a vacancy for a subaltern at the depôt, occasioned by the retirement of Lieut. Wodehouse.

79th Highlanders. Lieut. Chalmers obtains the company, vacant by the retirement of Brevet Major Campbell on pension.

80th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Ussher leaves England on the 17th prox. in the Euphrates for India, viâ the Cape, en route to join a native regiment as a probationer for the Staff Corps.

81st Regiment. Capt. Brereton is under orders to embark in the Euphrates on the 17th prox., in charge of a draft of the 2nd Batn. 12th, proceeding to India viâ the Cape.

82nd Regiment. Brevet Major Cardew is acting as A.Q.M.G. of the 1st Infantry Division at Aldershot for the drill season.

83rd Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Barnett has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

84th Regiment is to proceed to the Curragh from Dublin.

85th Light Infantry. Lieut. Bulman, having passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee, has been appointed interpreter, vice Lieut. Spens.

87th Fusiliers. The regiment has arrived at Guernsey from Ireland and relieved the 107th. The Irish Times says:—"The departure of the regiment from Limerick will be regretted, and as a proof of the feeling of the inhabitants, the Corporation met in full council, and on the motion of Alderman Cleary, seconded by Town Councillor Hardiman, it was resolved to ask the War Office authorities to prolong the stay of the regiment in Limerick for another year. Great festivities, in anticipation of the removal of the regiment, have ensued, but mingled with regret. Capt. Mark and Mrs. Maunsell have given the officers a grand farewell dinner, to which many of the élite of Limerick were invited. The company numbered over one hundred. On the next evening the officers of the 7th Hussars gave a valedictory entertainment in the Club House, at which most of the notabilities of the city and county were present."

88th Regiment. Lieut. Wyncoll is a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, and has been appointed to do duty with the 3rd Punjab Infantry, on probation.

90th Light Infantry. Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Hackett, who lost the sight of both his eyes from a terrible wound received at the battle of Kambula, had the honour of being presented to the Queen and Princess Beatrice at Windsor Castle on Saturday last. He was accompanied by his brother, Col. T. B. Hackett, V.C. (late Royal Welsh Fusiliers), who also had the honour of being present at the interview.

94th Regiment. Capt. G. R. S. Bowlby died in the Transvaal on the 12th inst., of injuries received from a wounded leopard. The deceased entered the Army, May 20, 1864; became lieut., August 7, 1866; and capt., Jan. 25, 1871.

95th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Crealock, C.B., from the Supernumerary List, obtains the command, vice Col. Parkinson, who has been placed upon half-pay, on completing his five years in the rank of lieut.-col.

97th Regiment. Lieut. C. N. Bulley was drowned whilst bathing off Macnab's Island, Halifax, N.S., on the 11th inst. The deceased, who was 29 years of age, entered the Service, August 21, 1872.

98th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Simpson has obtained leave from Malta from the 4th inst. to Nov. 14, to proceed to England on private affairs, Major Heathcote commanding the regiment in his absence. Capt. Sparks, A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Peyton, at Aldershot, is employed as brigade-major on the staff of Col. Macpherson, C.B., commanding a brigade for the summer drills. Lieut. Reeves embarks about the end of the month for Malta, to join head-quarters from depôt duty.

100th Regiment. Col. Cook is about to retire on a pension.

104th Fusiliers. Major Boswell has been detailed for two years' duty with the depôt at Tralee, in the place of Major Pigou, retired on pension. Capt. Alcock is a candidate for an appointment to the Army Pay Department, and has joined the pay office of the Royal Horse Artillery at Dublin, on probation.

105th Light Infantry. The regiment moves from Newry to Mullingar about the end of the week. Major Wilkinson succeeds to the command, vice Col. Bell, placed upon half-pay on Tuesday, on completing five years in command, Capt. Way becoming major.

106th Light Infantry. Major Girardot is named for the command, vice Lieut.-Col. Robertson, who has retired upon a pension.

107th Regiment has proceeded during the week from Guernsey to Ireland in H.M.S. Assistance, having been relieved by the 87th Fusiliers. Capt. Rind becomes major, vice Major Goad, retired upon half-pay.

Rifle Brigade. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Nicholl, 1st Batn., is commanding the 2nd Brigade 2nd Division of the Army Corps at Aldershot for the summer drill, Capt. Lascelles acting as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Spurgin, C.B., C.S.I., commanding the 2nd Division, and Capt. Eccles as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Peyton, commanding the 1st Division. Capt. Wingfield-Stratford is transferred from the 2nd to the 4th Batn. on promotion. Capt. Montgomery, adjt. of the Kildare Rifles, has passed the qualifying examination for promotion to major. Qrmr. Richer, 3rd Batn., will shortly appear before a board of officers to test his fitness for promotion to the rank of Lieut.

Commissariat and Transport Department. On the 9th inst., Nos. 10 and 16 Companies, Army Service Corps, with a detachment of No. 15 Company, proceeded by route march from Woolwich, under the command of Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Parkyn, to Aldershot. The order for this move was only received late on the evening of the 8th, extra transport being required to assist in moving the Army Corps from Aldershot to Ascot and Chobham, preparatory for the review at Windsor. No. 6 Company, under the command of Deputy-Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Noake, also proceeded from Portsmouth; this company returned on the 16th inst. No. 16 Company, with detachments of Nos. 1 and 15 Companies, returned to Woolwich on the 20th inst., No. 10 Company remaining at Aldershot for the present, to be made available for the summer drills. Considerable disappointment was felt amongst the rank and file of the corps at not being permitted to take part in the march past at Windsor. On the evening of the 16th the officers of the Woolwich detachment entertained Deputy-Comy.-Gen. Irvine, C.B., commanding, and the officers of the Aldershot detachment at dinner in their mess-tent, when a very pleasant gathering took place. Pte. Cordham, of this corps, died at Epsom, on the 20th inst., where he had been left ill. It seems strange that with a large number of men marching through the country, no medical officer should be detailed to accompany them.

Medical Department. At the suggestion of the Surgeon-Gen. with the Government of India, the under-mentioned designations have been assigned to the officers concerned:—Surgeon-general with the Government of India; surgeon-general with the Government of Madras; surgeon-general with the Government of Bombay; surgeon-general, Bengal; surgeon-general, North-West Provinces and Oudh; surgeon-general, Punjab; and deputy-surgeon-general, Central Provinces. Brigade-Surg. J. Hannan died suddenly at Simla on the 14th ult. Surgs.-Major W. J. Wilson and G. Hare have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Army Hospital Corps. Lieut.-Col. S. G. Bunbury, Capt. on the Retired Full-Pay List, died at Pembroke House, Freemantle, Southampton, on the 11th inst,, aged 62 years. The deceased obtained his commission as ensign, June 28, 1833; became lieut., Dec. 25, 1838; capt., Dec. 20, 1846; major, June 6, 1856; and retired upon full-pay, with the hon. rank of lieut.-col., July 1, 1863.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Royal Flint. Capt. Knox, 23rd Foot, has been selected for the adjutancy, vacant by the promotion of Brevet Major Walwyn to a majority in his regiment.

2nd Royal Lancashire. The Liverpool Daily Courier says:—"The 2nd Royal Lancashire Militia have completed their first encampment at Altcar, and owing to the large number of wet days it cannot have been a very comfortable one. Moreover, the driest ground was not selected for the site. Much better camping-ground could have been obtained within a short distance, but we presume the landowners were not agreeable to its being so used. Some people anticipated all sorts of disorders and depredations from the encampment, but the conduct of the men was, on the whole, very good."

3rd Royal Lancashire. Lord Winmarleigh, better known as Col. J. Wilson Patten, mentioned the fact at the inspection of last week that he had been connected with the regiment for fifty years, during thirty of which he had been in command. Lord Winmarleigh has been honorary colonel of the regiment since 1872, after holding the active command since 1842. Brevet Major Berkeley, late adjutant of this regiment, who acted as brigade-major to the 3rd Brigade (1st, 64th, and 80th L.R.V.) at Southport, has returned to the 47th Foot, being promoted to a regimental majority.

Royal London. Major W. S. Mackenzie died at his residence, Carlyle Square, on the 18th inst. The deceased officer was formerly in the 93rd Highlanders and 84th Regiment. He served with the 93rd Highlanders in the Indian campaign of 1857-59, including the action of Khudagunge, siege and capture of Lucknow, with assault of the Martiniere and storming of the Begum's Palace, capture of Methowlie, and battle of Biswa (medal, with clasp). He left the 84th as captain about ten years ago, and was appointed major in the Royal London Militia April 24, 1877.

Norfolk Artillery. Capt. Trafford entertained at his residence at Princes Gate, on the 21st ult., H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, to meet whom the following officers were invited:—Lieut.-Col. Lord Suffield, K.C.B., Majors the Hon. Harbord Harbord and Alderson; Capts. Partridge, Keppel, Sir W. ffolkes, Bart., M.P., and Pratt; Lieuts. Sancroft Holmes, Dawson, Preston, Hon. A. Harbord, and Surg.-Major Aldred. The occasion was chosen for presenting Capt. Moore Lane, R.A., with a testimonial, on his retirement from the adjutancy of the regiment. After the dinner, which was of the most recherché description, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, in his own name, as honorary colonel of the regiment, and in that of the officers of the P.W.O.N.M.A., presented Capt. Moore Lane with a handsome silver tea-service, consisting of kettle, tea-pot, milk-jug, cream-jug, and sugar-basin. His Royal Highness said he trusted it would be received by him as a memento of the kindly feeling and respect for the assistance he had rendered the officers in bringing the regiment into its present high state of efficiency, at the same time assuring him of their best wishes for his future welfare. Capt. Moore Lane in brief speech acknowledged and expressed his thanks for the valuable gift, and also for the kind and handsome terms in which his Royal Highness had spoken of him. We understand that the Hon. H. Denison, brother of Lord Londesborough, is to succeed Capt. Moore Lane as adjutant of the regiment.

Aberdeenshire Highlanders. Capt. Lord Inverurie has succeeded to the earldom of Kintore, by the death of his father.

Antrim Artillery. Major Ogle, R.M.A., on leaving the regiment, after upwards of four years' service as adjt., has been presented with a silver claret jug and stand, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to Major Ogle, R.M.A., by the officers of the Antrim Artillery Militia as a token of their regard and esteem, and in recognition of the valuable service he has rendered their regiment during his official connection with it."

Limerick City Artillery. The regiment assembles for its annual training on Monday at Tarbert, and will be dismissed on Aug. 21. The recruits have been in preliminary training since May 3.

The Glamorgan Light Infantry, called out on the 26th ult., were dismissed on Thursday. The following regiments will be dismissed to-day at the places indicated:—Royal Cumberland, Carlisle; 1st Royal Lancashire, Lancaster; 3rd Royal Lancashire, Preston; 6th Royal Lancashire, Ashton; Royal London, Finsbury; 2nd Somerset, Bath; Royal Sussex, Chichester; Royal Westmoreland, Carlisle; 6th West York, Halifax; Queen's Edinburgh, Glencorse; Fife Artillery, Cupar; Forfar Artillery, Montrose; West Cork Artillery, Kinsale; Dublin County, Curragh; Dublin City, Curragh; Galway, Loughrea; Galway Artillery, Galway; King's County Rifles, Birr; Longford Rifles, Longford; Queen's County Rifles, Maryborough; Tipperary Artillery, Duncannon; Tipperary Light Infantry, Clonmel.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

The Middlesex, which assembled at Twickenham on the 17th inst., completes its training to-day. The Northumberland was dismissed at Newcastle-on-Tyne on Friday. The 2nd West York assembles on Monday at Harrogate.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

8th Lancashire Artillery. At an undress parade of the regiment at Sefton Barracks, Liverpool, Lieut.-Col. Inman presented to Major Furlong, late adjutant, in the name of the regiment, an illuminated address, with a purse of 100 guineas, subscribed for by past and present members of the corps. In handing the testimonial to Major Furlong, Col. Inman expressed most feelingly the high respect which all ranks had for him, and their deep regret at his retirement.

1st London Artillery. The annual inspection of the regiment took place at Wellington Barracks on Saturday last, when Col. Waller, commanding Auxiliary Artillery for the Home and Woolwich Districts, saw the corps go through gun drill and repository work, in addition to the march-past and manual and firing exercise. Col. Waller was well pleased with the appearance and drill of the men. The parade total was 336, under Major Wegg-Prosser.

40th Middlesex Rifles. The regiment suffers a great loss by the resignation of Major Miller, who has retired, after fourteen years' service, to the regret of all ranks, from lieutenant-colonel downwards. For years past this officer has been the life and soul of the corps, whilst his liberality has been unbounded, and the present high position which the 40th has attained is in no small degree due to his exertions, and the excellent example he set for many years by attending every parade—squad, company, or battalion—representing some 200 attendances a year. A more zealous Volunteer never enrolled himself in the force, and it will be difficult for the 40th to fill the place of one so deservedly esteemed.

Seven out of eleven Liverpool regiments now wear the helmet, viz., the 1st, 4th, 6th, and 8th Artillery, 1st Engineers, and 1st and 80th Rifles. The 2nd Artillery retain the bushby, and the 5th, 15th, and 64th Rifles retain the shako.

Col. Logan, C.B., commanding the 49th and 50th Sub-Districts, had five of the corps in connection with his command out for brigade drill on Saturday last in Regent's Park. The battalions stood in line as follows from the right:—9th Middlesex (Major Mears), 265; 46th Middlesex (Lieut.-Col. Routledge), about 230; 40th Middlesex (Major Alt), 356; 3rd Middlesex (Lieut.-Col. Warner), 376; and 29th Middlesex (Lieut.-Col. Brown), 452. Col. Logan, before leaving the ground, assembled the commanding officers, and desired them to inform their men that he was greatly pleased with the manner in which the several evolutions had been carried out.

Obituary.

Gen. Sir Maurice Stack, K.C.B., late of the 3rd Bombay Cavalry, died on Tuesday, at the Hayes, Prestbury. He was born in the year 1796, and entered the Indian Army in 1815, became Capt. in 1826, Major in 1839, and Lieut.-Col. in 1843; commanded a brigade in the campaign in Scinde in 1843, under Sir Charles Napier; became Col. and Major-Gen. in 1854, Lieut.-Gen. in 1868, and Gen. in 1873.

Admiral the Right Hon. George, Earl of Dalhousie, C.B., who died on the night of the 20th inst., was born April 26, 1806. He entered the Navy in 1820, and previous to his promotion to lieutenant, in 1827, was engaged on several occasions with the pirates of the Mediterranean, and was afterwards employed in South America, on the coast of Ireland, for three years off Lisbon, at Sheerness, and in the Mediterranean. He was promoted to commander, Jan. 10, 1837, and commanded the Pilot on the North-American station from 1838 to 1842, and was posted March 20, 1843. He was captain of the Alarm on the last-named station from Aug. 1849 to 1853; of the Euryalus in the Baltic, and again in North America, from 1853 to 1857; and the Saturn, at Pembroke, from July, 1857, until promoted to flag rank, Nov. 22, 1862. He was subsequently commander-in-chief on the South-East Coast of America, with his flag in the Narcissus, screw-frigate, from May 7, 1866, until promoted to vice-admiral, March 17, 1869; and became admiral on the Retired List, July 30, 1875.

Com. William Stocker Robins died at Peckham on the 18th inst., in his 89th year. He entered the Navy Feb. 1, 1807, on board the Hyacinth, and, during upwards of four years that he continued in that vessel, assisted in blockading two French frigates in the Scheldt, and was for a long time employed in South America, particularly in the Rio de la Plata, where he was present when the Buenos Ayreans declared their independence of the mother-country. On the Hyacinth being paid off in May, 1811, he joined the Hannibal, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Philip Chas. Durham, previously to following whom into the Christian VII. he served in the Baltic, and was stationed with five sail of the line off the Texel for the purpose of intercepting the expected departure of a Dutch squadron. After he had for eight months performed the duties of master's mate in the Cossack, in which vessel he was wounded in the leg at the defence of Cadiz, where he remained until the siege was raised, he joined, in Nov. 1812, the Kent, at Plymouth, at which port he removed, in Jan. 1813, to the Salvador del Mundo. Being again, in the ensuing March, placed under the orders of his former captain, Carter, in the Thracian, he was at first employed in that vessel, with three others of a similar description, in blockading five brigs-of-war at Christiansand, on the coast of Norway. On Feb. 7, 1814, he contributed to the capture, off St. Valéry, of the French privateer Emille; and on subsequently proceeding to the West Indies was actively employed in the boats, and was on one occasion slightly wounded in the head in endeavouring to suppress the trade of the United States. In Oct. 1815, at which period he had been acting for more than seven months as Lieut. of the Thracian, he took up a commission bearing date March 17 in that year. From Feb. 1821 until April, 1824, he filled an appointment in the Coastguard in the Isle of Wight; and on Oct. 14, 1863, retired with the rank of commander.

With the laudable object of promoting the comfort and sobriety of the British soldier in the establishment of a military coffee tavern in the garrison of Woolwich, the beautiful park of Sir Spencer Maryon Wilson, at Old Charlton, was devoted on Monday to a military tournament. The commandant of the Woolwich District, Major-Gen. Turner, R.A., was present, and the proceedings were well managed by a committee, of whom Col. Spurway, R.A., was president; and Col. Stirling, C.B., R.A., Col. Chichester, 5th Lancers, Major Duncan, R.A., Capt. Anstruther, R.A., Qrmr. Donnelly, A.S.C., and Riding-master Dann, R.A., were members. The gymnastic school from Woolwich performed on the vaulting horse, horizontal bar, and parallels; and the ordained series of tilting at the ring, tent-pegging, lemon-cutting, and single combats of various degrees were successfully gone through by officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the various regiments in the locality, and there was a spirited tug of war, and a polo match between the Ranelagh and Sussex teams to wind up the sports.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1880.

IT is no unusual thing to hear the discharge of two men, the one by ignominy, and the other by indulgence, read out on the same parade, thus bringing into high relief the anomaly presented by the existing system of dealing with incorrigible characters. That one man should pay a large sum to obtain that which another receives as the reward of bad-conduct, is evidently a matter for surprise. But however anomalous the fact may be, it results, from a logical sequence of argument. No army can be maintained in a due state of efficiency unless the services of the men are secured for a fixed period of time, and that period must be made to depend upon the relative proportions of the desired strength of the Army, and of the annual contingent of recruits that enter it. For this reason, soldiers must be enlisted for a given number of years, and under no circumstances can they be permitted to claim their discharge before their term of service has expired. At the same time, it is possible to allow a certain number to be discharged annually as an indulgence, thus affording a means of avoiding individual cases of hardship. As, however, a recruit costs the country as much as a thoroughly-trained soldier, and as during his recruit service he does not add to the available strength of the Army, it would not do to discharge men freely before they have made some return to the country for the money expended upon them. It is thus that a scale of payment has been arrived at, in which the money payment is gradually reduced as the man's length of service is increased, until he may obtain a free discharge. So far, the system is based on justice and good-sense. Let us now turn to the discharge with ignominy. It has always been the endeavour of our officers to inculcate a respect for the Queen's uniform. Badly behaved men are constantly told that they are a disgrace to the regiment, and it is to carry out this idea that men are discharged with ignominy. Even putting the more sentimental side of the question out of view, there is undoubtedly much truth in the old proverb, that evil communications corrupt good manners. One or two bad characters in a room will often infect the whole of their comrades, and long lists of defaulters will testify to their malign influence. To free the Army of such men is a matter of necessity, and hitherto the discharge with ignominy has been used as the sole method of so doing. The anomaly we have pointed out has even been denied. Much stress has been laid on the fact that the good character given with the man discharged by indulgence makes all the difference between the two cases; and so, undoubtedly, it should do. We ourselves are prepared to go even further, and admit that even the existence of the anomaly does not necessarily prove the system to be bad, if it work well in other ways; but if the testimony of company officers may be taken, it would appear that bad results very often accrue. There are a large number of men always in the Army who are anxious to quit the Service. That this should be so is the inevitable result of the men being bound for several years by the impulse of a single day. Some begin their repentance for their hasty enlistment the very day after it has been made. With some the regret is due to the innate restlessness of human nature. Be this how it may, there can be little doubt that a very large number of men would take their discharge to-morrow were it offered to them. Of such cases, a small number receive their discharge by indulgence, and are satisfied. A large number reconcile themselves to the inevitable, and serve on, frequently becoming so much attached to the profession as to be unfeignedly sorry when their time expires. But besides these, there is another class which is very evilly affected by the present system. Men who have already earned a bad character see in the discharge by ignominy a means of freeing themselves from a service they detest. To accomplish their object, they either enter upon a prolonged career of insubordination, absence, and other military offences, or by committing felony obtain their discharge at once. To put an end to the rewarding of crime, by permitting its success in the object at which it aims, would undoubtedly be a subject for congratulation. It is for this purpose that we advocate the adoption of an idea that has been mooted from time to time. The French Army has found that the formation of penal regiments for service in Algeria has been an effective means of preserving discipline at home. In a similar manner, we would suggest that our incorrigible characters should not be dismissed the Army, but should be sent to complete their service in special battalions raised for colonial service. The West Coast of Africa, the West Indies, St. Helena, and so-forth, would be admirable stations for trying the experiment, while the remainder of the Service would benefit by the relief they would experience in the most unpopular portion of our Army's duties. The officers and non-commissioned officers should be well paid to recompense them for the somewhat unpleasant duties they would have to perform. To assist them in maintaining discipline, they should be able to hold out the hope of exchange to other regiments to such men as behaved themselves well. Were such a system carried out, we believe that a very marked diminution in crime would soon be apparent in the Army.

We understand, notwithstanding the opposition of a small but distinguished branch of the Army, Prince Albert Victor of Wales will, as we were enabled to state last year, commence the course of studies which is to fit him for the military profession at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.

We are requested to state that the sword of honour presented to Lord Chelmsford by the citizens of Pietermaritzburg will remain for a short time on view at the show-rooms of the manufacturers, Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, New Bond Street.

General Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., commanding Aldershot District, proceeded to Windsor Castle on Friday week, on a visit to her Majesty. General Sir Lintorn Simmons, G.C.B., inspector-general of fortifications; Major-General Sir F. W. J. Fitzwygram, Bart., inspector-general of cavalry; and Major-General F. Peyton, commanding 3rd Infantry Brigade at Aldershot, arrived at the Castle on Saturday. Her Majesty's dinner party on Saturday included H.R.H. Princess Beatrice, Lady Abercromby, Lady Southampton, Earl Granville, K.G., General Sir Lintorn Simmons, G.C.B., Major-Generals Sir F. W. J. Fitzwygram, Bart., and F. Peyton, Mr. J. F. Campbell of Islay, and Captain Edwards, R.E. General Sir L. Simmons and Major-Generals Fitzwygram and Peyton left the Castle on Sunday. These invitations to the Royal table will be duly appreciated by the Army, which is honoured in the persons of its officers.

The appointment of Assistant-Adjutant-General for Recruiting in the Home District is about to become vacant by the promotion of Colonel J. Peel, half-pay, late of a Depôt Battalion. Colonel Peel has held the appointment since May, 1876.

It is arranged that General Sir Lintorn Simmons, C.B., shall vacate his appointment as Inspector-General of Fortifications at the War Office on the 1st prox., when he will be succeeded by Major-General T. J. L. Gallwey, R.E.

We are authorised to state that the Committee for the erection of a memorial to the late Prince Imperial having withdrawn their proposal to place it in Henry VII.'s Chapel, the Queen has been most graciously pleased to offer a site in St. George's, Windsor, where the monument will now be erected.

Major J. J. N. Buchanan, half-pay, late 5th Dragoon Guards, has been appointed Brigade-Major of the troops at the Mauritius, vice Captain E. L. Pelly-Clarke, 103rd Fusiliers.

We understand that an early Gazette will contain the announcement of the appointment of four cadets from the Royal Military College of Canada to commissions in the Army. One appointment is to be made to the Royal Artillery, one to the Royal Engineers, and one to the Cavalry and one to the Infantry of the Line, and an arrangement has been come to with the War Office by which this number of appointments will be offered annually to those cadets who take the highest places in passing out of the institution at Kingston, Ontario.

The staff of the Royal Canadian Military College is constituted as follows:—Commandant Lieutenant-Colonel E. O. Hewett, R.E., Professor of fortification, geometrical drawing, and descriptive geometry, Lieutenant-Colonel J. R. Oliver, R.A., Professor of mathematics and artillery, Major E. Kensington, R.A., Captain of cadets, Major J. B. Rideout, 90th Foot, Professor of military topography and civil surveying, Major G. R. Walker, R.E., Professor of military history, administration, and law, Major D. F. Jones, R.A., Additional professor of mathematics and artillery, Captain S. G. Fairtlough, R.A., Instructor of fortification, geometrical drawing, and military engineering, Captain M. H. P. Sankey, R.E., assisted by five civilian professors for German, freehand drawing, French, civil engineering, and experimental and natural sciences.

H.R.H. the Duchess of Connaught has kindly promised to lay the foundation-stone of the new church, in the North Camp district of Farnborough, on Monday next, at 1.30 o'clock.

There is reason to believe that the recent famous lecture on the geology of the Horse Guards, in which the "boulder period" was especially treated of, secured the honour for the lecturer of a letter from the Boulder-in-Chief, which disputed some of the conclusions of the learned professor. His remarks on the state of the military stage-coach are also said to have attracted attention and criticism from the same quarter.

A meeting of the Commissioners of the Royal Patriotic Fund was held at 5 St. Martin's Place, Trafalgar Square, on Monday. Present:—H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge (president), the Duke of Somerset, Earl Chichester, Earl Nelson, Lord Winmarleigh, Sir R. Dacres, Sir A. Stransham, Sir J. Henry Lefroy, Admiral Hamilton, General Eyre, and Mr. J. Ball. Mr. W. H. Mugford, the secretary, also attended.

The present Government cannot fairly be blamed for the delay in applying to the Admiralty and the War Office the provisions of the Order in Council of 1876, authorising extra duty pay (not exceeding £100 a year) for clerks of the Lower Division when employed upon certain work. The truth is, that in both these departments the duties for which the extra pay would be issuable are to a great extent discharged by gentlemen belonging to the Upper Division of the Service, and while this is the case the provisions of the Order can only be applied to a very limited extent. The system of employing clerks of the Lower Division upon some of the detail work in the Admiralty and the War Office has answered so well since it was introduced a few years ago, that it might be largely extended under proper supervision. To effect such a reform it might, doubtless, be requisite for Parliament to pass a further Act for reorganising the Admiralty and the War Office, similar to that of 1878. Under such an Act, it is believed that it would be possible, and desirable, to retire a considerable number of the gentlemen of the Upper Division and replace them by officials of the Lower Division, non-commissioned officers, and copyists. This would lead ultimately to a considerable saving in these departments, and would provide a further opening for the employment of deserving non-commissioned officers.

Mr. MacIver, M.P., is seeking to help the soldier as well as the sailor, by advocating his interest at the War Office. On Monday the hon. member presented a memorial to the Secretary of War from several leading firms in Plymouth, praying that the present system of supplying the "extra messing" for the regiments should be abandoned for one (in accordance with the Queen's Regulations) by which the contracts would be taken through the Commissariat or thrown open to public competition. By this change a substantial benefit would arise to the soldier and to the Exchequer. The memorialists allege that the deduction of 3½d. a day need only be 2d., and that the saving in a regiment of 500 would be 1½d. a day per man, or £3 a day to the regiment. The Secretary for the War Department has promised to take up the matter at once, and we may soon look for an alteration in which the soldier would be a gainer as well as the public.

Having regard to the distinguished service performed by the 1st Battalion 13th Light Infantry at the Cape, we cannot think that the Authorities have it seriously in contemplation to rob the regiment of the promotion which is due to it by the retirement of Lieutenant-Colonel Brown from the command of the 2nd Battalion. The behaviour of all ranks in Zululand reflected credit not only on the regiment, but on the whole Army, and it would be a great injustice to a most deserving body of officers to deny them their promotion after the devotion they have shown.

Colonel R. T. Glyn, C.B., half-pay, late 24th Regiment, who was gazetted to the lieutenant-colonelcy of a Brigade Depôt on Tuesday, vice Colonel C. M'C. Cotton, has been posted to the Brecon Sub-District, to which the depôts of his old regiment are attached.

We should have added to the list of six employed Artillery Generals in our issue last week Lieutenant-General W. G. Hatch and Major-Generals R. Cadell, C.B., and N. G. Campbell, Inspector-Generals of Ordnance in Bombay, Madras, and Bengal respectively, opposite whose names in the establishment of General officers in the Army List no mention is made of such or indeed any employment.

It is not to be wondered at that foreign papers should indulge in expressions of satisfaction at the poor display of military force which Great Britain makes at home, seeing that her maritime supremacy is at the present hour, with every possible combination taken into account, practically incontestable. The grim pleasure they feel at the prospect of England being made the mandatory of the Great Powers in giving a death-blow to Turkey is not unnatural, though it may be irritating. If the Turks resolve to die with harness on their backs, the British Fleet may have to participate not only in another Navarino, but in a bombardment of Constantinople. The Greeks, indeed, assert that they will be able to take what has been given to them, if the Allied fleets will only parade in the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus, so as to cut off the access of the Turks in Asia to the Turks in Europe. Such an action would in reality be war against Turkey, but it is our belief that even if such an extreme measure were to be adopted, the Turks in Europe would, with the aid of the Albanians, be quite strong enough to resist the attempts of the Montenegrins and the Greeks to occupy the territory which the Berlin Treaty and Conference have assigned to them. The conduct of the Christian Powers to the Sultan must be considered by his subjects as inexplicable. He is sent for execution with the Order of the Garter round his leg and the Grand Cordon of the Legion of Honour round his neck, and his Stambouli frock covered with Stars and Orders, and he has a guard of honour of German officers and European officials provided for his gallows; but all the same, he is treated as a criminal—the enemy of the human race—forced to give up what his ancestors won, as if it were the fruits of present robbery, and exposed to an ignominious political death. If the bones of those which fill the cemeteries at Gallipoli, Scutari, Varna, and Sebastopol could be animated as those of the valley of old, how they would clatter at the sight of a British squadron and a British expedition engaged in the destruction of the capital for the salvation of which so many British soldiers lost their lives, and so many British taxpayers have paid millions of pounds for more than a quarter of a century.

Lieutenant-Colonel William H. Bennett, Royal Marines, the junior on the List of Second-Commandants, has been selected by the Admiralty for the command of the Portsmouth Division, vacant by the promotion of Major-General Gwyn. Colonel Bennett will be relieved at the Depôt at Deal by Lieutenant-Colonel Horatio Blanckley.

Surgeon-General W. Munro, M.D., C.B., will proceed shortly from Whitehall to Gibraltar, in succession to Surgeon-General H. G. Gordon, who is about to retire. It is probable that Dr. Munro will not long remain at Gibraltar, for in April next the present Director-General retires, and Dr. Munro has good claims for his post.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, July 15, 1880.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of April 30, 1877, Engineer Philip Blanch has been placed on the Retired List from the 8th inst.

ADMIRALTY, July 16, 1880.

Fleet Surgeon William Loudon Gordon, M.D., has been promoted to the rank of Deputy-Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of the 16th inst. Assistant-Paymaster Archibald Court has been promoted to the rank of Paymaster in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of the 15th inst.

ADMIRALTY, July 17, 1880.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of Feb. 22, 1870, Navigating Lieutenant Joseph Shellabear Vivian has been placed on the Retired List of his rank from the 14th inst.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Orders in Council of Feb. 22, 1870, and Nov. 29, 1879, Lieutenant Edward John Power Wade has been placed on the Retired List of his rank from this date; Engineer John Tolley Morgan has been promoted to the rank of Chief Engineer in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of 6th inst.

The following promotions have been made from the 19th inst.:—Commander Archibald Lucius Douglas to be Captain in her Majesty's Fleet; Lieutenant Edward Stratford Dugdale to be Commander in her Majesty's Fleet; Staff Surgeon Robert Longstaff Bett has been promoted to the rank of Fleet Surgeon in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of February 15, 1880.

ROYAL MARINE FORCES.

The following promotions, dated July 4, 1880, have taken place in the Royal Marine Light Infantry, viz.:—Colonel-Commandant Hamond Weston Gwyn to be Major-General, vice Stewart, deceased; Lieutenant-Colonel Second Commandant William Henry Worthy Bennett to be Colonel-Commandant, vice Gwyn; Lieutenant-Colonel Horatio Charles Nelson Blanckley to be Lieutenant-Colonel Second Commandant, vice Bennett; Major Frederick Gasper Le Grand to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Blanckley; Captain Henry Monckton Kay to be Major, vice Le Grand; Lieutenant George Anthony Ellard Gore to be Captain, vice Kay.

The following promotion, dated July 10, 1880, has taken place in the Royal Marine Light Infantry, viz.:—Lieutenant Henry Charles Horrocks to be Captain, vice Harrison, permitted to resign his commission.

The under-mentioned officer to be Aide-de-Camp to her Majesty:—Lieutenant-Colonel Robert William Bland Hunt, Royal Marine Light Infantry, vice Gwyn, promoted (July 4).

Assistant-Paymaster Edwin Robert Stapylton Sandys has been promoted to the rank of Paymaster in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of July 19.

APPOINTMENTS.

Staff Commander—Stopford C. Tracey, to the Duncan.

Lieutenants—James B. Young, A. C. Williamson, John Denison, Y. F. H. Parker, W. Hewetson, Wyatt Rawson, and Arthur H. Shirley, to the Excellent, as additional, for short course of gunnery, to date from 31st inst.; S. H. M. Login, to the Britannia, vice Pigott; Houston Stewart, to the Fantôme; F. S. Jackson, to the Euphrates; John R. Childs, to the Excellent, additional, for a short course of gunnery (to date from the 31st inst.); Michael S. Beatty, to the Pembroke, for service in the Rambler; H. B. Jackson, to Excellent, for short course of gunnery.

Navigating Lieutenant—Frank J. Harwood, to the Pembroke, for service in the Swift.

Chaplain—Rev. Charles Clark, to Revenge.

Surgeon—M. R. Mackenzie, to Boadicea.

Chief Engineer—John Hall, to the Dryad.

Gunners—James Cowd, to the Osborne; Matthew Barron, to the Excellent; Charles Earwaker, to the Comet; Michael Knight, to the Pembroke, for service in the Swift; John Morley, to Vernon, for Vesuvius; Thomas Davidson, to the Bloodhound.

PROMOTIONS.

Commander A. L. Douglas, to be Captain.

Lieutenant E. S. Dugdale, to be Commander.

Staff Surgeon R. L. Bett, to be Fleet Surgeon.

ALBATROSS, Com. Arnold J. Errington, had orders to leave Singapore for Hong Kong in May last.

BACCHANTE, Capt. Lord C. T. M. D. Scott, steamed out of Portsmouth Harbour on Friday afternoon, and anchored at Spithead. It has finally been determined that both the sons of the Prince of Wales shall take another cruise in her, and they arrived last Monday for the purpose of joining her, and the ship left Spithead on Tuesday, to join the combined squadrons, lying waiting her arrival in Bantry Bay.

BELLEISLE, Capt. Thomas Barnardiston, has taken up the duties of guardship at Cowes, during the stay of her Majesty the Queen at Osborne.

COMUS, Capt. East, was doing duty as senior officer's ship at Hong Kong, during the absence of the Commodore on leave of absence.

CONDOR, Com. E. F. Day, arrived at Genoa on the 14th from Malta, where she joined the Fleet. She would proceed on the 19th, taking mails to the Fleet off Melle, and afterwards would most likely proceed to Villafranca.

CRUISER, Com. F. A. Wetherall, left Corfu on the 5th inst. for Villafranca, where she met the Fleet to exchange drafts.

DECOY, Lieut.-Com. Von Donop, was at Cape Coast Castle on June 14. Lieut.-Com. Von Donop is, we regret to hear, invalided home from the West Coast of Africa.

FALCON, Com. B. F. Clark, which was at Phalerum Bay, Athens, left on the 2nd inst. for Constantinople.

FIREBRAND, Lieut. and Com. James J. L. Lisson, sailed from Fernando Po on May 22 for Batanga, to see how the natives are getting on, after their late punishment at the hands of the commodore.

FLIRT, Com. Brackenbury, C.M.G., was at Cape Coast Castle on June 14.

FOXHOUND, Lieut.-Com. Nowell, was expected at Hong Kong from Singapore early in June.

FROLIC, Com. S. H Rickman, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Wednesday morning from the China station, and left in the afternoon for Sheerness and Chatham, at which latter port she will be paid off into the Fourth Division of the Reserve.

HIMALAYA, Capt. Harry W. Brent, will be supplied with new engines and boilers on her arrival in England, the Admiralty having accepted the tender of Messrs. Maudslay, Sons, and Field.

HUMBER, Com. Way, arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday afternoon with officers and men invalided from the Imperial forces recently engaged in the Zulu war in South Africa. Several wounded and convalescent men took passage in the ship, which made a fair voyage, calling at Ascension, St. Helena, Madeira, and Sierra Leone. No deaths occurred on the homeward voyage, but there were several mishaps amongst the troops, one invalid having his arm broken by an accident.—Reuter.

HECLA, Capt. Morgan Singer, has received orders to proceed to the Mediterranean as early as possible. The authorities at Portsmouth are likewise ordered to forward a couple of first-class torpedo boats to Malta and Gibraltar.

HORNET, Com. John S. Eaton, reached Malta on July 19 from China, homeward bound.

IRIS, Capt. Seymour, sailed on Wednesday for the Mediterranean, to be attached to the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, but it is not expected she will long remain on that station, the principal object of her commission being to determine her capabilities for active service, she being a new type of vessel. "The screw shaft of the starboard engine is somewhat defective, but it has not been considered necessary to replace it at present. In all probability the ship will return to England at the end of the year, and the present shafting will be replaced by hollow steel, as at present fitted to the Mercury. She will then have her torpedo boats and steam crabs fitted, and steam pumping gear fitted for pumping out the double bottoms, should it become necessary to take in water ballast. The only means of at present freeing the ship is by hand pumps—a very tedious and long operation. Several improvements have been suggested by Capt. Seymour, and they are being carried out in the Mercury. The Iris has been commissioned entirely for experiment, and unless complications arise on the Greek frontier question she will in all probability be paid off in the spring."—Hampshire Telegraph.

LILY, Com. Stanhope Grove, has been detailed for duty at Shanghai, by last advices.

MAGPIE, Capt. R. H. Napier, was surveying in the Hainan Straits on May 28.

MIRANDA was commissioned at Devonport on Thursday by Com. the Hon. E. S. Dawson, who entered the Navy in March, 1857, and served successively as midshipman and sub-lieutenant in the St. George, 72, Capt. the Hon. Francis Egerton, with the Channel Squadron and in the Mediterranean, from October, 1860, until Jan., 1863, when he was transferred to the Defence, 16, Capt. Augustus Phillimore, and on the 12th of the following June was appointed to the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, commanded by his Serene Highness the Prince of Leiningen. He was promoted to lieut. from the Victoria and Albert, Sept. 14, 1863, and on the 26th of the following month appointed to the Royal Oak, 35, Capt. F. A. Campbell, in which ship he again served, with the Channel Squadron and in the Mediterranean until Dec. 1866, when he removed into the Terrible, 19, Capt. J. E. Commerell, C.B., V.C. He was flag-lieutenant to the late Rear-Admiral Frederick Warden, C.B., with the Channel Squadron, and on the coast of Ireland, from April 4, 1867, until promoted to commander, Nov. 11, 1869. He was additional of the Achilles, 26, Coastguard ship at Portland, from July till Nov. 1870; and from May, 1874, until paid off in Jan., 1877, commanded the Dwarf, 4, gun-vessel, in China. He was employed as inspecting officer of the Coastguard division at Lynn from March until May, 1878, when he obtained command of the President, drill ship for the Royal Naval Reserve in the West India Docks, and commanded her until Aug. 1879.

MOSQUITO, Lieut.-Com. Grey, was ordered for duty at Shanghai.

NEWCASTLE, Capt. Kelly, which is temporarily appropriated as a training-ship for young seamen, got under way on Wednesday morning from Spithead, and proceeded on her cruise.

PEGASUS, Com. Hon. Horatio N. S. Hood, had been ordered last May to leave Chefoo for the Corea, and would be in the Japan division during the present month.

SHELDRAKE, Com. Bridger, was at Swatow on May 28.

SWINGER, Lieut.-Com. Tudor, was under orders to proceed to Singapore, after paying a flying visit to Hong Kong, after her stay at Woosung in May.

SYLVIA, Com. Pelham Aldrich, was employed surveying in the Straits of Van Diemen on May 28.

TYNE, Com. John E. Stokes, has received sailing orders to go to Ascension, St. Vincent, Cape de Verdes, St. Helena, Simon's Town, and Zanzibar, where she will exchange the new crew of the London for the present one. She will then pay a visit to Mauritius and Simon's Town, calling at St. Helena and Ascension on the way home.

VIGILANT, Lieut.-Com. W. M. Annesley, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Coote, C.B., was at Chefoo on May 18, and intended to sail the day following for Nagasaki. The Admiral had been up the Peiho to Tientsin, and had his flag flying in the Vigilant, the Iron Duke being at Nagasaki, awaiting his arrival.

The following men have been awarded the medal for long service and good-conduct:—Charles Weeks, bandsman, and Thomas Murdon, tailor, H.M.S. Royal Adelaide. Edward T. Pott, chief boatman-in-charge; Wm. Burrow, chief boatman; James Ryder, William Sandy, Stephen Mills, Edward Dennis, and James Murphy, all commissioned boatmen, of H.M.'s Coastguard.

THE ATALANTA INQUIRY.

On Wednesday the inquiry was resumed at the Sessions House, Westminster. The first witness examined was Rear-Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam, who was Junior Lord of the Admiralty when the Juno was selected as a training-ship. He had only a collective responsibility, but he approved all that was done; and he believed that she was sound and seaworthy when sent out, that the rigging was suitable, and that the equipment was sufficient. Many of the officers were specially selected. Asked who was responsible for the selection of the ship, he said he did not think there was any selection in the matter, as she was the only vessel available. He had served in the Pacific when the Juno was on the station, and she was known as a good ship. He did not think she required clearing scuttles. The 114 able men on board were sufficient to sail the ship without the "ordinaries;" she was perfectly safe on the high seas, as safe as any ship that ever sailed. The straining of a sailing-ship, and breaking of the pumps and pipes on a voyage from the West Indies did not show that the ship was unseaworthy. He could not remember whether the report of the condition of the vessel on her return from the West Indies was brought specially under the notice of the Board. Every ship would leak, but leaking did not show unseaworthiness. He should say that the changes made by removing the guns from the main and the upper deck, and the putting of equivalent weight in the hold would render the vessel easier. As to a ship that rolled being uncomfortable for young seamen, he was afraid that could not be provided against, but small craft were generally preferred for the purpose.

Sir T. Symonds, Admiral of the Fleet, who was Commander-in-Chief at Devonport at the time the Atalanta was fitted out, said he considered that she was safe and sound except that she was 36 years of age. There were some details about her he did not like. Her tacking and wearing might have been interfered with by equipments he did not like, but which did not affect her safety. He did not like the standing of the masts; he did not like the forecastle, not so much from its weight as from what was put in it; and, of course, the men would take refuge there. He should have preferred four lieutenants instead of three, four sub-lieutenants instead of three, and seven warrant officers instead of four, so as to have a boatswain constantly on the forecastle at night; but these were matters rather for the captain than the Commander-in-Chief. They affected efficiency, rather than safety. She was revolutionised, and he should say she was made stiffer. He did not think her an unsafe ship in any way; but her safety might have been jeopardised on a lee shore from the inexperience of some of the ship's company. He should have preferred a screw to avoid the risk of being driven on shore. She had a company of 111 men, but 36 petty officers, against 48 in the Juno. The masts were overstayed. He had been in similar ships—the Vestal and the Spartan—in which he had the utmost confidence; and he quoted reports upon other vessels of the same class, giving strong evidence as to their good behaviour in heavy weather. While it would have been impossible to have had a better sailing ship, he thought her too small for efficiency and decency as a training ship. He did not report that the ship was underofficered; he had made similar representations as to previous ships, but it was not considered necessary to act on them. The officers were the same as on board the Eurydice, and her arrangements were considered satisfactory. He did not think the Atalanta's safety imperilled by the deficiency of officers. Judging from the Spartan, vessels of this class did not require close watching. The Spartan never broached-to. In the Channel Fleet, the Hercules rolled 28 to starboard and 24 to port, making a total of 52, and that was not considered dangerous. If he had been told that the Atalanta had lurched 40, as stated by Capt. Stirling, he should have ordered her to be broken up immediately. He never experienced anything of the sort in the Spartan. He did not believe the Atalanta lurched so much. With the changes made in the weights, he wondered she did not roll herself to pieces; but he understood the object was to train young seamen to find their sea-legs. If the Atalanta had shipped water, it showed how wrong she was, and he should never have sent her to sea again; he should have paid her off and broken her up. But he did not believe in the 40. The breaking of the pipes and the pumps only showed that she was an old ship and out of trim. If the officers had served six years on ironclads they could not have much knowledge of the management of a sailing-ship, unless it were intuitive. He reported that the Atalanta was overcrowded, and that 40 men should be taken out, or that certain changes should be made and 20 men withdrawn, and the latter course was ordered to be adopted. The Atalanta was so filled with tanks that she had no room to put things below.

Robert Noble was captain of the maintop for 13 months in the Atalanta during her first two cruises. He had also served in the Prince Consort, the Northumberland, and the Eclipse, but in no sailing-ship without steam. The Atalanta was more lively than other ships, but, compared with others, did not injure spars or rigging. She rolled more quickly, but not more deeply, and did not ship much water—at least, not forward. It was not necessary to batten down the hatches in the bad weather off Bermuda. The pumps were going some time for every watch on the voyage home. He did not observe much straining, and did not remember any leakage on the upper deck. He would just as soon go to sea in the Atalanta as in the Northumberland. There was no talk of fear among the younger hands. In his mess they always took their meals in comfort.

William Landry, captain of the forecastle in the Atalanta for two cruises, had been in several other men-of-war, but none of them sailing vessels. The Atalanta was lively, but did not lurch unusually. She did not ship water more than spray over the gangway and the forecastle. Men could at all times keep under the forecastle. They once had the cutter washed away, but they did not ship any sea. The main deck was wet, but that was from leakage through the ports and washing over the manger board.

The Atalanta behaved much better than the Phœbe. It was a sea that washed the lee boat away. They never saw the lee netting under water. They were never taken aback.

Henry Box, quartermaster on board the Atalanta for the first and second cruise, had not been in any other sailing ship. The rolling keels shook her; there was no lifting of the deck. The ship steered easily, very quick. Coming home from Bermuda they ran five days before the wind with a heavy sea. The vessel wanted a great deal of watching. She did not broach-to. She was very quick in steering. She lurched heavily when laid-to before the gale, but did not ship much water. She was wet forward with spray, but otherwise she was a very dry boat. There was no more than ordinary straining. The wedges of the masts were rather loose on the upper deck on arriving at Portsmouth. The bilge-keel came out of the water half a foot, and shook the ship on going in again. She never shipped any sea while he was in her. The men did not complain of having to go aloft in heavy weather. There was no opening of the seams round the masts on the upper deck.

W. J. Edwards, A.B., was in the Atalanta in the first and second cruises. He had been an ordinary seaman in a cruiser in the Mediterranean. The behaviour of the cruiser and of the Atalanta was about the same. Of the two, he should have preferred the Atalanta, as being the most comfortable on the mess-deck. The Atalanta was just as easy as the cruiser. You had to hang on at times, as you had in every ship. The Atalanta took the water from the bollard-ports. The scuppers were sufficient to free the upper deck.

Henry Reeves, A.B., joined the Atalanta for the second cruise. He had formerly been in a training-brig. He thought the Atalanta comfortable, and did not hear any complaints from others.

J. Murphy, A.B., who had been in a training-brig, thought the Atalanta more lively in her motions. He had been in a trooper, and also in an ironclad, and the Atalanta did not lurch any more than they did.

John Wilson, A.B., was in the Atalanta in the two first cruises. He could remember the wedges being lifted on the main deck in a gale. They never went aloft when they had difficulty in holding on.

J. Empster, A.B in the second cruise, did not think the Atalanta any more lively for a small ship than was the training-brig or another sailing-ship he had been in.

W. P. Hall, A.B., said there was no difficulty in steering in bad weather.

Alfred Stansell, ordinary, was in the Atalanta on her last cruise for two months, and went into hospital at Barbadoes. Every other night half the watch was kept pumping for half-an-hour; sometimes it was every night. He never knew water let in on purpose by the carpenter's mate. He was sick during the second month. He could hear the pumping going in the sick bay. He had known it four nights a week. There was more pumping in bad weather. He had never worked at the pumps himself. It was difficult to mess, and some of his mates complained of being sent to sea in her.

Thomas Jessop, ordinary, was in the last cruise for three months, and left in the West Indies through breaking his leave. It was the routine of the ship to pump out every other night. They had heavy weather in going to Teneriffe and after leaving it. Water came in at the main-deck ports, which were closed in rough weather. The captain was always on deck, as if he had no faith in the officers. It was very difficult to mess, owing to the motion of the ship.

Elmer Ellis, ordinary, was in the Atalanta on the last cruise, and was left behind through breaking his leave. He had been previously in an American merchant ship and in a brig, and described the Atalanta as lively, but not so difficult to steer. Running with the wind, it was necessary to watch closely. He had had charge of the wheel alone. He described the lurching and rolling, and said that the men's traps would go from one side to the other, and men were rolled about and sometimes injured.

Theophilus Westlake, ordinary, was in the last cruise, and was left behind at Barbadoes. He never heard it stated that the carpenter said there was a leak in the ship. He did not consider there was much discomfort in taking meals. They pumped for half an hour at a time, generally fetching some water. He got his sea legs in a small fishing boat, and did not think so much of the Atalanta's rolling.

Mr. G. W. Copplestone, acting foreman, Pembroke Dockyard, described the examination made there, and enumerated the timbers that were found rotten and defective and had to be replaced. All the decks were renewed. He did not know why the skid gratings were filled up, except to make a flush deck. All the masts were substantially wedged on the upper deck. He had never seen a ship that was not. There were indications that the Atalanta's masts had been wedged before. When she left Pembroke she was thoroughly sound. About one-fourth and not one-third was renewed. In many parts the timber had gone to snuff as from dry rot. Elsewhere the decay appeared to have been due to leakage, the wood being black. He believed that he saw every timber in her, inside and outside. The position of the masts was precisely the same in the Atalanta as in the Juno. No alteration was made in the main deck ports; they were not reduced in size. The port sills were taken out and the openings filled up. There were no special instructions to restrict the repairs, which were very liberally carried out. The vessel was thoroughly repaired at a total cost of £19,000. A new one could have been built at £31,000 or £32,000. He thought it worth while to repair the vessel, because the repairs made her as good at new. He never opened a ship that was better put together. He did not believe that any unsound timber was left in the vessel.

Mr. Waymouth cross-examined the witness at some length with the view of suggesting the possibility of some defective timbers having escaped detection in the examination made at Pembroke so far as that examination was of the same character as that made at Portsmouth; but the witness did not think that that could be so. He did not remember having furnished the data for the estimate of £11,000, which was not his estimate. His first estimate was £16,084. Of the total cost, £19,000, perhaps £18,000 was laid out on the hull and the rest in fittings.

Mr. James Davis, leading man of shipwrights, Pembroke Dockyard, and Mr. Thomas Mason, another leading man at Pembroke, having been examined, the inquiry was adjourned.

The inquiry was continued on Thursday, when Vice-Admiral G. Ommanney Willes, C.B., superintendent of the dockyard at Devonport at the time the Atalanta was repaired, said he was not in any way responsible for the selection of the Atalanta as a training-ship; but he had no reason to doubt that she was perfectly sound. He saw the vessel when she was ready for sea, and he was satisfied that she was perfectly stable and seaworthy. The equipment of the Atalanta was, in his opinion, suitable and sufficient. He was particularly struck with the apparent intelligence of the captain and the officers, and he satisfied himself that the complement of the ship, independent of the lads, was also sufficient. On the loss of the Eurydice he wrote to the Admiralty, and suggested that the topmost rigging of such ships should be of rope, and not of wire, and the suggestion was carried out. He had often noticed that a vessel was saved in rough weather by her topgallant-masts giving way. What had surprised him in the case of the Eurydice accident was the fact of her topmasts standing. It would be no use rigging the lower masts with hemp instead of wire, inasmuch as the lower masts never saved a vessel by giving way. As to the crew of the Atalanta, the ship was rather overmanned than otherwise.

Rear-Admiral C. T. Curme said he was at Devonport while the Atalanta was there, and was several times on board. He had no reason to doubt that when the vessel left she was a thoroughly safe, stable, and seaworthy ship. Her rigging and equipment were suitable and sufficient. As to wire versus hemp rigging, he preferred wire rigging with hemp lanyards, and did not think that the safety of a vessel should depend on her topmast rigging. By Mr. Waymouth: He questioned altogether the correctness of the statement in the log-book that the ship lurched from 40 to 45 degrees. They might take off six degrees at least, and then it would be an extremely heavy lurch. The pendulum was not to be relied upon in a lurch. By Vice-Admiral Randolph: The captain was not responsible for the entries in the log, except in a general sense. The fact that Capt. Stirling, in a report on the sailing qualities of his vessel, had stated that the Atalanta "frequently" lurched 40 deg., was no evidence to the mind of the witness that the vessel did lurch so much, but only that the captain believed that to be the fact, from a report made to him. If the witness himself had seen such an entry in a log-book, he should certainly have asked how the observations were made resulting in such a conclusion.

Capt. Youell, formerly master-attendant at Devonport, said the Atalanta was fully and sufficiently rigged. The rigging on the lower masts was of wire, equal to new, and the upper rigging was of new hemp. If properly taken care of, the ship was serviceable for 20 years or more. The masts were not overstayed, and the sails were in excellent condition. The Atalanta appeared to be a vessel well adapted to the purpose for which she was intended. She was a smart little frigate. All the rigging was prepared under his own supervision.

Rear-Admiral the Hon. F. A. Foley said the Atalanta visited Portsmouth Harbour twice while he was Superintendent there, and he went entirely over the ship on both occasions and closely examined her. He had no doubt that she was perfectly sound, stable, and seaworthy. The rigging and the equipment were perfectly sufficient. She was reported once as having been strained, but the amount of straining was of no real importance. The working of the bilge keels was principally the cause of the slight damage which was done. Capt. Stirling never complained of the pumping arrangements. The dockyard authorities went out of their way to make the ship more than ordinarily efficient, if that were possible. By Capt. Batt: Capt. Stirling was at one time of opinion that the ship was overmasted and heavy aloft; but when the calculations on which the masting was regulated were shown to him, he was perfectly satisfied. None of the officers, so far as he knew, were dissatisfied with their vessel. With regard to the frequent pumping which took place on the Atalanta, that was quite a usual thing in such a vessel. The chief complaints against the Atalanta were made before she was repaired. By Mr. Waymouth: What Capt. Stirling chiefly complained of were the bilge pieces, which were the main cause of the rolling and jerky motion of the vessel. Ten tons extra of ballast were put into the ship at the request of Capt. Stirling; but they did not make much difference with such a good vessel as the Atalanta.

Admiral E. G. Fanshawe, C.B., late commander-in-chief at Portsmouth, said the bilge keels of the Atalanta were removed; and, he thought, judiciously so. He inspected the ship shortly before she sailed; and he had no reason to suppose that she was not a perfectly sound, stable, and seaworthy vessel. Her rigging and equipment were both sufficient. By Mr. Waymouth: He had heard only one opinion of Capt. Stirling; and that opinion was highly favourable.

The Committee again adjourned.

HOT WEATHER.—How to Invigorate the Nervous System by Natural Means. Mental Prostration.—"Having suffered much from headache and mental prostration, I was induced to try ENO'S FRUIT SALT, the effects of which have been most satisfactory, resulting in invigorating my entire nervous system, and removing the frequent headache to which I was subject. THE ORPHEUS MEMORIAL FUND.

The recent discovery of the body of an officer of H.M.S. Orpheus—lost with 189 officers and men on the Manakau Bar, N.Z., on Feb. 7, 1863—has recalled to memory the exceptional gallantry and fearlessness in the face of death which was shown by the officers and men at the wreck of this ship. At the awful moment when the main-mast went by the board, carrying with it into the boiling surf all who had sought refuge by going aloft, those who were thus hurried into eternity gave a parting cheer. Comdre. Burnett, who commanded the ship, was cool and collected to the last, when, seeing no chance of saving the ship or her crew (who had obeyed every word of command at that fearful time with the same order as though death were not before them), he gave the word, "Every man for himself," adding, "The Lord have mercy on us all." It is the perpetuation of the memory of such gallantry and fearlessness that has done much to make England what she has been and is, for a Service like the Royal Navy lives on its traditions, and the men of to-day are led to the performance of deeds of valour by the example of those who have gone before. It is, therefore, proposed to raise some memorial to those who so nobly died on board H.M.S. Orpheus, such an act being, in the opinion of many, the duty a country owes to her servants. With the view to raise a fund, the following have formed a committee, viz.:—Sir Henry Barkly, K.C.B., G.C.M.G.; Sir T. Gore-Browne, K.C.M.C., C.B., Sir Julius Vogel, K.C.M.G.; Capt. Walter Stewart, R.N.; Major Aylmer Somerset, Rifle Brigade; Major Francis Bulkeley, late 65th Regt.; Commander Sir Wm. Wiseman, Bart.; Lieut. J. L. Armit, R.M.L.I.; C. G. Brooke-Hunt (midshipman on board the Orpheus); Treasurers, Messrs. C. Hopkinson and Sons, Bankers, 3 Regent Street; Hon. Sec., W. G. Francis Hunt, R.N., Naval and Military Club. It has been decided at a meeting of the committee, held at the Royal Colonial Institute, to raise sufficient funds to erect at Southsea or at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, a monument to the memory of the officers and crew of the ship, for which purpose subscriptions are invited.

SIR,—I shall be glad if you will allow me a few inches of one of your columns, wherein I may explain to Capt. Bridge that, on the very important point to which he refers, he has quite mistaken my meaning. In my recent lecture at the United Service Institution, I spoke indeed of "a real examination," and of "such examination as should be found advisable," but certainly did not, either in word or intention, limit that examination to "mere book and school-room tests of proficiency." Neither, when I spoke of "high scientific training," did I refer especially, still less exclusively, to physics or chemistry, and most assuredly not to "the perusal of primers at a shilling a-piece,"—ninepence at the Stores. I carefully avoided going into details on these points as outside the subject of my lecture, which threatened to exceed the allotted time but I will (with your permission) now again say, as have often said before, that I do not and will not admit any such limitation to the terms "science" or "scientific" as Capt. Bridge says—I fear too truly—is put on them by common opinion. Science is that exact knowledge which is arrived at not by mere repetition, but by process of reasoning and understanding, and it embraces every subject of human learning. I utterly refuse to admit that "there is no science outside a treatise on physics or chemistry, or the like;" and I perfectly agree with Capt. Bridge when he says:—"The man who puts a ship about properly, even the midshipman who takes his boat through a surf rightly, performs an operation in the truest sense scientific." But such knowledge can be tested by examination. I can conceive a possibility of making the examination in seamanship the most real and perfect of all examinations; of holding it, not in the cabin of a ship at anchor, but on the deck of a ship under way; of its lasting, not for ten minutes, but for a week. But this is only as far as it goes. A Naval officer of the present day (according to my ideal) wants this, but wants, also, a great deal more than this. A few months ago, in a letter to the Council of the Royal Geographical Society, Admiral Ryder named nautical astronomy and surveying, steam tactics, gunnery and torpedoes, prize law, court-martial practice, as some of the subjects with which, amongst others, a Naval officer ought to be conversant. Now, I call a sound, accurate knowledge of these subjects just as much science as a knowledge of any of the most abstruse secrets of the laboratory, and my present argument is that by such science a man is better fitted for high command. The suggestion I put forward in my lecture was that without such science a man should not be considered fit for command at all; and notwithstanding his objection to "the scientific officer," I am quite sure that Capt. Bridge does not consider ignorance of naval tactics as a recommendation in a captain; ignorance of the laws of evidence as the best claim to sit on a court-martial; ignorance of international law as the most suitable qualification for an independent command—otherwise, as an officer who, more than most, has made a scientific study of his profession, he must be unpleasantly conscious of his own unfitness for his present rank. In conclusion, then, I would repeat that nothing in my lecture at the United Service Institution was meant in any way to depreciate the necessity of seamanship, which ought to be the first qualification of every Naval officer; but that I suggested as one means of doing away with the continually recurring block in the Lieutenants' List, the requirement of a much higher standard than a mere knowledge of seamanship as a condition of promotion. As to what that standard should be, or how it should be tested, I did not then say anything, nor will I now, except that the standard should be high, and the test should be real and severe.—I am, &c.,

CHILI AND PERU.

As up to the present time no details have been received respecting ths capture of Tacna by the Chilians, beyond the telegram simply announcing that victory, the following translation of the telegram sent by the Commander-in-Chief of the Chilian forces to the Minister of War after the battle, and supplied by Mr. Thomas Kynaston Weir, Chilian Consul in London, will interest our readers:—"Suburbs of Tacna, May 27, 1880.—Señor Ministro de la Guerra,—Yesterday morning at 8 o'clock the army under my command moved forward in search of the enemy. In the afternoon it encamped at about two and a half leagues' distance from the positions held by the allied army. To-day, at 6 a.m., I again moved forward, and at 7 our artillery opened fire against the advanced forces of the enemy. The enemy's artillery opened fire at 8.30 a.m. The artillery fire was maintained until 11 a.m., at which hour our infantry advanced, the battle becoming general from that moment. The enemy made a stubborn resistance; but, in spite of it, three hours later our brave soldiers were occupying the formidable fortifications held by the allied army. From that moment the enemy were dispersed, flying in all directions, and a few hours later we occupied the town of Tacna. We have many losses, but those of the enemy are greater. At this moment I could not estimate the extent of our losses. I congratulate your Excellency and the country on this victory, which is for the enemy a blow impossible to repair, and for Chili the consolidation of the work intrusted to her army.—MANUEL BAQUEDANO."

The Directors of the Army and Navy Hotel (Limited) have issued their prospectus, setting forth details that must satisfy the most fastidious. The hotel, although purporting by its name to be more particularly for the use of officers and their families, will be open to the public generally. The directors propose furnishing the hotel with every regard to comfort without lavish expenditure, and the tariff will be on a scale compatible with rendering a fair dividend to the shareholders. Economically and judiciously managed, this company ought to be successful.

FIELD-DAY AT ALDERSHOT.

In the presence of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, Gen. Sir Garnet Wolseley, and others of the Head-quarter Staff, the army corps assembled at Aldershot, under command of Gen. Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., had its first sham-fight, under the general idea that the commander of a division sent from Wokingham to occupy Aldershot found that he had been anticipated, and that a force was already in a strong position near Cæsar's Camp. The 2nd Infantry Division and two regiments of cavalry, under Major-Gen. Cameron, C.B., represented the southern force—that in possession of Cæsar's Camp. The remainder of the army corps (four regiments of cavalry, two batteries of horse artillery, seven field batteries, and seven battalions of infantry), under Major-Gen. Peyton, formed the northern forces. The bridges over the Basingstoke Canal were not to be destroyed. Each man of the infantry was furnished with 20 rounds of blank ammunition. The troops were in their allotted positions by 10 a.m. The action commenced about 11 a.m., and shortly afterwards the northern force made a dash for the bridges over the Basingstoke Canal, which, after a stubborn resistance, were carried, but not simultaneously. The defenders then retired towards Cæsar's Hill (which their main body held), pursued by the northern force, which brought its left forward, and mercilessly continued the pursuit until the bugles sounded the "Cease fire" at two o'clock. The artillery was well handled throughout the action. It was not decided which side had gained the victory. For the first time in the history of the camp a balloon was employed during military operations. It contained three officers, including Capt. Elsdale, Royal Engineers. The total on parade was 9,793 men, 2,304 horses, and 48 guns; total at Aldershot yesterday, 15,286 men, 3,341 horses, and 52 guns. After a march-past, the troops returned to quarters at three o'clock. Among the spectators was Major-Gen. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET IN THE PACIFIC.

A correspondent of the Standard says:—"Either war with China is absolutely determined upon at St. Petersburg, or else the announced probability of war is taken as a pretext for transferring and permanently locating in the far East a considerable portion of the Russian fleet. Of course, there is the third contingency of the one being contemplated as well as the other. Admiral Lessovski has just left Odessa in the Cesarewitch, man-of-war, en route for the Pacific, where he is to take command. He is accompanied by some twenty officers, and several doctors and sisters of charity are specially attached to his staff. Simultaneously with him half a dozen torpedo boats leave the Euxine for the Chinese coast. Other ships are being equipped at Nicholaiensk for the like destination. In order not to be entirely dependent upon Japanese courtesy, floating docks have been ordered in England, and as soon as ready they will be sent with the utmost despatch to Vladivostock. Troops continue to leave for the same rendezvous. Siberian rivers being apt to freeze by the middle of September, the present is the last moment for their despatch, if the water communication is to be turned to account. The Volunteer fleet, destined by its enthusiastic founders to destroy our Merchant Navy, seems likely to prove no small embarrassment to the Patriotic Society, which is entrusted with its management. The receipts, so far, have been in excess of the expenditure, but as a writer in the New Times points out, this is due solely to the employment of the ships by the Government in bringing home the troops after the war. Less the large sum thus earned the balance-sheet shows a heavy loss. The avowed object of the Society, in time of peace, is to maintain a nursery of seamen for the Russian fleet, but hitherto the position has been just the reverse; the Volunteer cruisers, manned by officers and men of the Imperial Marine, constituting a drain on the very department they are meant to feed. With the construction of a fifth vessel, now in progress, the remaining capital will be absorbed."

The Secretary of State for War has acceded to wishes conveyed to him by the deputation which waited on him the other day in London, by the granting to the Limerick Army Clothing Factory an order for the immediate manufacture of forty thousand garments for the British Army. It is stated that another Army contract will follow.

Lieut.-Col. Dods writes from the Edinburgh United Service Club, that a friend of his has found on the scene of the massacre at Isandula, and close to the remains of an officer, a mourning ring, set with seven small rosette diamonds, and inscribed "In Memoriam," &c. Any one claiming the ring, and able to supply the initials and date on the inscription, may apply to Lieut.-Col. Dods.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "PERFECTED" OIL. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

AUSTRALIAN WINES.

H. ST. GEORGE WILKINSON & CO.

Have received large Shipments of well-matured

AUSTRALIAN WINES,

GOLD MEDALS

were awarded in Australia, and at Vienna and Paris.

These Wines are strongly recommended by several of the leading medical men, both in London and the Provinces. They are free from any added alcohol (which makes other wines so injurious to health), and are a sure cure for Gout and Rheumatism.

In the leading cities of Australia, and also in the country districts, the greater part of the Hospitals and other sanitary institutions use the Australian Wines, almost to the entire exclusion of Port, Sherry, and other foreign wines.

In introducing these Wines, MESSRS. WILKINSON and Co. have placed the prices as low as possible, so as to be within the means of all classes.

Prices range from 16s to 60s per dozen, delivered free of carriage at any railway station in Great Britain. Vide Circulars, posted free on application. Samples sent free.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' 'Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

PROSPECTUS.

The want of comfortable accommodation in London, with living on an equality with that of a regimental mess, and at economical rates, have always been felt by Officers of the Services. This it is now intended to supply, both for temporary use, and also in the style of a residential club, so that Shareholders may retain private rooms or suites of rooms, with good attendance, and the use of general dining, drawing, club, smoking, and other rooms, while they may be either boarded at very moderate rates, or obtain their meals as required in club fashion, and at charges framed from those adopted by successful public caterers.

The Army and Navy Hotel is established for the purpose of these requirements, and is intended for the use of the public, as well as of the shareholders, priority being in all cases given to the latter.

The rooms of the hotel will be plainly yet substantially furnished, avoiding all the glitter which, while adding to the expense, does not add to the comfort of the visitor.

Baths of every description, including salt water, will be obtainable in the Hotel.

Drawing-rooms for ladies and billiard rooms will form an attractive feature in the establishment.

The reading-rooms will be supplied with the leading daily and weekly papers, and all English and the best foreign Service journals will be taken in and filed, for the convenience of shareholders.

A commodious smoking-room will be attached to the house, and particular attention will be paid to the cigars and tobacco purchased by the Company.

Shareholders will be allowed the use of the smoking, reading, and writing rooms, thus providing all the accommodation of a club, without any annual subscription.

Suitable wines, and those of the finest vintages, will be laid down, and care will be taken to lower the prices of the wine list to within a fractional difference of store prices. No charge will be made for corkage.

The cuisine will be under the superintendence of experienced French and English cooks, and whilst bachelors will find all the advantages of a mess, married officers will not miss the comforts of home.

A house dinner of six courses will be served from six to eight p.m., at a very moderate charge, in club fashion, at separate tables.

Special facilities will be afforded to the families of officers proceeding to or returning from abroad, and, if desired, their travelling arrangements can be conducted by trustworthy agents.

Arrangements will be made for a service of small omnibuses to the principal railway stations; on receipt of telegraphic notice, these would be sent to meet any train.

The furnishing to shareholders of carriages, open or closed, park hacks, &c., for the day, week, or season, will form an adjunct to the hotel.

Special rates will be introduced for servants' board and lodging.

No charge will be made for attendance; all servants of the hotel will be liberally paid, and visitors are not required to make any douceur.

A staff of commissionaires will be attached to the hotel.

A post and telegraphic office will be established in the building, and arrangements will be made by which visitors may obtain railway tickets to all parts of the world without leaving the premises.

An efficient hairdressing establishment will be conducted on the premises.

A large room, with every convenience for regimental dinners, balls, private parties, &c., will be attached to the building.

Visitors who may wish to make the hotel their home during their stay will be received at a fixed and very moderate tariff. It is intended to fix the tariff at as low a rate as is compatible with the declaration of a dividend, and it is confidently anticipated that board and lodging can be provided for about the same cost as is now charged by other hotels for rooms alone.

Suites of residential chambers, for bachelors as well as married families, will form a distinctive feature in the Hotel. These will be let at a fixed and moderate rental, or the leases sold for long or short periods.

A list of "Regimental Exchanges Wanted" will be hung in the reading-room, and all the latest telegrams also exhibited.

It is intended to open the Hotel by May 1st, 1881.

Application for shares can be made in writing to the Secretary, by giving the name, address, rank or occupation, and the number of shares applied for.

THERE is no such thing as a "necessary" man in any institution, or in any country, that deserves to live. But, without entering deeply into the consideration of the question whether it is the circumstance which creates the man, or the man who originates the circumstance, we may, without any casuistry, arrive at certain conclusions from absolute facts. The Duke of Cambridge's administration of the military establishments of the Empire has been carried on now for many years in the name of the Queen, through a succession of changes almost revolutionary, if not organic. The mutiny of the Bengal Army, in which was involved the fate of the armies of Bombay and Madras, led to the great convulsion from which the personnel of the Army List has not yet calmed down, amid the struggling contentions of the India Office and the War Office, in the transference of the Company's officers to the direct control of the Crown. The tremendous collapse of the French Empire subsequently galvanised a British Government into a desperate activity, in the spasms of which the Purchase system was guillotined, at a cost of some twenty millions sterling, and the rank and file of professional, mercenary volunteers, who had established and maintained the military reputation of England in every battle-field, from the time of Marlborough and Wellington to the less well-omened days of the Crimea under Lord Raglan and General Simpson, were replaced by the sickly outcome of the attempts of doctrinaire reformers to Prussianise the English Army. It is matter for argument whether the Duke was right or wrong in continuing to administer the Army in the name of the Queen, when changes of which he disapproved were introduced into its constitution; but that he did not approve of the abolition of Purchase, that he resisted as far as possible the injustice done to Royal officers by supersession, and that he is not content with the short-service system, are beyond dispute. The view of his duties taken by his Royal Highness under all the circumstances of his administration was, we believe, founded on the conviction that he was fulfilling a trust for the Sovereign, the State, and the Service, which had to be executed without reference to his personal likes or dislikes; and that it was better to remain in office to carry out changes, however much they were in his eyes deplorable or mischievous, than to hand over the Commander-in-Chief's office to others, who could not escape so easily from the pressure of influences from which he had proved his immunity. Those who have been in a position to contrast his Royal Highness's private and confidential expressions of opinion with his public utterances, may have been at times inclined to condemn his apparent inconsistency; but so and as long as the Duke of Cambridge was and is Commanding-in-Chief, it would not be easy to indicate any course he could have pursued with advantage other than that which he has undeviatingly followed for more than 20 years. Whether, when he saw the Army subjected to structural shocks which he entirely abhorred, he should have ceased to be Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief is open to discussion. In his relations to the Crown, and to the country, and the Army, it was, we think, the best thing he could do to keep his seat and hold the reins, although he did not like the road he had to take. The Duke's position has generally put him beyond the reach of aristocratic pressure, social toadyism, party influence, or Parliamentary intimidation. It would be too much to say that the voice of friendship has never been heard within the walls of the Horse Guards when appointments have had to be made, and that the influences of fear, favour, and affection have always been arrested by the sentries outside the dingy portals of Pall Mall, but in comparison with what has been and with what would certainly be, if a mere political Commander-in-Chief were installed in office, a purer or worthier administration of an office peculiarly liable to the exercise of personal agencies was never known in this country, or, we may say, under any military régime in any country in the world. It is often said that the Duke is too much subject to the timides avis of those who dread the attacks of the Press, or the outcries of Parliamentary factions, but if we once accept him on the ground which his Royal Highness may be assumed to take, and if we regard him as a simple representative of Royalty in administering the Army, it may be readily conceded that he is right in evading any direct conflict with the Press which represents or guides public opinion, and that he is wise in shunning encounters in which the Army and the Crown would suffer equally with himself. With all this said and done, there is nevertheless some force in the hypothesis that the Duke would have certainly consulted his own dignity, had he either resigned when the War-Office authorities, in their submission to capricious Parliamentary reforms, forced on him measures of which he disapproved, or if he had refrained from strongly expressing his objections to what he consented to administer. Men are apt, wrongly or rightly, to lose respect for those who eat the leek, and often ascribe their consumption of the esculent to unworthy motives. Our own opinion on the point has been already expressed. But now that there are rumours in the air of changes at least as important as any that have been introduced with such deplorable results, the course that the Duke may take becomes of the utmost significance and importance. It does not need great expertness in reading the signs of the times to perceive that there is a strong current setting against the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, or that, more properly speaking, there are in and out of the Army a certain number of energetic, anxious, ambitious, or disappointed men, who would like to direct a strong current in that direction. There have been speeches, reported and unreported, and there have been sayings and writings put abroad, with that obvious purpose, because, perhaps, the Duke is felt to be a great impediment to the execution of designs which are advocated as reforms. The country is assured that all the mischievous results of recent innovations are due to obstructiveness and lukewarmness at Head-quarters, and everything which can be done by a clique of self-opinionated, bustling, Military quacks is worked energetically, to prepare the public mind for the demand for a Board of War or a Military Council, with a Chief of the Staff to carry on the business of the Army, under the Secretary of State, who represents the Parliamentary majority for the time being. We are, therefore, called upon to consider what would occur, should such a change as we have mentioned be forced on him by this or any other Government, either with the object of ejecting the Duke from the Horse Guards, by making it impossible for him to remain there after such a slight to his office and himself, or with the purpose of getting the Army more directly under the thumb of the War Minister, whose theoretical control is, in fact, impeded by many powerful influences, as long as the Royal Duke is Commanding-in-Chief. The Duke of Cambridge's feelings with regard to the appointment of a Chief of the Staff are decided. Indeed, notwithstanding his official designation, his Royal Highness fills very nearly the place of a Chief of the Staff at the Horse Guards, and executes the duties which are performed by that officer at the head-quarters of foreign armies, under King or Kaiser. The assurances given by Mr. Childers that he did not intend to inaugurate any great novelties, and that he desired to work in concert with the Horse Guards, may be departed from, in subserviency to supposed political necessities and the dictations of party. In such a case, the Duke of Cambridge may rely on the sympathy of the Army, and we believe on the ultimate support of the country, not in any resistance or evasion of the will of Parliament, but in any effort he may make, and in any sacrifice he may feel it necessary to offer, to prevent the introduction of ruinous "reforms." He has the power to make his voice heard from one end of the Empire to the other, and no man can express himself more clearly or forcibly, when he has occasion to speak on subjects which touch his heart. When a critic, fresh from the Crimea, pointed out to Lord Palmerston various changes which he thought might be introduced, so as to assimilate our Army to that of France, then supposed to be at the head of the Military Powers of the world, the Premier observed, "You seem to forget that England is not France, and that Englishmen could not become Frenchmen, even if they desired it. Our Army is like our Constitution, —it is full of anomalies, but it works well; it is the offspring of our institutions, and if you will, of our faults and prejudices, but it never can be made anything but an English Army; and if you tried to alter it to any foreign model, it would fall to pieces in your hands." No man better understands the constitution of our Army, and the points in which it differs from the armies of Continental States, than the Duke of Cambridge; and if he has the courage of his opinions when the crisis comes, he will not lack the support of those who desire to maintain our honour and our power in the field.

No portion of the expenditure for the Naval Service has attracted more attention of late years than that devoted to the repairs of ships. The gradual but sure decay of our earlier ironclads, the constant improvements in the machinery required for working heavy guns, the introduction of torpedoes, and the consequent demand for new fittings, as well as the inordinate deterioration of ships' boilers, have all had their share in largely augmenting the cost of repairs and maintenance. Happily for us, these causes of decay have been at work in an equal degree in foreign navies, at least in those of them that contain ships of as early a date as our own, and this consideration probably determined the late Government to spend large sums of money on repairs, instead of condemning as worn out and obsolete those earlier types of ironclads which Mr. Ward Hunt, in taking office, discovered to have been entirely neglected. Differences of opinion will always exist as to the policy of altering, improving, and patching-up vessels which the most lavish expenditure can probably only render serviceable for a few years, and then only serviceable in a minor degree; but it must be borne in mind that a first-class ship-of-war, built up to the latest requirements of modern science, takes years to complete, while excellent work may be achieved by ships of the second or third rank by the expenditure of a few thousand pounds and a few months' work. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," and there can be little doubt but that to the policy initiated by Mr.

Ward Hunt, and prosecuted by his successor, Mr. W. H. Smith, we owe the two fine fleets that we were able to despatch to the Mediterranean at the time when the Eastern difficulty threatened us with the outbreak of war. Had the alternative course been followed, of laying down a large number of ships, and of spending upon repairs only just so much as was absolutely necessary to maintain a sufficient number of ships to keep up our peace establishment, we should have been unable to support our diplomatic policy with that show of force which proved of such unmistakable value in that crisis. The dockyard accounts, to which we referred a fortnight since, throw much valuable light upon this question of repairs. In the body of this return, the expenditure on "wear-and-tear and maintenance of the Fleet in Commission and Reserve" is given in the fullest detail, the exact amount spent on each ship during the year being shown separately, and arranged in columns distinguishing the value of materials, wages, and payments to contractors expended on hull, engines, boilers, masts, yards, and rigging, and on engineers' stores. Thus we find that the total sum spent on repairs of ships during the year amounted to £1,080,296, of which the materials cost £469,307, the labour £403,225, and the payments made to contractors £207,764, or if we abate from this total the net gain to the Admiralty from ships broken up, £16,143, we arrive at a sum of £1,064,153 as the net cost of repairs and maintenance of the Fleet, and adding £344,643 for the proportion of the establishment charges, which it is estimated should be borne by the repairs of ships, the amount is not far short of a million and a half, viz.:—£1,408,796. The mere statement of enormous sums of money and the putting together of large masses of figures would be of little practical use, unless it were for the purpose of comparison with similar statistics in former years. Accordingly, the Accountant-General furnishes us with concise tables, comparing these figures with their correlatives in the nine preceding years. And although in a return of this character there is no room for political bias, an admirable opportunity is afforded of contrasting the attention paid to repairs by the last Board of Admiralty and by its predecessors under Mr. Childers and Mr. Goschen. The ten years for which the figures are given may be divided into two periods of five years—from 1869 to 1874, when the Liberal Ministry was in office, and from 1874 to 1879, the period of the late Administration. Thus, we find that during the ten years the total amount spent on repairs was £7,981,451, of which £2,619,522 was on armoured and £5,361,929 on unarmoured ships. For this expenditure, the Liberals were responsible for only £3,093,743 in the aggregate, viz., £850,717 on armoured and £2,243,026 on unarmoured ships, while the Conservative Government spent £1,768,805 in repairing ironclads and £3,118,903 on unarmoured vessels, making a total of £4,887,708 on repairs, or a difference of £1,793,965 between the expenditure of the Conservative Government for repairs and that of the Liberal Government. Of this increase, £918,088 was upon armoured and £875,877 upon unarmoured ships. It is a misfortune, though an inevitable one, that there are no means, except by a comparison of the actual ships repaired, of arriving at an estimate of the work performed in return for this expenditure. In the case of ships building, we are open to set side by side the actual tonnage constructed in any given periods, for although, as Mr. Hamilton points out, the tonnage figures in the returns of construction represent only a calculated and not an actual quantity of work proposed or completed, they are sufficient for the purposes of comparison if the same standard of measurement is taken for each period compared. But in the matter of repairs, it is obviously impossible to establish any unit of calculation. And we can, therefore, only assume that the amount of money spent at one time represents the same amount of work as a similar sum spent at another time. A very valuable addition to the statistics of the repairs of the Navy, is, however, afforded in a table appended to the report, which shows not only the expenditure incurred in the repairs and maintenance of those armoured vessels which have been taken in hand during the year, but places side by side with these figures the original cost of construction, and the total expense incurred in repair from the date of completion. In this statement, the ships built by contract are distinguished from those built at the Royal dockyards, and thus a estimate can be formed to some extent of the comparative value of dockyard and contract work. No return that we have ever seen of the cost of the repairs of the Navy can compare with this statement for practical use, for it is only by such a comparison as is here instituted of the original cost with what may be called the growing cost of each ship, that the extravagance or economy of continual repairs can be fairly estimated. To take one or two examples in illustration of the bearing of these statistics. The Warrior, built by contract and completed in 1861, was the first British ironclad, and such has been the development in naval construction and artillery during the last twenty years, that for any practical service as an armour-plated fighting-ship, she must be regarded as all but useless; her original cost was £377,292, and she has since cost for alterations and repairs £200,185, of which nearly £7,000 was spent during the year 1878-79. The last ship built, according to this statement, was the Dreadnought, completed on February 15, 1879, at a cost of £619,739, and yet this vessel, in little more than a month after she was finished, had cost £3,600 for repairs and maintenance. One point in connection with this appears curious, though the amount involved is so small as to be scarcely worth mention; a sum of £84 is said to have been spent upon the Dreadnought, "prior to the year 1878-79, although, as we have seen, she was not completed until the end of that year. It is impossible for us to pursue the examination of these instructive tables any further at present, but we can recommend them to all who are interested in Naval finance, as being full of useful and curious information.

A cry of despair reaches us from the Red Sea and Persian Gulf, and it would really seem that the manner in which ships are detailed for duty in the hottest and most unhealthy portion of the East Indies station calls for some inquiry. For three summers has the Vulture been employed in the Persian Gulf, and those left in her may well thank Heaven that orders for them to come home have been sent to the station. The Philomel, which was commissioned in July, 1879, has got no further than the Red Sea since arriving on the station, and is now told off to be stationed at Aden, as senior officer's ship. The Seagull has had a similar experience, having been for more than twelve months sweltering in the Red Sea; but at last, it has been decided to give her crew a breath of cooler air, and she has been ordered to Seychelles to recruit health. That this was sorely needed, an inspection of her medical officer's reports would only too plainly show, for more than one-half of her officers have broken down on the trying service on which she has been employed, and the men have equally suffered. During the twelve months she has been on the station, one officer has died of heat-apoplexy, and six have been invalided home for illness caused by the climate; and as a further instance of the fearful nature of service in the Red Sea in the hot months, it is sufficient to add that the Himalaya, in passing through only, lost two officers by heat-apoplexy; and the Woodlark, also passing through the Red Sea on passage to Bombay, lost an officer from the same cause. We are ready to admit that the new Slave Convention and the Assab Bay question have called for the continuous presence of the British flag in the Red Sea of late; but we cannot but wonder that some arrangements should not have been made for the more speedy relief of ships thus employed. That the lives and health of officers and men should be sacrificed, and that the invaliding rate should be swelled, by this injudicious employment of ships for lengthened periods in a climate that is almost unbearable to Englishmen, is not to be accepted as a necessity of the Service. The Navy is ready enough to do and dare for the interests of those at home, but what wonder if a growl comes from ships thus detained for no very special reason,—when, too, it would not be impossible to give them reliefs, and the chance of drawing a breath of something like air, instead of panting under double awnings, and becoming debilitated and feeble? Whoever he may be who is responsible for the distribution of the ships on the East Indies station, we trust that our now drawing attention to the loss by death and invaliding which has followed the protracted employment of certain vessels in the Persian Gulf and Red Sea, may be sufficient to ensure a watchful eye being kept upon ships thus stationed, so that too much of this trying service may not fall upon a few. Is it too much to hope that the small craft on the station may be given an occasional run to Trincomalee or Mauritius, or that it may be the rule to send them to Seychelles to recruit. If the demands upon her Majesty's ships in the East Indies are so pressing, that it is difficult to allow them to have a spell of rest from the more trying portions of the command, then it would be better to strengthen the command, for it is a false economy, to say nothing worse, to wear out two ship's companies in one commission, as appears likely to be the case with the Seagull. We would also recommend to the Admiralty the advisability of considering whether the East Indies should not be looked upon as a sufficiently trying station, to render it worth while to withdraw ships after eighteen months' service in that command, as is frequently done with vessels on the West Coast of Africa. The North America station is, perhaps, more handy for an interchange of ships with the West Coast of Africa; but ships from the China station might be transferred to the East Indies, in order to give those relieved an opportunity of service on the Japan division to recruit health and strength, after a turn of duty in the Persian Gulf and Red Sea. It would add immensely to the popularity of the Service, if the system of interchange of stations between ships were made more general. It does not matter much where a ship may be, so long as each station has its proper complement within the limits of the command; and if a little trouble were devoted to the question of reliefs, instead of leaving it too much to chance, as is now too often the case, they could be carried out with the greatest regularity. The exact date at which a ship should be looking for her orders for home is known directly she is commissioned, and to detail a relief so soon as a ship arrives at the last year of her usual term of commission would be an easy matter. Indeed, no difficulty should be experienced in detailing reliefs between the West Coast, North America, and Mediterranean on the one side, and the East Indies, China, Australia, and the Pacific on the other, if those in authority would but take the trouble to work the matter out. Instead of spending years pottering about one coast and visiting one set of ports, there would then be change of scene and climate, and it would not fall to the lot of some few to get all the bad stations, while others were lucky enough to serve on the most healthy and most enjoyable.

The appointment of Naval Adviser to the Government of India, which has up to now been held by Rear-Admiral Bythesea, V.C., C.B., has been abolished, the Government having abandoned the idea of re-establishing an Indian Navy.

Rear-Admiral Stirling was at Esquimault on June 30, in the Triumph, having with the flag the Pelican and Rocket. The Pelican was about to leave for Tahiti.

The importance of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer movement in the Liverpool district is, we are glad to learn, such as to justify the necessary expenditure for the erection of a new battery for drill purposes at Birkenhead. This brigade, with its Welsh and Southport corps, maintains its name for efficiency.

Letters for the combined Channel and Reserve Squadrons must not be addressed to Vigo after to-day.

The departure of the Wye will be slightly delayed by the fire which occurred on board at Sheerness, but when ready for sea will embark supernumeraries for passage to Bermuda, and will take out ratings required to recommission the Urgent at Port Royal. At Colon, she will land supernumeraries required on the Pacific station, and will then proceed to Rio de Janeiro, to remove Naval stores from that place to Monte Video.

Commodore Richards was at Simon's Bay in the Boadicea on June 26, being then about to put to sea for a short cruise, returning on July 5.

The Hon. Patrick Lyon, midshipman of December, 1877, has been permitted to leave the Service, at the request of his father, the Earl of Strathmore.

Should the International Demonstrative Squadron in the Mediterranean become an accomplished fact, the question may arise as to which Admiral shall assume the chief command. If it be left to a matter of seniority, the weakest fleet may send the most senior flag-officer so as to obtain the chief command. Possibly, to make matters smooth, it will be found advisable to adopt the tactics of the diplomatic world, and to have a conference of the representatives of each nation before the combination-fleet weighs anchor or does anything. A contemporary has expressed an opinion that it will be a great disgrace to the English nation if the command of the Fleet is entrusted to a foreigner, as it has been invariably the rule for British ships to take precedence of all others upon the sea. But our contemporary has got a little mixed with the old rights of Great Britain in "the narrow seas," for we can scarcely expect to take precedence of a foreign Fleet in its own waters. According to the Vienna correspondent of the Standard, "the command of the Collective Fleet destined for Turkish waters will not, as has in some quarters been announced, be divided between the two supreme French and English naval officers; but, with a view to obviate any possibility of disputes, will be conferred on the British Admiral alone. If we may believe the Political Correspondence, Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick B. P. Seymour, K.C.B., the successor of Admiral Hornby in the command of the British Mediterranean Fleet, has been selected by the British Government to assume this responsible position."

In consequence of the death of Vice-Admiral Rowley Lambert, C.B., Rear-Admiral Arthur William Acland Hood, C.B., becomes Vice-Admiral; and Captain the Hon. William John Ward becomes Rear-Admiral on the Active List, thus placing at the disposal of the First Lord of the Admiralty an appointment as naval aide-de-camp to the Queen and the Commodoreship at Jamaica.

We understand that Lieutenant-Colonel Second Commandant Gregory, R.M.L.I., is about to retire from the corps, on the completion of thirty-three years' service, early in August. This unlooked-for step will promote Brevet Colonel Hunt, A.D.C., and Major Graham to the Plymouth Division, and Captain Way to be major at the Chatham Division, thus saving an officer who would otherwise have been retired for age next month; while Captain Dowding will be absorbed from the Supernumerary List.

Every preparation is being made to get the troopers ready for immediate service. The dates of departure of the Indian troopships will, therefore, have to be modified.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, according to a telegram from Nice, arrived there on Saturday, and proceeded in uniform to the Prefecture to pay a complimentary visit to the Prefect of the Alpes Maritimes. Sir Beauchamp Seymour was introduced by the British Vice-Consul. The Prefect and Secretary-General, who had been previously notified of the arrival of the Admiral by the Vice-Consul, were also in full uniform. The interview, which was of a very cordial character, lasted about half an hour. The Squadron was to leave Ville Franche on Tuesday for the Hyères, Barcelona, Malaga, and Gibraltar.

According to the preliminary programme of the movements of the Indian troop-ships issued on Friday, the Malabar, Captain J. F. G. Grant, will sail on September 26, calling at Queenstown; the Serapis, Captain Guy O. Twiss, will sail on October 3 direct for Bombay; and the Crocodile, Captain F. Proby Doughty, will sail on October 10 direct for Bombay. This programme is subject to alteration.

The Portsmouth Chamber of Commerce has shown a strong desire to know what half-pay officers do with themselves, and has memorialised the Admiralty to make it compulsory for all Naval officers on half-pay to register their addresses. The tradesmen of Portsmouth are, of course, largely dependent upon the Service for their business, and, doubtless, their "little accounts" are sometimes overlooked. But the commercial element of a Naval port should have a keen sense of the difficulties under which Naval officers suffer, and their readiness to pay off old scores when they are on full pay should always be acknowledged. Unless an officer has a fair income from other sources, it is too ridiculous to expect him to pay his way when the country only gives him a pittance, called "half-pay," just to keep him from doing anything else for his livelihood. This paltry retaining-fee usually compels the poorer half-pays to retire to some very quiet corner of the country, where they may rub along as best they may until the country again requires their services. But the Portsmouth tradesmen want to add to the worries of the Naval officer's half-pay periods, by disturbing him with "duns." The Admiralty has informed the Chamber of Commerce that the addresses of half-pay officers are already sufficiently easily obtained, but the shopkeepers are not satisfied. As a rule, we are sure there is but little reason to complain of the non-payment of bills by Naval officers, and this agitation from Portsmouth seems uncalled for.

The Atalanta fête held on Saturday at Kensington House, in aid of the Fund, was honoured with the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, who arrived there after the distribution of the prizes at Wimbledon. Stalls were held in the grounds by the Princess Christian and the Duchess of Teck, and the attendance was exceptionally numerous and fashionable.

The condition of the sheathing of the Shannon, as reported from the ship, cannot surely have escaped the attention of the Admiralty, yet we do not hear of any relief being provided for the ship. The state of the health of those on board is also not favourably reported on, and it would be well from these causes alone to order the ship home. But there is yet a stronger reason for having something better than an inefficient ironclad in the Pacific, as of all places in the world that is the one on which there is most likely to be some active work; and an efficient ironclad or two would be useful to reinforce the British Squadron on the China station, should there be an outbreak of hostilities, as has long been promised. The Czar has taken the unusual course of addressing a letter to the newly appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Russian Fleet in the North Pacific, expressing a hope that he may have an opportunity of distinguishing himself. A large number of officers have gone out with Admiral Lessovsky, and these would doubtless be drafted to the armed cruisers which have been mustered on the station. Meanwhile, we appear to be doing nothing to strengthen our hands in the event of British interests calling for active protection, and the late First Lord of the Admiralty has been so impressed with this policy of inactivity, that he asked a question on the subject in the House. The Government simply gives an assurance that the matter shall not be lost sight of; but there is little use in looking on and not being able to do anything. A contemporary has gravely asserted that "the Admiralty have already sent instructions to the Admiral commanding the East India station to provide the necessary reinforcements." But to tell an Admiral to provide reinforcements is, to say the least, a trifle vague. Admiral Coote does not carry ironclads in his pocket, and our contemporary says the Admiralty do not intend to send reinforcements from England. The small number of ships in the Pacific, under the command of Rear-Admiral Stirling, will not be able to spare any ships to Vice-Admiral Coote, but it seems that in the opinion of some people the difficulty is easily got over by sending out an official letter telling an Admiral "to provide reinforcements."

In the interests of the Service, it has been decided to retain Fleet-Surgeon Fegen, C.B., in his present appointment until the labours of the Committee on Medical Officers have been brought to a close.

Endeavours are being made to introduce a better system for the maintenance of a reserve of seamen at each port, so that the different grades may be better distributed, and it may be possible to commission the largest ship in the Service without drawing men from every port. At present, to commission a ship, it is necessary to ask for certain ratings from the other ports. But it is now intended that arrangements shall be made whereby each port shall have a complete complement or two available at a few hours' notice. This is a step in the right direction, and we congratulate the present Admiralty at having set its face so plainly against the reproach of skeleton reserves and dummy ships. Upon the Commanders-in-Chief will rest the responsibility of entering new hands, when any ratings shall fall short.

The Wivern has been laid up in reserve at Hong Kong, having been paid off on June 14, and thus has the Naval establishment at that place, which was but poorly protected, been given some greater security. Some of the crew of the Wivern, on being paid off, were at once utilised to commission the Kestrel, which has been for some time under repair at Hong Kong, and is now reported fit for further service.

We understand that the Marine Office has had under consideration the advisability of calling upon the lieutenant-colonels who have been passed over when selections have been made for commands, to send in their applications for retirement. The position of these officers is certainly most uncomfortable, brought, as they often may be, into close contact with those who have been promoted over them. Although selection is the rule in the Navy, the chances are that one who has been passed over is rarely called upon to serve in the same ship with a commanding officer who was at one time his junior. Their Lordships are, however, inclined to leave the matter to the individual feelings of the officers mostly concerned, and hesitate to disturb them so long as they find service in the Royal Marines agreeable to them.

That obnoxious report on the character and disposition of Naval officers, to which we have previously so strongly objected, does not fail to raise great dissatisfaction as soon as issued. From each station where the order and form have been received, there come to us the same indignant protests against being thus placed in the power of a commanding officer who may be but a very poor reader of character, or a man of strong likes and dislikes. It is not the kind of return that should have been required of a Service of which the officers are gentlemen, and their Lordships have committed a grave error in giving occasion for such dissatisfaction as is felt at the issue of this new system of reporting on officers. One commanding officer, being anxious to give their Lordships the fullest details of the capabilities of the officers under him, has, we hear, written to ask whether he is to order them to be periodically examined by the doctor.

The Alexandra, Téméraire, Monarch, Rupert, Invincible, Thunderer, and Helicon left Genoa at 11 a.m. on July 17, leaving the Condor behind. Soon after, the Helicon left the Fleet, and proceeded to Villefranche. Steam tactics were the order of the day on the 17th and 19th. On the 20th the ships cleared for action, and formed in single column, line ahead, and fired electric broadsides at a target on passing it. On the 21st steam tactics again took place, as also on the morning of the 22nd. On the 19th the Helicon and Condor both joined the Fleet, bringing mails from Villefranche and Genoa, and after having received the Fleet's letters, &c., for England, both proceeded to Villefranche. The Fleet arrived at Villefranche on the 22nd, at 3.30 p.m. There was a rumour on arrival that the Fleet was only to remain 48 hours, but that was soon altered, and it was given out that the ships were to remain until Tuesday. On Saturday another rumour was that something had been heard from England, and that the Fleet would remain at Villefranche until further orders; but the opinion in the Fleet is that it may have to turn round, and go to the eastward, instead of the westward. All the ships have been complaining of the heat, but Villefranche is the coolest place they have been to. A great many officers have visited Monte Carlo, but we have not heard of any fortunes being made. On Sunday the Fleet dressed with mast-head flags, and fired a salute of 21 guns, in honour of some French day, but no one seemed to know what. The number victualled in the Fleet on July 25 was 3,210, and the number sick 147.

The Balloon Society of Great Britain is about to see how far Commander Cheyne's idea of reaching the Pole by means of aerial navigation is likely to be practicable. Several eminent names are connected with this project, and the president is a member of the Council of the Aeronautical Society. From this effort Commander Cheyne is likely to obtain more real assistance than from a solitary experiment at the Alexandra Palace. Should it be believed that the value of the balloon has been overrated, then the large equipment required for this attempt will be avoided, but balloons will still be taken with this expedition, for purposes of observation.

The idea of purchasing six Hotchkiss revolving cannon of one-and-a-half inch calibre has finally been abandoned at the Admiralty, owing to the very superior results just obtained with the naval gun of that calibre at Whale Island. Instead, the Admiralty will purchase two Hotchkiss revolving cannon of 47 and 53-millimetres calibre, to be used as experimental guns. The latter calibre of gun weighs over a ton, and will be fired against a similar calibre Nordenfelt gun, which does not weigh one-fourth of that weight.

The following arrangements have been made by the Director of Transports at the Admiralty for the dispatch of troops to India. The vessels to be employed are the Orontes, Malabar, Euphrates, and Himalaya. The Orontes will leave on August 3, the Euphrates on August 6, and the Malabar and Himalaya about August 12. Each vessel will take a battalion and a half, the Orontes and Euphrates taking troops from the Mediterranean, while the Malabar and Himalaya will take their quotient from this country.

The German Baltic squadron, under the command of Captain Sachs, is lying off Arcona, in Ruegen. Experiments on a large scale are about to be carried out with torpedoes, torpedo-boats, and machine-guns. It is intended to blow up the old Barbarossa, of 1,138 tons, with Whitehead fish-torpedoes, and both the Crown Prince and Prince William of Prussia are expected at Arcona to witness the proceedings.

The King of Italy left for Naples on Monday on a visit of inspection to the Italia, sister-ship to the Lepanto, now building at Castellamare. These ships are much larger than the Duilio or the Dandolo.

Captain O'Shea, M.P., wrote a letter, which we published last week, pointing out that Sir W. Codrington, a Major-General of 1855, was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-General, under the 10th clause of the Warrant of October 6, 1854, "having commanded in chief her Majesty's Army in the Crimea during a period of war, and entirely to her Majesty's satisfaction;" and the gallant Member seemed to think he had scored, in his contention with Mr. Childers. We may, however, be permitted to doubt the exactness of the data, in their relation to the spirit of the Secretary of State for War's argument. Major-General Sir W. Codrington had the local rank of General, when he commanded a British Army which was at one time larger than any British force ever under the orders of the Duke of Wellington, in front of a great European enemy; and he was promoted, not to be General—the rank he held locally—but to be Lieutenant-General, one grade below his local and one grade above his actual rank. The 48th Article, which Captain O'Shea triumphantly quotes, states that a Lieutenant-General, or a Major-General, or a Colonel who has been employed in the temporary rank of Lieutenant-General, may be granted a step of permanent rank on the special recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief, if he shall have conducted himself for five years in time of peace, or for any shorter period in time of war, "to our satisfaction." Sir G. Wolseley, who was a captain when Sir W. Codrington commanded the Army in the Crimea, was a Lieutenant-General when he was sent out to South Africa last year, and he was given the local rank of General, "for the convenience of our Service." His military services began in July, 1879, after the battle of Ulundi and the resignation of Lord Chelmsford, and ended in December, 1879, with the capture of Sekukuni, but he had, before and after, much civil business as Governor and Commissioner in Zululand, Natal, and the Transvaal, independently of his military duties. On his return to England he was made G.C.B.; but his friends insist that, as of right, he should be promoted to full General. If he were entitled to a step of permanent rank, as a matter of course a full General he certainly ought to be. But "may" is not "shall be." Lord Chelmsford, who, after all said and done, commanded the army which placed Zululand at the feet of Great Britain, was not confirmed in his local rank when he returned to England, and yet we suppose he "conducted himself to her Majesty's satisfaction" in his command, or he would not have got the Grand Cross of the Bath. If Sir Garnet Wolseley refused the G.C.B. for his services against the Ashantees, it does not follow that when he did receive it, he took it as the reward for services against King Coffee Calcalli, and not as the reward for services, civil and military, rendered in South Africa. It is very well known that Sir Garnet Wolseley did not approve of the intervention of Captain O'Shea, and indeed the latter has stated that he acted without the concurrence or acquiescence of the Quartermaster-General, so that the case may be discussed on its merits without giving offence to a distinguished soldier; but it is also understood that Sir Garnet takes the same view as Captain O'Shea does respecting his own right to the confirmation of his rank, or, to put it more exactly, that he considers the withholding of it is a sort of slur upon him. In a letter to a contemporary, Captain O'Shea says that the reasons for the withholding of the favour are well known. We wish the honourable and gallant gentleman would let us know what they are.

By the untimely death of Lieutenant-Colonel Hazlerigg, the country has lost the services of an officer, who if somewhat exacting in his discharge of his duties as a commanding officer of a battalion, was an energetic, capable soldier, whose heart and soul were in his profession. A keen sportsman, a capital shot, a good man in the saddle, and an indefatigable drill, with a fine frame and iron constitution, Colonel Hazlerigg sank under the influences of the South-African climate, in the prime of life, just as his career in the higher grades of the Army was fairly opening upon him.

It may interest our readers at this juncture to see, by the accompanying extracts from the three last letters received from an officer serving on the Afghan frontier, what has been the impression out there as to the unsatisfactory character of our mode of proceeding generally, and the improbability of any real good resulting from it, so long as Exeter Hall gets it all its own way:—

"June 13.—Everything seems as unsettled as ever up at the front, and with our intensely stupid way of going on, there seems very little prospect of its ever being otherwise. If only we went in at them, burnt their villages and crops, and gave them a good punishing, we might have some chance of ending the business; but instead of that, we just fine them £200 when a tribe murders a dozen or two of our men and steals a quantity of cattle, and then they pay up, laugh at us when we are gone, and take an early opportunity of repeating the operation, with the fine (in rupees that we have paid them) in their pockets."

"June 20.—There can be no doubt that we are in for a vast deal more trouble. Fancy the way they are bamboozling our politicals, till they really believe that the country is quieting down! Even the natives here are laughing at them, and saying, 'Of course they will be quiet till the crops are cut; after that, see what will come of it.'

"June 27.—As regards the proceedings at the front, everything seems as unsettled as it has been, and must be, as long as we continue to wage war in our absurd fashion, making ourselves the laughing-stock of every native."

We learn from Victoria by last mail, "The question of defences has been under the notice of the new Government, and some members of the Ministry, with Colonel Scratchley, R.E., and other officers, have been on a trip in the Victoria to the Heads, to see how the works recommended by Sir William Jervois were progressing. It appears that under the late Government comparatively little was done. The fort at Swan Island, which would command the South Channel, up which all vessels drawing more than eighteen feet of water would have to pass to reach Hobson's Bay, is to be taken in hand at once."

The other day we noticed a disreputable-looking man, with corduroy trousers and a dirty, red serge-frock. On speaking to a recruiting-serjeant, he suggested that the fellow was a militiaman just dismissed from training, who had taken with him his worn-out uniform. It is a pity that any soldiers, whatever branch of the Service they may belong to, are allowed to receive their old uniform, for the result is frequently the exhibition of which we speak, and consequent discredit on the profession of Arms.

"An Infantry Field-Officer" writes:—"I also, like your recent Artillery correspondent, had an opportunity of testing the merits of the range-finder invented by the young German Hensoldt, at Chatham, and I agree with him in thinking that the War Office will neglect its duty if it allows this admirable invention to be secured by the German War Office. We cannot afford to let the Germans secure all the best inventions, whilst we work in a groove, and refuse to entertain any proposal which does not directly or indirectly emanate from the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich. We ought to obtain the best of everything for military purposes, and you have performed valuable service in drawing attention to the matter." "Fusilier," writing on the subject, says:—"With reference to your remarks upon the letter of 'A Field-Officer of Artillery,' anent a range-finder which was, through the agency of Colonel Bigge, 2nd Battalion 5th Fusiliers, (in whose regiment young Hensoldt was then serving), brought to the notice of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, and favourably reported upon, I am afraid that it is in Germany, and not in England, that the young German and his invention are to be found, for the day after the young man was confined in the guard-room at Chatham for desertion from the 20th Hussars, his range-finder was sent to his father in Germany (insured for £10), whither the inventor stated he should, at the earliest opportunity, follow."

If the military power of this Empire were to be estimated by the expressions of satisfaction which come from official quarters on the occasion of public parades and reviews, the country might rest content. But every one knows that these expressions are "official," and that they are, indeed, becoming almost as unmeaning as the complimentary phrases which custom sanctions in the "My dear Sir's" and "Believe me, yours very faithfully's" of ordinary epistolary correspondence. It scarcely needs a soldier's eye to detect the deterioration of the British Line, and those who are soldiers and are in the secret are well aware of the distressing force of the reasons which determined the last Government not to accept the responsibility of publishing Lord Airey's Report, or, rather, the evidence produced before his Commission, and which have been accepted as conclusive by their successors. We are at liberty to criticise the appearance of the French Army, and to discount the official eulogies of M. Grévy; but the efficiency of the armies of foreign Powers is, happily, not a matter of primary importance to us. What vitally concerns us as Englishmen is the state of the English Army as a whole, and it is no compensation for any general falling off in the quality of that Army, as a whole, to be told that certain regiments of cavalry or infantry are good, and that the artillery is excellent. Mr. Childers has accepted the responsibility of keeping back the Airey Report, and the Duke of Cambridge has expressed his approval of that course. It is an open secret that the evidence would have caused a very general feeling of uneasiness, insecurity, and alarm, and the policy which led to its suppression, because of the effect the publication might produce outside, may be justified, but on those in high places, to whom the facts are known, there rests a great responsibility. They are bound to act on what they know,—not with haste, but with speed. In another place will be found a letter from an earnest Army reformer—in the best sense of the term—which deserves, we make bold to say, the most earnest consideration on the part of the Powers that be, of the Army itself, and of the country at large.

Great dissatisfaction is expressed throughout the country by reason of the favouritism which, it is contended, has been shown to certain Metropolitan Volunteer Corps,—such, for instance, as the London Scottish, Queen's Westminster, Artists', and Inns of Court. Some years ago, an order was issued from the War Office making it almost imperative that Volunteer Corps clothed in grey should change their uniforms to the national colour. A glance at the Army List will show that most of the provincial regiments have fallen in with the views of the Authorities. The change has been carried out at great cost and inconvenience, and, as a correspondent points out, "many an old and most valuable officer has been lost to the Service, not feeling disposed to go to the expense of providing himself with an entirely new outfit." Of course it was understood that all regiments were to be treated alike, and that, the fiat having gone forth, a general transformation would follow. As yet, however, we hear of no steps being taken to compel certain metropolitan corps to conform to the order. We quite agree with our correspondent, who commands a Lancashire regiment, when he says, "It would be a lasting disgrace to our Military administration, were the War Office to give way to the wishes of certain noble personages, and allow a few London corps to retain their old grey uniforms, when nearly all other corps have carried out the change readily. Such a proceeding would have the effect of making provincial Volunteers more than ever convinced that the commanding officers of a few favoured metropolitan regiments virtually command the Volunteer force, and that H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge is only placed at the head of the Service for form's sake." We have no sympathy with the insubordinate spirit which some commanding officers have shown in opposing the wishes of the War Office, and we are only surprised that the War Office has allowed itself to be dictated to in the matter.

In another direction the Metropolitan Volunteers are, it would appear, to be favoured. In all other counties the several corps have been obliged to submit to a renumbering of regiments, which has been rendered absolutely necessary since the carrying-out of the consolidation scheme, but as a Liverpool paper says, and not without reason,—"A metropolitan contemporary hopes the renumbering will not extend to Middlesex, but we think the London Volunteers receive too many favours as it is. The whole force would now be uniformly clothed, were it not that the Metropolitan Volunteers seem to have induced the Authorities to relax their requirements, after so many of the provincial battalions had, at a heavy pecuniary sacrifice, changed their dress, under the impression that they were required to do so." Favouritism is a thing that should not be tolerated, and the War Office will commit a most serious mistake if it allows the metropolitan commanding officers to go on over-riding its decisions as they have been doing lately, for things will go from bad to worse. The unfortunate incident of the Hull Artillery should teach a lesson. There are many who hold that that affair would never have happened, had not the metropolitan Lieutenant-Colonels been given such undue latitude as to allow the force generally to suppose that provincial commanding officers could have their own way to the same extent that a number of London "Cheffs" have done.

As officers of the Indian Staff Corps obtain their majorities after eight years' service as captain, the term being based on what was said to be the normal rate of promotion in the British Army, it appears that the Purchase captains of 1867, who have 13 years' service as captains, have been superseded by 189 officers now majors in the Bengal Staff Corps, by 134 in the Madras Staff Corps, and 84 in the Bombay Staff Corps, or a total of 407 officers in the Indian Staff Corps, all of whom were junior as captains to the officers, a list of whose names we gave in our last, as being most closely affected by the limitation clause in the Royal Warrant.

As officers of the Indian Staff Corps are complaining of supersession by their brother-officers on the Indian General List, the amount of supersession that the British Infantry captain of 13 years' captain's service has undergone is a good deal greater than this in India alone, and must have much affected the chances of distinction of old captains like Captain Baker, of the 67th, and others whose regiments are serving in Afghanistan. Local rank used to keep the chances a little even, but, as most of our readers know, that was abolished some two years ago.

"There can be no doubt that the dogs will unite in a pack to hunt down the sheep; but they will surely fight over his carcase." Such was the expression of a very able Turkish diplomat this week, in reply to a remark that united Europe could not be resisted. And there is great danger that the prophecy may be realised. The Liberal theory seems to be that Turks are not human beings, and that they have no such human passions as pride of race and love of country; that their faith is only fanaticism, their courage mere animal fury; that they are utterly destitute of the sense of justice, and that they are only amenable to bullying. That is the threat that is to be backed by force. It seems to be at once wonderful and lamentable, if not monstrous, that the Sultan should object to yield up two provinces of his Empire to the State which has been created out of the possessions of his ancestors, won as William of Normandy won England, and William of Prussia won Alsace and Lorraine; and that he should point to the clauses of the Treaty of Berlin which the Powers have permitted to be quite ignored, as good reason to demur to the execution by him of the clauses which give him a deadly blow. At present Russia is mistress of the situation, whether we like it or not, and it is the British Ministers who have enthroned her in Bulgaria, whence she keeps her eye on the City of the Czars. It is almost incredible that any one can believe in an honest concert between the Powers to work for the good of Greece and Montenegro alone. The interests of Austria are directly opposed to the object of Russia in working for the consolidation of a Sclavonic kingdom or princedom, resting on the Danube between the Balkans and the Carpathians; and the interests of England and France may be described as the negative of the interests of Russia and Austria; while Germany, serenely conscious of her strength, stands at "attention," quite prepared to step in at some opportune moment to exercise her vast influence, in her own favour and in detriment to her rivals. A united squadron may be an interesting or terrifying spectacle to people on shore, but it is not easy to see how it will force the Albanians to submit, or coerce the Turks to submit to Greek occupation in Thessaly and Epirus. Seaside towns may be bombarded and forts destroyed, but if the Turks prove as stout as their words, it will need an expeditionary army to overcome their resistance on land, and the history of such undertakings is pregnant with warnings. It is a dangerous game for the Empress of India to play at, and the millions of Mahommedans who own her sway will not be disposed to regard her rule with affection, when they hear that her fleets and armies are engaged in the overthrow of the power of the Father of the Faithful, and in the spoliation of their Osmanli brethren.

In anticipation of the ceremony which took place in Paris on the 14th inst., M. Charles Laurent has lately been celebrating the chief glories of the various French regiments, and chronicling the exploits which are recorded on their colours. He has also entered into some interesting details as to the formation of various regiments. Thus, he tells us that the first ten regiments of the Line correspond with the old corps which were called respectively:—Colonel-General, Picarde, Piémont, Provence, Navarre, Armagnac, Champagne, Austrasie, Normandie, Neustrie. Among the remarkable deeds referred to, we read, for example, that the 8th Regiment—the old Austrasie—sometimes under the orders of the Comte de Bussy, sometimes under those of Suffren—struggled for eighteen months in India against British forces five and six times superior in numbers. The 8th thought at first it would only have Sepoys to deal with, but it was delighted to find itself opposed to British soldiers. During the siege of Gondalore, says the writer, Bussy attacked an English regiment with so much impetuosity that he found himself separated from the town by another body of the enemy, which attacked him in rear and flank. Turning round to his soldiers, he cried, "Remember that you are children of Champagne!" And he regained the town, "for his regiment, electrified, passed over the belly of the English with irresistible impetuosity." However, there is to be no mention of India on the new colours of the 8th. The following is one of many anecdotes told about the 9th Regiment:—"During the siege of a Dutch place, a soldier of Normandie, of immense size, crossed the courtine carrying on his head a bomb with a lighted match, which he let fall among the enemy. They were dispersed, charged, and put to flight. History has not preserved the name of this gallant fellow." In 1710 Normandie highly distinguished itself against the English, Captain Montalembert, of that corps, with fifteen men, obliging 150 Britons to lay down their arms. The 9th, too, at Fontenoy, was the first to break the English infantry, which, according to Marshal Saxe, was not broken, but retired as no French troops could have done. In 1807, this regiment defended a cemetery so gallantly against overwhelming odds, that Napoleon had "Dix contre Un" embroidered on its standard. It may be asked why this proud inscription should not be continued. It is recorded that the first colonel of the 11th Regiment was Cardinal Richelieu, and that it was at first called "Cardinal-Duc," but the Cardinal, being afterwards made Grand Master of Navigation, changed its name to "Marine." The second colonel was Cardinal Mazarin. "Marine," which never went to sea, appears to have greatly distinguished itself under M. de Turenne; and in 1688, at the siege of Hockheim, all its officers were wounded. "Marine" was afterwards with Bonaparte at the siege of Toulon. The 12th Regiment, by all accounts, treated us very badly. It captured Martinique from us, and 4,000 Englishmen who disembarked at St. Vincent laid down their arms to 800 men of Auxerrois. In 1781, the same regiment seized on a fort, and captured 400 Englishmen and 500 Scotchmen and a large black force; and then undertook an expedition against St. Eustache, where "the French corps had hardly disembarked, when it surprised the English garrison at drill on the glacis. Captain La Mothe and his men penetrated into the fort with the fugitives, and pulled up the bridge, to cut off the retreat of those who were outside, without taking into consideration that they were shutting themselves in. Then they made the English who had entered lay down their arms. The 13th and 15th English regiments were made prisoners the same day." In Italy, the 12th, after many other exploits, was highly commended by General Bonaparte. Concerning the 13th Regiment, Bourbonnais, we read that, at Melsungen, in August, 1765, the crack companies of that regiment remained for six weeks entrenched behind some hedges, resisting the Allies, without being relieved, and without undressing. Bourbonnais was at York Town and afterwards at Heliopolis, where Kleber beat a Turko-English force ten times his own strength. Among many other exploits performed by the 15th Regiment, we learn that at the combat of Mesle it gained fourteen crosses of St. Louis and twenty-two gratifications, for an admirable charge, during which it had to run a quarter of a league before crossing bayonets with the English. "In 1761, the same feat was reproduced; the regiment, after an hour at the double, fell upon 6,000 English and Hanoverians, at Friedberg, and captured 1,500 men, 15 guns, and 2 standards. It was recompensed with 14 crosses of St. Louis and 15,000 francs by way of gratification." It is clear that Bearn, as this regiment was called, must have been kept in excellent wind. No regiment in the French Service, however, has more glorious records than the 17th, or Auvergne, to which the Chevalier d'Assas belonged. In 200 years Auvergne never lost a standard, and it was therefore nicknamed "Invicta Legio." Auvergne, strange to say, was never mixed up in civil war, and when it took up its quarters in Provence in 1658 it had been absent from France for 26 years. The Protestant element was very strong in Auvergne, and this led the King of Spain to say that the only way to put the regiment to flight was to sound the Mass. The gallant exploits of Auvergne were very numerous, but do not greatly concern us. We, however, remark with some astonishment that this corps captured a gun at Dettingen. If so, it did not long retain possession of the piece. M. Charles Laurent has not yet completed his chronicle, such as it is, and is calling on the various regiments to furnish him with records. There may be, and there most likely are, two opinions with regard to the veracity of many of his anecdotes, and it is a pity that he did not eliminate some, which spoil what otherwise might have been a very interesting work.

THE DISASTER IN AFGHANISTAN.

[From Viceroy, July 28, 1880.]—Gen. Burrows has been seriously defeated by Ayoub Khan. Primrose has vacated cantonments at Candahar and retired to citadel. We are pushing forward reinforcements already on their way as quickly as possible, and sending large additional reinforcements from India. It may be necessary to anticipate despatch of troops from England intended for this season's reliefs.

[From Governor of Bombay, July 28, 1880.]—Clear the line. Primrose telegraphs to-day from Candahar. Terrible disaster. Gen. Burrows' force annihilated. We are going into citadel. Gen. Phayre telegraphed to collect what forces he can and march on Candahar. Posts are being concentrated at Chuman. Message ends. I have telegraphed Simla. We can send another brigade, if necessary.

[From Governor of Bombay, July 28, 1880.]—Clear the line. Horse Artillery, E Baty. E Brig., 3rd Bombay Cavalry, 3rd Sind Horse two squadrons, 2nd Compy. sappers, 66th Queen's, six companies, 1st and 30th Native Infantry. Nothing more known; telegraph interrupted.

[From Viceroy, July 29, 1880.]—Officers of Burrows' force who reached Candahar safely, reported to 11 a.m., 27th:—Cols. St. John and W. Mainwaring, 30th Native Infantry, and C. Griffiths, 1st Native Infantry; Major C. Oliver, 66th Foot; Lieuts. J. Whittuck, 1st Native Infantry, and Geoghegan, 3rd Cavalry; Surg.-Major C. Harvey, Horse Artillery; Surgs. G. Burrows, 3rd Sind Horse; J. Eaton, 16th Native Infantry; A. Dane, 1st Native Infantry. Reported casualties.—E Bat. B Brig. Horse Artillery, Lieut. E. Osborne killed, Major G. Blackwood wounded; 66th Foot, Capt. W. Roberts killed, Lieut. H. Lynch wounded; 3rd Native Cavalry, Capt. M. Mayne and Lieut. G. Reid wounded; 1st Native Infanty, Lieut. W. Aslett killed, Lieut.-Col. H. S. Anderson wounded; 30th Native Infantry, Lieut. W. Justice, Capt. H. Smith, and Lieut. D. Cole killed. Communication with Candahar interrupted, 11 a.m., so no further report of Burrows' troops reaching Candahar yet received.

[From Governor of Bombay, July 29, 1880.]—Clear the line. In answer to a telegram to Gen. Phayre for all particulars known, he replies as follows. Message begins:—Quetta, July 29. In reply to your Excellency's telegram, the following are the notes of a conversation had yesterday morning at the telegraph-office between Gen. Primrose and myself just before the wire was cut. Gen. Primrose said:—"I received your telegram of last night. Anxious to see you coming in as large force as you can. Small parties of Burrows' force constantly arriving. It would appear they were pursued only three or four miles. Have not yet ascertained our losses, but fear they have been severe. Two guns lost. Have sent Brooke out to assist and bring in stragglers. They are strong in artillery, have 35 guns, which they work well. Killed:—Osborne, Royal Horse Artillery; Roberts, 66th; Aslett, 1st Grenadiers; Smith, Justice, Cole, Jacob's Rifles; Owen, 3rd Cavalry. Wounded:—Anderson, 1st Grenadiers, severely; Blackwood, Royal Horse Artillery; Lynch, 66th; Mayne and Reid, 3rd Cavalry. This is all we know of at present. Gen. Burrows all right. Dr. Harvey brought news of battery, that only two guns had been taken, the other guns coming in. The following officers have come in:—Col. Mainwaring, Elton, Burroughs, Harvey, Geoghegan, Oliver, Griffiths, Whittuck (?), Dane; also the Wali." Message ends.

[From Viceroy, July 29.]—Sir R. Sandeman telegraphs he can give no distinct information where and when Burrows' action was fought, and whether he attacked or was attacked. When wire broke, Primrose did not know extent of defeat, but thought disaster not so great as at first believed, though very severe. Primrose's only fear is scarcity of water.

[From Viceroy, July 29.]—Khan of Kelat, having heard of Burrows' defeat, has telegraphed to Sir R. Sandeman, expressing his sincere devotion to British Government, and offers every assistance in his power. Places resources of his State at our disposal, sending 150 camels and 100 horses at once, and expresses readiness to supply any grain required. I have replied, expressing cordial appreciation of the Khan's loyalty and promptitude.

[From Governor of Bombay, July 29, 1880.]—Artillery—D-B Horse, Kurrachee, ordered up; F-2 en route; 5-8 (at) Kirkee. Cavalry—1st Madras en route; 2nd Light; 1st Sind; 11th Foot, Bolan; 15th Foot, ordered up. Native Infantry—3rd Sind; 9th; 24th; 8th landed Kurrachee to take place of 3rd. Phayre is, I understand, to receive one battery and a European regiment from Punjaub. His field column will muster three batteries, nine squadrons, three British and four native battalions, leaving three native battalions on line. Expects to be ready, including transport, in 15 days. Candahar was provisioned up to end of October.

[From Viceroy, July 30, 1880.]—Sandeman reports having sent out reliable men to obtain information from Candahar, but country from Khojak to Candahar being disturbed, messengers may be ten days bringing answer. The Mel Abdul Wahman and Dubrai posts, retiring towards Chaman along line of communications, have arrived Gatai Fighting reported there, but the post is holding its own. Assistance going from Chaman to-day. Country reports Burrows' fight severe, both sides losing heavily. Kakars and Atchakzais reported collecting, but force in Quetta and Pishin sufficiently strong to check them.

The following list was corrected down to June 26, and has been amplified from private and official sources in London:—

Brown, commanding brigades; Major A. R. Heyland, Bombay S.C., Major H. J. Stock, Bombay S.C., and Capt. J. W. Andrews, 2-11th Foot, brigade-majors; Surg.-Major L. S. Bruce, I.M.D., P.M.O.

The Times says:—"The battalions of Infantry that were to have come home this year are the 2nd Batn. 1st Royal Scots, the Ist Batn. 5th Fusiliers, 73rd, 59th, 1st Batn. 6th, 2nd Batn. 60th Rifles, 83rd, 92nd Highlanders, 85th Light Infantry, and possibly the 48th. It now seems probable that, with the exception of the 1st Batn. 6th, all these regiments may have to remain abroad for at least another year. With regard to the cavalry, the 17th Lancers, now at Mhow, in the Bombay Presidency, where they recently arrived from South Africa, will at once proceed to Afghanistan. The 15th Hussars, at Meerut, were under orders for home, and the 10th Hussars, who, as well as the 15th, were in the former campaign, are near the north-western frontier. The 10th Hussars suffered considerably in the last campaign, and as yet can hardly be in a fit state to resume active work in the field. But the 15th Hussars entered upon the late operations and remained throughout in an exceptionally efficient condition, and they may again be ordered to the front. The 8th Hussars form part of the Army of Northern Afghanistan, and the 13th Hussars, at Lucknow, now under the command of Sir Baker Russell, are also available for service. One of the two cavalry regiments in the Madras Presidency, 12th Lancers and 14th Hussars, could also be spared; and the King's Dragoon Guards, now in South Africa, will embark for India next month."

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

A very successful meeting has had a cloud cast over it by the doubts which towards the end were entertained respecting the marking; unfortunately, in one case at least, with such grounds for suspicion as to lead to the impression that some of the prizes have been gained by unfair means. When the matter came to be investigated, it was discovered that successful collusion between marker and competitor was by no means so difficult as many persons imagined. The parties implicated will, of course, be severely punished, if the charges are substantiated, but with the practical working which the Association has experienced during the last twenty years, such practices should have been placed beyond the range of possibility. The Loyd-Lindsay mounted competition on Friday of last week was not so brilliant a performance, judged altogether, as it was last year. It was, as usual, open to Yeomanry, Volunteer Light Horse, and Mounted Rifles, but the Yeomanry only appeared on the three-quarter mile course, which was crowded with spectators. Seven squads entered. All were in "drill order," and excellently mounted. The time allowed for riding the distance, clearing three hurdles, and firing, dismounted, five rounds at each of the distances of 500 and 600 yards, was 10 minutes, five marks being deducted from the aggregate score made on the targets for each half-minute, or portion of half-minute, over that time. Last year the Royal Devon Yeomanry took 11 min. 10 sec. to do the work, the shooting score amounting to 78 points, and with 15 marks deducted for overtime, they gained the first prize. Upon the present occasion, the second squad of the Royal Bucks completed in 10 min. 3 sec., but made 72 points. Better—as it should be—was the performance on the following day of the 5th (Princess Charlotte's) Dragoon Guards over the same course, and under nearly the same conditions, for the Royal Cambridge Challenge Trophy. The section of four, in field-day order, which placed them at a disadvantage as compared with the Yeomanry, who rode, as before stated, in drill order, took 9 min. 12 sec., as compared with 8 min. 27 sec. last year, their score with the Martini-Henry carbine being 97 points. The 5th have reason to be proud of their reputation, for it will be remembered that they were first last year, with even better results, taking only 8 min. 27 sec., and making an aggregate of 107 points. Seven regiments were represented in this contest, and it is not a little singular that the first three were again "placed," as they were last July. Then there were only two prizes, now there are three; the second going to the 11th Hussars, whose total was 81, compared with 88; and the third to the 7th Dragoon Guards, who got over the course in the best time, and made 68 points, as against 72. Owing to the "Loyd-Lindsay" proceeding at the same time as the "Mappin Brothers," the latter contest did not attract the attention it deserved. If there is a contest on Wimbledon Common which serves to test all the qualities of the infantry soldier in the face of an enemy, it unquestionably is that where the men have to scale barricades, clear hurdles, clamber over waggons, double for about a quarter of a mile, and make good practice at the 400 and 500 yards' ranges. Eleven squads entered for this, principally from the Metropolis. Each squad consisted of four men, in drill order, who had to complete in five minutes, or submit to a reduction of points on the shooting score. It was a splendid contest from beginning to end, and we congratulate the gallant chief of the South Middlesex on having such fine material in his regiment as those which appeared on the course on Friday, and again before the Princess of Wales on the following day, to receive the well-earned reward. Comment on the match between the teams of America and Great Britain is unnecessary. Our Cousins were simply "not in it." Britishers had anticipated a "tarnation licking," but were agreeably disappointed. Of course, it need hardly be added that the magnificent shooting of the Irish representative had much to do with the result. Consolation will be found on the other side of the Atlantic in the fact that the American team was not officially recognised.

The Princess of Wales, who was accompanied by the Prince and their three daughters, the Duke of Cambridge, and Princess Mary, distributed the principal prizes on Saturday afternoon, the ceremony being held inside the enclosure near the cottage. Appended are the principal results of the competitions, in continuation of those which appeared in our last impression:—

ARTHUR.—Open to all comers; 10 shots at 600 yards, with any rifle. £6 each, Capt. Fenton, 77th Foot, Capt. Fisher, U.S. America, Capt. Rockwell, U.S. America, Capt. The following order of Lieut.-Col. Phillips, the camp commandant, has been issued:—"On bidding, with regret, a final farewell to the Volunteers at Wimbledon, where he has had the honour to command at 10 consecutive meetings, Col. Phillips wishes cordially to thank those amongst them —and they have been the great majority—who, by their good example, have assisted him in upholding the discipline which has prevailed to a most satisfactory degree, considering the conditions under which the Volunteer camp exists —conditions eminently unfavourable to the maintenance of quiet and good order. The commandant has little comment to make on the encampment of 1880. Cases of serious misconduct have been fewer than in former years, and the camp has been clean and well kept, and instances of irregularity in dress are now unfrequent; but the infringement of regulations concerning lights—caused by the late arrival of Volunteers in camp—and in constant talking at night, have been, if anything, more conspicuous than heretofore. The commandant cannot conclude without adverting with the deepest concern to the unhappy suspicions which have pervaded the camp at the termination of this meeting with regard to the possibility of dishonest marking. As a definite charge has been made, and is now under military investigation, it would be improper in any way to prejudge the case. He would call attention to the injustice which is committed by those who find in the criminality of an individual a reason for bringing accusations against a whole class."

SIR,—It would be very satisfactory to officers if the pay and position of their domestics were improved. At the small pay the stewards, &c., now receive, there is great temptation held out to them to add to their incomes at the expense of their masters. It is well known that stewards are offered, and generally receive, large commissions from grocers, &c. In one gun-room mess of which I was a member, our steward received in one quarter £30 from the grocer who supplied us.—I am, &c., RETIRED, R.N.

THE CLIMATE OF CYPRUS.

"Ovis" writes from Cyprus, under date June 26:—"Having just read in your excellent paper of the 12th inst. an extract from a letter reflecting on the salutariness of the summer encampment at Mount Troodos, apparently written by some one ignorant of the facts of the case, permit me, in justice to Sir Garnet Wolseley and his able successor, who conjointly selected that station, to state that a better site could not possibly have been chosen, it being admirably adapted for a sanitarium and cool retreat from the burning heat of the plains. No better proof of this can be given, than that all the civil officials who can get away are going up there. The supply of water is good and easily obtained, never at any time was the sick-rate so high as 20 per cent., all cases of fever and ague originated in the plains; the death-rate among the Royal Engineers last year was due to the fact of their having spent part of the summer in the plains, whereas the 20th Regt., which was sent up at the beginning of the hot season, has lost only one man since its arrival in the island in Dec., 1878. At the present moment there is not a single case in hospital at Mount Troodos from climatic causes. This regiment has enjoyed such good health, that it would (with the exception of those who are blessed (?) with wives and families) infinitely prefer remaining here to going to Malta, where, I believe, it is contemplated sending it at the end of this year. The cost of supplies, &c., certainly is high, and this is the more felt by the military since the allowance granted in aid of the special expenses of the command has been withdrawn; but the cost of Zulu and Afghan wars must be defrayed somehow. 'Hech! sirs, every mickle makes a muckle!'"

The Curragh Divisional Athletic Meeting came off on Thursday, under a committee consisting of Major Eyre, 38th Foot, president; Staff—Capt. the Hon. H. Crichton, brigade-major; Cavalry—Major K. Coghill, 19th Hussars; Artillery—Capt. E. S. B. Lockyer, R.H.A.; Infantry—Major Watt, 64th Regiment; and Camp Qrmr. Brind. The stewards were—Lieut. James, Royal Scots Greys; Lieut. Hanford-Flood, 19th Hussars; Lieut. Beauchamp, 20th Hussars; Capt. Marshall, R.H.A.; Lieut. F. M. Glubb, R.E.; Capt. Randall, 20th Regiment; Capt. Edge, 22nd Regiment; Capt. Conner, 28th Regiment; Lieut. Allen, 38th Regiment; Lieut. Lascelles, 47th Regiment; Lieut. Newland, 64th Regt.; Lieut. Raikes, 3rd Batn. Rifle Brigade; and Stevens, D.A.C.G., Commissariat and Transport Department; hon. secretary and treasurer—Capt. B. C. Quill, 84th Regt., superintendent of gymnasia. One non-commissioned officer of each corps and department. Starters and judges selected from the stewards. This meeting was looked forward to with great interest; in proof of which about three thousand spectators were in attendence, including many of the gentry in the neighbourhood. The entries for each event were made up of representatives from almost every corps and department, and, consequently, were very large; those from the 38th and 47th Regts. proving themselves the most successful; with these exceptions the prizes were very equally distributed. The great excitement of the day was the pulling off the ties for the "Tug-of-war" prize, which after hard fighting was eventually brought down to the 28th and 47th Regiments, thirteen teams having entered. These were both splendid teams, but the 47th Regiment proved themselves the best; they accordingly were declared the winners, the 2nd prize being allotted to the 28th Regiment. At the termination of the meeting, the prizes were distributed by Lady Michel, and this concluded a most successful and satisfactory meeting. It remains but to add that the proceedings were enlivened during the day by the bands of the 64th Regiment and 3rd Batn. Rifle Brigade.

The Berlin correspondent of the Morning Post states:—"Nothing definite has been decided with regard to the proposed alteration of the German infantry arm, the Mauser rifle. Experiments are in progress to test the merits of the repeating apparatus recently brought under the notice of the military authorities."

A numerous party of ladies and gentlemen assembled, at the invitation of the Rev. Dr. Barrett, in the grounds of the Carshalton House School on Thursday, to witness the annual competition and review of the pupils, under the command of the resident drill instructor and disciplinarian, Mr. J. Hurst, late 11th Hussars.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. The regiment struck its camp at Aldershot on Monday, and proceeded by road to Windsor, on the conclusion of the drill season.

2nd Life Guards. The Duke of Cambridge inspected the regiment and also the Royal Horse Guards and the Chestnut Battery of Horse Artillery, now quartered in London, on Saturday morning at Wormwood Scrubbs. The clay soil had been badly poached into holes during the late wet weather, and these had been baked by the sun of the last few days, making the ground bad and dangerous for fast movements. On arriving on the ground, the Duke rode down the line, accompanied by his usual staff, and immediately afterwards the "march-past" commenced, the guns leading, followed by the Life Guards, and the Blues bringing up the rear. After the march-past, in three formations, the sword exercise and pursuing practice were done in very fair style. A few field manœuvres were carried out, in which the battery, as might be expected, showed to very great advantage; rapidly opening fire to cover the retreat of the cavalry from a charge in line, they limbered up and moved to the rear with mechanical precision. After the whole force had advanced in review order, his Royal Highness made a few remarks anent the day's proceedings, and then the troops marched back to their several quarters in a smart shower. There were about 750 men on the ground.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). Vide 2nd Life Guards.

2nd Dragoon Guards. Lieuts. Bayley and Barton have passed the qualifying examination for promotion to the rank of captain.

3rd Dragoon Guards, under orders for England, are to be stationed as follows:—Head-quarters and five troops at Manchester, two troops at Liverpool, and one troop at Birmingham. The regiment will commence embarking at Kingstown next week.

1st (Royal) Dragoons. The regiment, on arriving in Ireland, will be quartered in detachments at Ballincollig, Cork, Fermoy, Bandon, and Limerick. It will embark next month.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). The regiment is to be detained at the Curragh, to complete its annual course of musketry.

4th Hussars. All who have met the regiment during the last twelve years, and know how admirably it has been commanded, will be glad to notice that Col. Montgomery-Moore has been provided for on the Staff of the Army as A.A. and Q.M.G. of the Dublin District. A better appointment could not have been made, nor would it have been possible for the Horse Guards to have found an officer for the post with stronger claims.

13th Hussars. Capt. Maunsell, on appointment to the Pay Department, has joined the 63rd Regiment, as paymaster.

21st Hussars. Mr. Trevelyan asked the Secretary of State for War on Monday whether it was the case that the colonelcy of the 21st Hussars, of the annual value of £1,350, had been conferred upon Lieut.-Gen. the Hon. J. W. B. Macdonald, C.B.; whether it was the case that that officer had never done military duty as a General, but had for many years held the office of private secretary to the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief; whether this appointment to an honorary colonelcy was in accordance with the custom or rules under which honorary colonelcies had been awarded; and whether he, having expressèd his intention to abolish the system, and substitute for it pay and pensions for General officers analogous to those of Admirals, would take steps as soon as possible to carry out his intention in order to prevent such appointments in future. Mr. Childers said:—"My reply to the question of my hon. friend must be generally in the affirmative. Gen. James Macdonald has been appointed colonel of a regiment with, not £1,350, but £1,000 a year. He gains in income by his appointment £450 a year. He has not done military duty as a general; but being already in receipt of a good-service pension, and being a C.B., he is eligible by custom (there are no written rules) for the colonelcy of a regiment. I am not in favour of the present system of pay and pensions for General officers, and, as I recently stated to the House, I hope soon to take up the question with a view to making the colonelcies of regiments strictly honorary appointments. Until then, I cannot undertake to disturb the present custom."

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The Bombay Gazette refers as follows to Major Evelyn Baring's appointment:—"Major Baring is coming out to supersede Sir John Strachey as Finance Minister. The appointment will be a surprise to every one. Of course he owes his appointment in part to Lord Northbrook's influence; he owes it also in a great degree to the fact that other men eminent as financiers, to whom the post was offered, declined it. He is a man of undoubted ability, and as a Baring he may be supposed to be a financier born. In Egypt he must have learned something of the routine of the business; when in India, as his cousin's private secretary, he was a close, if silent, observer, and no doubt he made himself acquainted with many things. But he has never known how to make himself popular; perhaps he has never cared; he is not "sympathetic." His Budgets will be austere, and perhaps unpleasant, but we shall have the satisfaction of knowing, or at all events believing, that they are highly scientific, and very virtuous."

Lieuts. H. B. Gundry, 3rd Brig., F. B. Jackson, 8th Brig., H. E. F. Goold-Adams, 11th Brig., and O. Rowe have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Capt. A. J. Bigge and Lieut. F. G. Slade, B Brig. R.H.A., arrived home from the Cape on Monday in the mail steamer Trojan, in the suite of the Empress Eugénie.

Major Nolan asked the Secretary of State for War on Monday whether the lieutenant-colonels of the Royal Artillery who had been promoted since Oct. 1, 1877, under the five years' warrant, would receive their back command pay, so as to place them, with regard to emoluments, on the same footing as the Line. Mr. Childers said, "In reply to my hon. and gallant friend, I can only say that this is an intricate question, the details of which would only weary the House. It has been referred to Lord Morley's Committee on the Ordnance Corps, but I can say nothing as to any change that may be recommended having a retrospective effect."

On Saturday last, at Brentford, while Gunner Henry Webb, of K Baty. 3rd Brig. R.A. (then on the march from Hay), was leaving the gun park, he perceived two children being carried away in the millstream. Accoutred as he was, Gunner Webb jumped in, and, at the risk of his life, succeeded in bringing out the children, who were nearly sucked under the mill.

Capt. J. White, qrmr. on the Half-pay List, died at New Wandsworth on tne 23rd inst., aged 79 years. The deceased obtained his commission Feb. 1, 1856, and retired upon half-pay with the hon. rank of Capt. April 1, 1857.

Major F. Holcombe, Capt. on the Retired Full-pay List, died at 8 Marine Terrace, Aberystwith, on the 26th inst., aged 86 years. He joined the Army May 1, 1815; became lieut., Nov. 9, 1819; capt., Jan. 6, 1836; and major, Nov. 28, 1854.

Lieut. E. G. Osborne, who has fallen in action in Afghanistan whilst serving with Gen. Burrows's force, was gazetted a lieut. Sept. 11, 1873. He served as adjt. in the Kurum Column.

Grenadier Guards. The 1st Batn., under command of Col. Davies, returned to London on Monday from Aldershot, and took over quarters at Chelsea Barracks.

Scots Guards. The 2nd Batn., under command of Col. Moncrieff, returned to London on Monday from Aldershot, and is quartered at the Tower.

3rd Buffs. An interesting incident in connection with the proceedings at Wimbledon on Saturday was the presentation by the Princess of Wales, who is a Dame Chevalière of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in England, of the silver medal awarded by the Duke of Manchester and the Chapter to Capt. Harris, Camp Adjutant, in recognition of the gallantry shown by him in saving the lives of five persons at a fire in Dublin. The presentation was made prior to the distribution of the prizes, her Royal Highness graciously addressing a few words to the gallant recipient, and pinning the medal on his breast. Capt. Harris has received permission from H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to wear the medal in uniform, in accordance with the Queen's Regulations. The under-mentioned formed the deputation from the Order of St. John, referred to in a previous communication:—Lord Leigh, Gen. Viscount Templetown, K.C.B.; Sir E. A. H. Lechmere, Bart., M.P.; Sir James Bourne, Bart.; Gen. Sir John St. George, K.C.B.; Capt. Perrott, E.K.M.

4th King's Own. A correspondent writing from Belgaum on the 24th ult., says:—"Brigdr.-Gen. Bray, C.B., pulled down his flag under a salute on the evening of the 22nd inst. His regimental command of five years having expired, he became disqualified to hold an acting brigade command. He has done a good deal towards waking up 'sleepy hollow' since he came, and we shall all be sorry to lose him. Mrs. Bray has also become a general favourite in the station."

13th Foot. Major Cary was entertained at dinner on the 23rd inst. at the camp, Lansdown, by Col. Adair and the officers, 2nd Somerset L.I. Militia, who presented him with a costly gold watch and an illuminated address on vellum, to mark their esteem and appreciation on his retiring from the adjutancy of the regiment.

15th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. is ordered up to Afghanistan from Bombay.

17th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Carpendale, 2nd Batn., a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to the 21st Bengal N.I. as officiating wing-officer on probation. 2nd Lieut. Thompson, 2nd Batn., a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed officiating squadron-officer, 1st Bombay Light Cavalry, on probation. 2nd Lieuts. Walker and Hunt, 1st Batn., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

18th Royal Irish. 2nd Lieut. Wilson, 1st Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

22nd Regiment. The 1st Batn. is to be detained at the Curragh, to complete its annual course of musketry, which will commence next week. It will afterwards proceed to Newry, to relieve the 105th.

23rd Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. will embark at Portsmouth about the 17th prox. for conveyance to India.

24th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. has been suddenly ordered to be held in readiness to proceed from Gibraltar to India. It will embark at Gibraltar on or about the 11th prox. in H.M.S. Orontes. Lieut. O'Donnell arrived in India at the end of last month to join a native regiment as a probationer for the Staff Corps. On Wednesday afternoon, at Osborne House, the Queen having expressed a desire to inspect the colours of the 1st Batn., which were rescued from the hands of the Zulus at the expense of the lives of two officers, a party, consisting of Brevet Lieut.-Col. Tongue and Lieuts. Weallens and Phipps, four colour-serjeants, and one private, visited Osborne, bearing with them the standards which have passed through such stirring scenes. Her Majesty received the party in person. After a minute inspection of the Queen's colour, which Lieuts. Melville and Coghill gave their lives to save for their regiment, her Majesty, who manifested much emotion, most graciously decorated it with a wreath of immortelles, which, it is needless to say, will remain attached to this honoured flag as long as one flower hangs to another. The officers and men of the battalion are much touched by this gracious act of their Sovereign, and are deeply sensible of the high honour she has conferred on the regiment.

26th Cameronians are under orders to embark at Portsmouth on Friday and Saturday next in H.M.'s troopships Euphrates and Tamar for conveyance to Gibraltar.

28th Regiment. Capt. Dempster is a candidate for appointment to the Pay Department, and is to join at Dover on probation. Lieut. Irving Noble, a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, has been appointed officiating wing-officer, 3rd Bengal N.I., on probation. This regiment will leave the Curragh by rail on Tuesday next for Fermoy.

38th Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies embark at Queenstown on the 9th prox. in H.M.S. Euphrates for Malta, to relief the 98th Regt.

41st Regiment embarks at Portsmouth on Tuesday next in H.M.S. Orontes for conveyance to Gibraltar, to relieve the 2nd Batn. 24th Regt., proceeding to India.

ROYAL MARINES.

Major-Gen. T. H. Pakenham, commanding the Western District, made his first inspection of the Plymouth Division of the Royal Marine Light Infantry on Tuesday last, in the People's Park at Devonport. The General, addressing the men, said he was extremely proud to see such a fine body of men under arms,—in fact, he thought during the whole course of his career he had never seen a finer body, and was well pleased with the appearance of the men generally. He complimented them on the state of their efficiency, and expressed satisfaction at the way in which they had gone through the drill. The new line of attack, which was led by Lieut.-Col. Hunt, A.D.C., was gone through. The officers on parade were:—Col.-Commandant G. B. Heastey, Lieut.-Col. R. W. B. Hunt, A.D.C., Lieut.-Col. H. S. Jones, Major A. H. H. Walsh, Major A. Macintosh; Capts. E. L. Rose, W. R. Triscott, A. St. John, O. R. W. Wood, W. F. Campbell, A. B. Liardet, W. T. Allen, and J. H. Sandwith; Lieuts. B. C. P. Hamilton, H. Y. Hext, R. Denny, J. C. R. Scott, G. B. Stevens, S. P. Peile, W. S. Cumming, L. J. Hadley, G. R. C. Booth, C. H. Willis, E. V. Luke, and F. H. Coke, one staff serjeant, 29 serjeants, 5[illegible] drummers, 446 privates.

The Deputy-Adjutant-General, Royal Marines, left town on Tuesday last for Chatham, where he commenced on the following day his annual inspection of the several Marine Divisions.

A general court-martial has been ordered to assemble at Portsmouth next week for the trial of Serjt. William Marshman, of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, on charges in connection with improper marking alleged to have taken place at the recent Wimbledon meeting.

A medal for long service and good-conduct has been awarded by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to Schoolmaster James Richardson, of the Royal Marine Depôt, Walmer.

57th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. James, a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, has been appointed officiating wing-officer, 4th Bengal N.I., on probation.

61st Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies have been named for service in India, and will leave Malta about the middle of next month in H.M.S. Euphrates.

63rd Regiment. Capt. Maunsell, who has been gazetted to the Pay Department from the 13th Hussars, has been posted to the regiment as paymaster.

65th Regiment. Lieut. Forbes, a probationer, officiating wing-officer, 15th Bombay N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bombay S.C., with effect from Aug. 16, 1878.

66th Regiment. Capt. W. Roberts, who has been killed in action near Candahar, entered the Army Feb. 8, 1865; became a lieut., Dec. 19, 1875; adjt., July 5, 1877; and capt., Nov. 14, 1879. The Times says:—"The 66th Regt., which formed part of Gen. Burrows's force, consisted mainly of soldiers older than the present average. It was ordered up from Bombay at the beginning of this year, and was in remarkably good condition. Two companies, under Major Ready, were at Khelat-i-Ghilzai, and therefore did not share in the defence."

73rd Regiment. Lieut. Melvill is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 2nd Bengal N.I., on probation.

76th Regiment will leave Sheffield on Wednesday next for Liverpool, and embark in H.M.S. Assistance, en route to Kinsale.

77th Regiment. The head-quarters and the service companies embark at Portsmouth about the 17th prox. for conveyance to India.

79th Highlanders. Brevet Major Clay and Lieut. Reid arrived home from Gibraltar on Saturday, in the hired troopship London, with invalids and time-expired men. The London Gazette announces the appointment of Capt. Campbell to be one of the Grooms-in-Waiting in Ordinary to her Majesty, in room of John Francis Campbell of Islay, Esq., resigned.

84th Regiment. The move of the regiment from Dublin to the Curragh for the winter will not, it is understood, take place before the end of September.

88th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Haldane has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

90th Light Infantry. 2nd Lieut. Ross has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

94th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. L. Lyster, late of the regiment, died on the 20th inst., aged 64. The deceased served in the War of Succession in Spain as lieutenant of infantry, and was present in the operations before San Sebastian, and was severely wounded through the body in the attack upon the fortified heights of Arambura, near Hernani. He joined the Army Dec. 28, 1838; became lieut., Aug. 18, 1841; capt., Oct. 6, 1848; major, Sept. 18, 1857; lieut.-col., Sept. 16, 1868; and retired shortly afterwards.

97th Regiment. Lieut. Hilton arrived in India at the end of last month as a candidate for the Indian Staff

98TH REGIMENT. The regiment is under orders to embark at Malta in H.M.S. Euphrates on the 18th prox. for conveyance to India.

100TH REGIMENT. 2nd Lieut. Weller has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

102ND FUSILIERS. 2nd Lieut. Gordon, a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, has been appointed officiating wing-officer, 6th Bengal N.I., on probation. The funeral of Major-Gen. Raikes, C.B., who died at the residence of the Rev. R. W. Hippisley, Stow-on-the-Wold, took place on the 15th inst. He was buried in the new Hippisley vault in the cemetery of the parish. Gen. Raikes was married to his first wife, Leonora Jane Digby, in the Stow parish church by the present rector, his brother-in-law, Oct. 26, 1848, and by her he leaves a son in holy orders and two daughters. She died of cholera and was buried at Lucknow May 11, 1869. He married secondly, Aug. 31, 1871, Catherine, eldest daughter of Admiral Hargood, a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for the county of Sussex. Gen. Raikes was born Oct. 26, 1822, and entered the Army as ensign in the 1st Madras Fusiliers Dec. 25, 1840. He was made lieut., Jan. 24, 1845; capt., March 4, 1854; brevet major, March 24, 1858; major, Jan. 1, 1862; lieut.-col., July 30, 1862; col., July 30, 1867; brigdr.-gen., Jan. 1, 1875; and major-gen., Oct. 30, 1877. He served with the 1st Madras Fusiliers in the Burmese War of 1852-53, including the relief of Pegu and subsequent operations in its vicinity, and commanded a detachment at the recapture of Beeling (medal and clasp for Pegu). He served in suppression of the Mutiny in Bengal in 1857-58, and was present with Havelock's column at the actions of Futtehpore, Aoung Pandoo, Nudder, and Cawnpore. He commanded detachment under Gen. Neill for the defence of Cawnpore during Havelock's first entry into Oude; was afterwards present at the actions of Bithoor, Mungarwar, and Alumbagh; also at the relief of Lucknow on Sept. 25, and defence of the Residency until Nov. 22; also under Outram during the occupation of the Alumbagh and capture of Lucknow; also in the campaign in Oude in 1858, including the passage of the Goomtee at Sultanpore, and in other minor affairs. He commanded a field column of all arms from Oct. 7 to 22, 1858, and defeated the enemy at Shahpore (brevet major, medal with two clasps and year's service for Lucknow, and C.B.). He brought his regiment, then the 102nd, home to England in March, 1870, and in Sept. 1871, returned to India as lieut.-col. of H.M.'s 44th, or East Essex. He subsequently was appointed brigadier-general to the Centre District, Madras, and at the expiration of his command left India for England in Jan. last.

105TH LIGHT INFANTRY, quartered in Newry and Londonderry, is not to be removed to Mullingar so early as was at first proposed, as it has been decided to detain the 1st Batn. 22nd at the Curragh until the completion of its annual course of musketry, which will commence next week.

RIFLE BRIGADE. In anticipation of the retirement of the Duke of Connaught, on his recent promotion, from the Brigade, in which he had won the esteem and regard of all his brother officers, the officers belonging to the 1st Batn. decided on marking the occasion by making a birthday presentation to the Duchess of Connaught, who attained her twentieth year on Sunday last. The committee decided on having a jewel designed from the regimental badge, so as to form a bracelet or brooch at pleasure. The principal part of the design is the regimental badge. Each leaf of the laurel leaves is composed of an emerald, the wreaths being bound together, and tied by a knot. This and the ends of the ribbon are of brilliants of the purest water. Above is the royal crown, also of diamonds. In the centre of the wreaths is a Maltese cross, with a lion passant at each angle, and the bugle in the centre of the cross. The jewel forms the centre of a broad gold armlet, and can be detached so as to form a neck jewel. It bears the following inscription:—"Presented to H.R.H. the Duchess of Connaught by the officers of the 1st Batn. Rifle Brigade, July 25, 1880." The Irish Times says:—It was intended that the 3rd Batn. should replace the 84th Regt. at Beggar's Bush Barracks in Dublin, but we hear that the batn. will remain at the Curragh for the winter." Capt. Harington, 3rd Batn., has been offered but has refused the adjutancy of the 49th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers. Lieut. Perry, 4th Batn., has been appointed an extra aide-de-camp on Lord Ripon's personal staff. The 1st Batn. will embark at Portsmouth about the 17th prox. for conveyance to India.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT. Surg.-Major A. Allan, M.D., arrived home from Gibraltar on Saturday in the hired troopship London in charge of invalids. The Madras Times says:—"Surg.-Major J. Mackenzie, M.D., Army Medical Department, who is surgeon to his Grace the Governor, returns to Europe very shortly, his tenure of office in India having almost expired." Surg. R. H. Quill, M.B., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

ROYAL GLAMORGAN. The regiment, under command of Col. Gould, was inspected on the 21st inst. by Col. Carden, commanding the 24th Brigade Depôt. After an exhaustive examination of kits, the regiment paraded at 10 o'clock in the field close to the barracks for drill. After receiving the inspecting officer with a general salute, the battalion, which numbers over a thousand rank and file, was put through a variety of field movements by Col. Gould, Lieut.-Col. Heyworth, the senior major, put the men through the manual and firing exercises, after which Capts. Morris and Crespigny were called out to drill the battalion, a task executed with great success by both officers. After several of the subalterns had been examined in company drill, the regiment was marched to the barracks to give in the arms, clothing, and accoutrements. During the whole time the regiment has been under canvas, its comfort has been seriously interfered with by incessant rain. Indeed, it is now high time that the discomfort sustained by both officers and men ever since 1873, from being kept under canvas, should be put a stop to by returning to the old system of billets or lodgings in Cardiff. On Wednesday evening a ball was given at the Town Hall, Cardiff, by the neighbouring county families and Col. Gould and the officers. Next year it is to be hoped that the long-expected second battalion will at last be raised. Before leaving the parade-ground, Col. Carden in a short speech complimented the regiment on its good behaviour during the training period, and the knowledge of drill exhibited by both officers and men that day on parade.

WORCESTER. The regiment was inspected by Col. Hunter, C.B., on Tuesday last. Col. Norbury was in command of the 1st Batn., and Col. Vale of the 2nd. Col. Hunter, addressing the regiment, said that, considering the weather, he was highly pleased with the remarkably clean and soldier-like way in which the regiment had turned out. Col. Norbury had told him how well the men had taken the fearfully bad weather in camp. There had been no grumbling and no dissatisfaction. He regretted that it had not been in his power to assist them in any way. He should, in his report, make strong remarks on the subject of the camp ground, and should do his best to get something done. The parade had given him every satisfaction, and it would be a pleasure to report so to H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge. Col. Norbury also addressed the regiment. The following is a correct list of the officers present:—Cols. Norbury (commandant), Vale, and Howell; Major Decie; Capts. Vale, Allsopp, King, Domvile, Chillingworth, Walcot, Hawkins, Kersteman, Hooper, Bearcroft, Webb, Little, Colby, and Clarke; Lieuts. Whitmore, Berkeley, Anderson, Stubbs, and Holden; 2nd Lieuts. Hanford-Flood, Vane, Sidebottom-Venner, Steward, Kelby, Walsh, Lee, Galton, Lincoln, Fenwick, Vale, Beresford, Campbell, and Lord Castlerosse; Major and Adjt. Hill, Surgs.-Major Hyde and Budd, and Qrmrs. Kelly and Moore. The strength of the regiment is as follows:—1st Batn.—Serjt.-Major Dyte; staff serjeants, 21; militia serjeants, 16; drummers, 8; rank and file, 757; total, 802. 2nd Batn.—Serjt.-Major Edwards; staff serjeants, 16; militia serjeants, 12; drummers, 6; rank and file, 561; total, 595. In March, last year, Serjt.-Major Head absconded with £92, which he had received from the bank for the payment of the men. He not only took with him the money, but also a young woman. The police were unable to trace the truants, and after a fruitless search they were given up, and the escape was almost forgotten. After an absence of sixteen months, however, the defaulter was discovered and captured, the woman with whom he eloped proving the source of his detection. The young woman lately paid a visit to Worcester, and during her sojourn confided to some friends the fact that her gallant paramour was in Bath. One of these friends wrote to Head at Bath, representing that the fair companion of his flight had been arrested in Worcester during her visit, and advising him to surrender himself. Head, thinking the game was up, surrendered himself to the Somersetshire Militia. He has been taken back to Worcester, and remanded.

6TH WEST YORK. The two battalions of this regiment, under the respective command of Lieut.-Col. Bayly and Lieut.-Col. Garnham, completed their training at Halifax on the 24th, having this year been put through the trained soldier's course of musketry, under the most trying and unfavourable conditions. Encamped on a spongy peat soil 850 ft. above the sea, the men have suffered severely from the tempestuous weather, and had to be sent down into billet for several nights, the camp having been flodded, while the tents proved utterly unable to keep out the rain. The musketry-range, which is reached after a long and most fatiguing march, is even more exposed than the camp, and good shooting has been out of the question. The two battalions were inspected by Col. Blewitt, commanding 9th Brigade depôt, who expressed himself highly satisfied with the appearance of the men, and complimented them upon their good behaviour under most trying circumstances. There was no field inspection, as nothing had been done during the training but musketry and drill connected therewith. Halifax appears, from its climate, soil, and situation to be utterly unfit for training Militia, and we trust in future that the 6th West York will be trained at York or elsewhere in barracks, as the regiment has laboured under great disadvantages ever since its formation, having for many years been in billets of the worst possible character.

ANTRIM ARTILLERY. Mr. Biggar asked, in the House of Commons on Tuesday, for a copy of correspondence regarding certain charges which had been made against the lieutenant-colonel of the Antrim Artillery Militia and the Lord-Lieutenant of Louth, Lord Massereene. He read at great length a series of extracts from various documents in support of the charges brought against his lordship, and concluded by hoping that the Government would inquire into the charges. If the right hon. gentleman at the head of the War Office found the charges true, he would be only doing his duty if he caused Lord Massereene to retire into private life. Mr. Childers expressed his extreme surprise that the hon. member had put such a case as this on the paper. He had read a number of extracts to the House containing charges against Viscount Massereene, but he had omitted to read the material part of the correspondence, of which he could not possibly have been ignorant. He ventured to say that never before in this House had a charge been made in which the material part of the whole case had been omitted. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Biggar), in bringing this matter before the House, had omitted a material statement which ought to be made in connection with the case, viz., that when Lord Massereene had been called upon to give an explanation as to the charges brought against him by Mr. Cornwall, the latter gentleman addressed a letter to the military authorities in Ireland entirely withdrawing the charges against Lord Massereene. This was an unconditional and absolute withdrawal on the part of Mr. Cornwall, and this fact the hon. member had omitted to mention to the House.

ROYAL SOUTH DOWN. Mr. Givan asked the Secretary of State for War on Tuesday whether he had received any report of the circumstances under which the officer commanding the South Down Militia had deprived the Rev. William White, Presbyterian Minister in Downpatrick, of the acting chaplaincy of that regiment; and whether he was justified in so doing. Mr. Childers: Yes, Sir, the whole circumstances of the case have been before the Commander-in-Chief, and his Royal Highness has decided, and I have approved that decision, that the colonel commanding the South Down Militia, though technically within his right, exercised an unwise discretion in not reappointing the Rev. Mr. White to the acting chaplaincy of his regiment. I regret to have been obliged to take this course, as the colonel, once a member of this House, has maintained his regiment in a high state of efficiency.

ROYAL DUBLIN CITY. This regiment, numbering nearly 700 men, under command of Col. Seton, was inspected at the Curragh last week by Col. Parsons, 66th Brigade Depôt, previous to its disembodiment. The inspecting officer expressed his satisfaction at the high state of efficiency and soldierlike appearance of the men. The following officers were present:—Col. Seton, in command; Major Smyth (hon. lieut. col.); Major Horan; Capts. O'Gorman, Butler, Dillon, and Torry; Lieuts. Stephens, Picot, Hackett, O'Neill, Greenwood, and Seale; 2nd Lieuts. Fry, Baird, Rowlandson, Carden, Bailey, and Edwards, and the Adjt., Capt. Holmes, 103rd Fusiliers. Capt. Torry and Lieut. Stephens served throughout the Zulu war, and will receive the medal and clasp.

TIPPERARY LIGHT INFANTRY. The regiment, which had been assembled at Clonmel since June 29, for its annual training, were inspected, previous to disembodiment, by Col. Foster, 69th Brigade Depôt. It assembled over 760 strong. Col. Foster addressed the officers and men, and said he would have been glad if the Commander-in-Chief of the Forces could have seen the Tipperary Light Infantry, as he was sure that he would have been delighted with the regiment. The officers of the regiment took advantage of this, the last occasion of their gallant colonel's commanding the regiment, to present him, upon his retirement after 26 years' service—from the time the Tipperary Light Infantry was first raised—a testimonial of their regard in just recognition of his untiring efforts to promote the comfort and happiness of those under his charge, and the general well-being of his regiment. It assumed the shape of a tea and coffee service of exquisite design, with a handsome double biscuitier of unique pattern—all in silver. Each of the six richly chased pieces of which the service was composed was engraved with Col. Frend's crest, while it bore this inscription:—"Presented to Col. Frend, by his brother officers of the Tipperary Light Infantry, on his retiring from the regiment, after a service of 26 years. Camp Field, Clonmel, 1880."

The following 13 regiments, having completed their training, will be dismissed to-day (Saturday), at the places indicated:—1st, or South Gloucester, Horfield; 5th Middlesex (Royal Elthorne), Hounslow; Northumberland Light Infantry, Alnwick; 1st Somerset Light Infantry, Wellington; 3rd Royal Surrey, Kingston; 2nd Warwick, Warwick; Royal Wiltshire, Devizes; Worcester, at Worcester; Royal Ayr and Wigtown, Ayr Camp; Royal Perth Rifles, Perth; Renfrew (Prince of Wales's Royal Regiment), Paisley; Scottish Borderers, Dumfries; and the Westmeath Rifles, Mullingar. Of the above, seven regiments have been under canvas for the full period.

Only one regiment is under orders to assemble on Monday, the Northumberland Artillery. With this exception, all the regiments in England and Wales and Scotland have now been called out. There remain two in Ireland, the Dublin City Artillery and the Mid-Ulster Artillery, which do not assemble before August 16 in the case of the former, and August 30 in the case of the latter regiment. Six regiments which were called out on the 12th, 19th, and 26th inst., will be dismissed, respectively, on the 7th, 14th, and 21st prox.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

ROYAL BUCKS. The officers had their annual dinner at Willis's Rooms, on the 2nd inst., when Lieut.-Col. Drummond Hibbert presided. The guests were Lord Cottesloe, Hon. T. Fremantle, and Lieut.-Col. Phillips, 18th Hussars. Among those present were:—Sir R. B. Hervey, Bart., Majors Hon. J. D. Drummond (adjt.), Levi, and Morgan; Capts. FitzGerald, Poynter, Small, Calvert, Pratt, Hon. C. C. W. Cavendish, Seagram, Keane, Fitzgerald, the Rev. C. W. S. Lowndes, chaplain; Messrs. J. Green, Alister N. James, E. Hubbard, L. Hibbert, M. Knapp, Cyril Flower, M.P., and H. W. Kiallmark.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

1ST ARGYLLSHIRE RIFLES. Pte. Ferguson, the winner of the Queen's Prize at Wimbledon, arrived at St. Enoch's Station, Glasgow, on Sunday afternoon. He was met by a large number of Lanarkshire Volunteers and by members of the Society of Kintyre, of which place he is a native, and was loudly cheered. In the evening, on arriving at Campbeltown, he was cheered through the streets, and presented with an address by the Mayor.

1ST BERKS RIFLES. The annual encampment of the regiment, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Loyd-Lindsay, V.C., M.P., has been held during the week at Bearwood, the seat of Mr. Walter, M.P.

2ND DURHAM (SEAHAM) ARTILLERY. The annual competition for the challenge-cup given by Lord E. Vane-Tempest took place on Saturday last at Seaham Battery. There were 47 detachments competing. The cup was won by that under Serjt. Goodwin, and the chief money prizes by those under Serjts. Mackay and R. Paxton, Trumpet-

Major Longman, Serjt.-Major Elliot, Capt. Wetherall, Serjts. Weetman, Ellen, Treffit, and G. Paxton; Gunner Kirby, and Serjt. Turnbull.

3RD KENT RIFLES. The regiment, under command of Lieut.-Col. Lenon, V.C., comprising the Lee, Blackheath, Charlton, Deptford Town, St. John's, Deptford, Greenwich, and Bromley companies, went into camp on Monday for a week at Dartford Heath.

15TH LANCASHIRE RIFLES. The Liverpool Daily Courier has the following :—" At the inspection dinner of the 15th L.R.V., a handsome album, containing likenesses of officers and serjeants of the corps, and an illuminated address, was presented to Lieut.-Col. Pilkington, the late commander of the corps, who made a suitable reply in acknowledgment. Three companies of the 15th proceed to Aldershot for a week's encampment from Aug. 14 to 21, to form a provisional battalion with detachments of the 20th and 29th Middlesex R.V., the whole under the command of Lieut.-Col. Pierce, 15th L.R.V. Lancashire volunteers are, it appears, only permitted to go to Aldershot when the Metropolitan regiments are unable to supply their allotted quotas. The various Metropolitan corps have been informed several months ago as to camping arrangements, while the 15th only got a telegraphic intimation on the subject a few days ago. There are other regiments in this neighbourhood who would gladly send detachments to Aldershot if permitted to do so, and who have good reason to complain of the Metropolitan corps being specially favoured at the national expense."

The Volunteer Engineer Camp of Instruction at Chatham was broken up on Saturday last, and the detachments of the various corps which have been under instruction left for their homes. It is stated that, in consequence of the success which has attended the annual gatherings of this branch of the Volunteer Service, arrangements will be made in future years for the encampment of a larger number of men than in the past.

The Liverpool Daily Courier says :—" The renumbering of the rifle regiments of Lancashire has not yet been gazetted, but we believe the new numbers will be carried out. The only objection we have heard has been made by one regiment which seeks a lower number, so as not to be superseded by a junior corps. The other number sought would cause the objecting regiment to supersede another. The question of seniority is, however, not worth mentioning, especially as in other counties it has been ignored. The best thing about the renumbering scheme is that it does not disturb any number unnecessarily. That a regiment which it is thus proposed to leave undisturbed, should seek to incur the expense of altering uniforms and equipments for the sake of seniority seems rather strange. The corps referred to does not belong to Liverpool."

The following regiments and detachments of regiments of Rifle Volunteers have proceeded to Aldershot to-day for eight days :—1st Derby Rifle Volunteers, 568 of all ranks. —Lieut.-Col. Sir H. Wilmot, Lieut.-Col. Evans, Majors Holmes, Buchanan, and Balguy ; attached to 2nd Infantry Brigade, and camp at Rushmoor Hill. 1st Provisional Battalion.—4th Essex R.V., 151 ; 1st London R.V., 57 ; 4th Middlesex R.V., 115 ; 28th Middlesex R.V., 114 ; and 7th Surrey R.V., 28 ; total, 466. Lieut.-Col. Birt, 4th Essex ; Lieut.-Col. Somers-Lewis, 4th Middlesex ; Major Ford, 2nd Essex ; and Capt. Davis, 4th Essex. Attached to 1st Brigade, and encamp at Rushmoor. 2nd Provisional Battalion.—3rd Hants R.V., 121 ; 19th Middlesex R.V., 57 ; and 46th Middlesex R.V., 247. Lieut.-Col. Routledge, Major Hawkshaw, and Capt. Lee, 46th Middlesex. Attached to 2nd Brigade, and encamp at Redan Hill. 3rd Battalion. —38th Middlesex R.V., 294. Major Edis and Capt. Elmhirst. Attached to 3rd Brigade, and encamp at Church Plateau. The following regiments proceed to Colchester to-day for eight days :—1st Essex R.V., 405 ; 2nd Essex R.V., 58 ; and 1st Bedford R.V., 398.

SIR,—The Army is divided into two camps on the question of the efficiency of the rank and file. In one are five or six officers of great talent, experience, character, true solders ; in the other, are all "the rest of the Army." Whilst the former maintain that men cannot be too young, or service too short ; that age and experience in non-commissioned officers are unimportant ; that our rank and file is splendid, our reserve magnificent, our discipline perfect, that, in fact, things were never better,—the "rest of the Army," to a man, officers fresh from India, from Africa, from Malta, Aldershot, Portsmouth, tell you, with one voice, that things cannot be worse ; that the condition of the rank and file is deplorable ; that, in fact, the warning given by Dr. Muir, Inspector-General of Hospitals in India, 15 years ago, " that the evils of premature enlistment had so culminated, that it might be impossible to trust her Majesty's regiments hereafter," is dangerously near its accomplishment. The minority are the cooks who made the pudding, and they declare it is excellent ; but I think it more reasonable to seek for a proof of its quality from the majority who have to eat it, and they to a man pronounce it abominable! The evils complained of are,—the extreme youth of the rank and file ; the large per-centage of desertion, re-enlistment, and crime ; the general discontent and dissatisfaction that prevail throughout the Service ; the dislike with which the Service is viewed by the respectable portions of the working and operative classes ; the want of age and experience in the non-commissioned officers. The enormous cost of the Army, as measured by the efficiency of the rank and file ; the great expense to the country of feeding, clothing, paying, nursing 26,000 annual recruits for two years, before they can be put into the Line as efficient soldiers. The remedies for these evils are evidently : —(1) to advance the age at which recruits are taken ; (2) to popularise the Services. By this means the number of inefficients in the ranks, and the losses from disease, death, and desertion would be minimised ; and good men would remain in the Army, and make it their profession, and afford the necessary supply of experienced non-commissioned officers. It is evident that the present system of recruiting is a failure, the waifs and strays, the starvelings of our cities and villages, immature, without stamina, under non-commissioned officers as young and inexperienced as themselves, do not give us a reliable rank and file. Is there no other source of supply we can tap ? The rank and file of the Militia numbers 138,500 men ; that of the Volunteers, 192,662 men ; a total of 331,328. The number of recruits we require annually to fill the gaps caused by death, disease, desertion, imprisonment, retirement, and other causes is 26,000, or about 8 per cent. of this number. It does not seem impossible that the conditions of service might be so improved that the Militia and Volunteers might be induced to find this per-centage for the Line. But indeed, if service with the colours was really popular, if the recruits were composed of less delicate material, and there was a general desire to remain in the Service, instead of to get out of it, at any cost, the losses from disease, death, desertion, and retirement would be so diminished that one-half the present number of recruits would be sufficient to fill these costly gaps. The question, then, is this. Can the 331,000 men composing the rank and file of the Militia and Volunteers be induced to find 4 per cent. per annum of their number for service in the Line ? The scheme of Army organisation would be as follows :—The Militia and Volunteers would be at once the nursery of the Army and its Reserves ; the Line would be recruited entirely from the Militia and Volunteers ; at the expiration of their service with the colours, both men and officers would return to the Militia and Volunteers as Reserves. Now, in order to make this scheme possible, the conditions of service in the Militia, the Line, and the Reserves must be improved and popularised. I say nothing about the Volunteers, because, to a very considerable extent, the conditions of their service depend upon themselves. The following would be the proposals to popularise the Militia. The billetting system must be abolished ; the regiments must be officered entirely by retired officers of the Line ; an additional annual bonus of £3 should be paid to every Militiaman who serves his training to the satisfaction of his commanding officer (equivalent to an addition of 2d. a day to his pay). The billetting system often lodges men, during their entire training, in the lowest public-houses, sometimes in houses of even worse fame, and deters respectable men from joining the Militia. It is undeniable that if the Militia were officered by trained soldiers, instead of by amateurs, the men would profit very much more by their 27 days' training, and the evident folly of setting "the blind to lead the blind" would be avoided. The bonus of £3 would be a great attraction to good men to enter the Militia, and would afford an ample security for every man on the roll of the regiment coming up for his training. The proposals to popularise the Line would be as follows :—The Line would be recruited entirely from the Militia and Volunteers. All recruits to be over 20 years of age, to have served two trainings of 27 days each with the Militia, or two years in the Volunteers. A bonus of £10 to be paid to each recruit (fulfilling these conditions) on his enlisting for three years with the colours, equivalent to an increase of 2d. a day to his pay. At the termination of the first term of three years a man may, with the consent of his commanding officer, be allowed to re-enlist for another term of three years, receiving another bonus of £10 ; and so, for a third and fourth term. £5 of this bonus would always be kept in hand by the district or regimental authorities, as a security against desertion or crime. Non-commissioned officers of the Line retired into the Reserve would retain their rank in the Militia, and when called out to serve again in the Line. Greatly increased facilities for obtaining leave of absence should be granted to all soldiers quartered in the United Kingdom. It has been found that sailors do not desert where they have plenty of leave—in fact, the tables are often turned. Many of them are found to desert their families before their leave is half up, and return to their ships! The suggestions to popularise the Reserve would be these :—The Militia or Volunteers would be the Reserve men who had served their time with the colours, and wishing to go into the Reserve, would join the Militia or Volunteers. They would retain the rank they held in the Line. Any non-commissioned officer or private in the Reserve under 30 years of age would be allowed again to enter the Line for a term of three years, retaining his rank. In lieu of the present pension of 6d. a day, each Reserve man would, after each yearly Militia training, receive a bonus of £10 (equivalent to about 6½d. a day (as in the case of the Line, £5 to be always kept in hand). At present the Reserve man is as much a waif and stray a before he enlisted as a recruit ; he may be here, there, or nowhere. The only certainty of finding him is on pay-day. If enlisted from the Militia or Volunteers, and returned to them after the expiration of his term of service with the colours, he would always have a local habitation and a name, his real age and character would be known, desertion and re-enlistment would be very difficult, and in the great majority of cases he would be "at call." The increase of 2d. a day to the pay of the rank and file of the Army and the Militia would amount to about £750,000 a year ; but if this three-quarters of a million gave us a rank and file of mature men, of a certain military experience, able at once to bear the fatigues and privation of war ; if it turned discontent into zeal, minimised the frightful waste from disease, death, desertion, crime, and relieved us from the absurd expense of paying, feeding, clothing, nursing our annual drafts of 26,000 recruits for two years, at an annual cost of about £120 per man, before they are fit for work, we should, in fact, save millions a year. I believe it is universally understood that the first step to popularise the Army must be to increase the pay. A great deal might be said in favour of the bonus scheme over a simple increase of daily pay ; but this letter is already far too long.—I am, &c.,

HONORARY COLONELCIES OF REGIMENTS.

"Aspirant" writes :—" Whatever reasons may have existed at the time of, or previously to, the abolition of Purchase, to cause it to be regarded as matters of fairness —or for other reasons desirable—that the appointment to colonelcies of Cavalry regiments should be filled exclusively by former officers of Cavalry, it cannot fail to attract attention, and create questions, now that these reasons are no longer in force, that Cavalry officers should continue to enjoy this very substantial advantage to the prejudice of officers of Infantry. The former Cavalry officer now appointed to a vacancy occurring in the colonelcy of a Cavalry regiment at the present moment passes over the heads of, say, between twenty and thirty officers of Infantry, entitled before him on the recognised ground of seniority, to this reward—" pension," or whatever it may be termed—which is, in fact, the great pecuniary prize of the Service, the post itself in Cavalry and Infantry being equally, as far as duties were concerned, of a purely honorary character. Curiously enough, this rule does not obtain in regard to the appointments to colonelcies of the Household Cavalry. Why should it remain in the Line, to the manifestly unfair advantage of the Cavalry officer at the expense of the Infantry ? "

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 31, 1880.

THE exaggerated expression of "annihilation of a British Brigade in Afghanistan" has now given way to the milder term of "defeat of General Burrows' force." Still, the disaster is, even with this softening-down, serious, and is likely to cause an indefinite prolongation of the war in Afghanistan. We have received no intelligence which throws any light on that which appears primâ facie almost inexplicable, and we therefore should be cautious in our dealing with the subject, and abstain from even hinting blame. The facts, so far as they are known, are simply that General Burrows' force, being attacked by a much larger force than it was imagined was in front of it, has been utterly routed, with the loss of two guns. What the actual amount of slaughter was we cannot as yet tell, but it must have been heavy among the infantry, at all events, as the Afghans are said to have pursued our men hotly for three or four miles, and no more murderous foe when in pursuit of a beaten army than the Afghan can be imagined. A few officers, all of them mounted, reached Candahar before the cutting of telegraphic information, and it is vaguely said that the fugitives were coming in "by driblets." We also learn that four out of the six guns have been saved. It is probable, therefore, that many of the Horse Artillery and Cavalry managed to get away. Concerning the Infantry, however, we entertain grave apprehensions. They had evidently been completely broken up, and were probably reaped at leisure by Ayoub Khan's horsemen the day after the battle. In fact, it is most unlikely that many of them contrived to traverse in safety the fifty miles or so which intervened between them and safety. Consequently, we may assume that the six companies of the 66th, the two regiments of Native Infantry, and the detachment of Sappers, have practically ceased to exist. Some few active and hardy fugitives may have been brought in by General Brooke's Brigade, promptly sent out by General Primrose; but their number will, we regret to think, be small, save among the cavalry. Our force was largely outnumbered, the enemy being five to one, with thirty-six guns against six. Still, our troops were much better armed than their opponents, and we have often fought and conquered in India in the face of much greater odds. The quality of our soldiers, however, in those days, was of the highest, both as regards Native and European troops. Now, British regiments are composed largely of boy recruits, physically very inferior to the stalwart Afghan, and lacking that steadiness and cohesion which only long service and the presence of veterans accustomed to war can give. The Bombay troops are steady and well behaved enough, but they have seen little service of late years, and are small, weakly men, compared to the Sikhs, Rajpoots, Pathans, and Poorbeahs of the Bengal Presidency. We do not for a moment insinuate that General Burrows' men fought badly, for we know absolutely nothing as to their conduct and the circumstances of the defeat. It is, however, a singular coincidence that since the deterioration of the Army caused by Lord Cardwell's fatal meddling, we have had two disasters more dramatically complete than anything recorded in our military history. We do not desire to discount the positive information which will reach us as soon as telegraphic communication with Candahar has been re-established, still we would venture to suggest that possibly our tactics had something to do with our defeat. Our system is very "wooden," and our officers are not always skilful in adapting their method of fighting to the circumstances of the moment. Now the extended order, which answers so well against a European foe, with weapons nearly as good as our own, is not invariably the only method which should be adopted in dealing with an uncivilised, indifferently armed, but numerically superior force. In such a case, when pressed on all sides by swarms of daring swordsmen, our men ought to be kept together, for mutual support and encouragement. But it is really idle to speculate on a disaster of which all we know is that it has occurred. The great point is to efface it by prompt and imposing successes. The Authorities share this feeling, and reinforcements are being hurried off, both from England and India, with commendable energy. That General Primrose is in any danger we do not for a moment suppose; but it is different with the posts on the several lines of route. Moreover, the moral effect of Ayoub Khan's victory on the fanatic and excitable Afghan mind will be serious, and we shall have to guard against a general surging against us of the entire population. One crushing blow dealt now will, therefore, be worth a dozen delivered a few weeks hence. The truth is we thought that the "Afghan business" was all over but the shouting, and our only anxiety was lest Ayoub Khan should deny us the opportunity of beating him. There are 20,000 troops near Cabul, and it is said that a strong division can be sent to the aid of Candahar; but it remains to be seen whether we shall not have to fight for our communications, if not for our lives, in Northern Afghanistan. As, however, a few days will clear up matters considerably, it is waste of time to speculate any further.

Arrangements have been made for reinforcing the Indian garrisons, in view of the present crisis in Afghanistan, and the following regiments are under orders to proceed forthwith to India, viz.:—The 2nd Battalion 24th Foot, from Gibraltar; 61st Foot, from Malta; 98th Foot, from Malta; and 1st Battalion 23rd Foot, 77th Foot, and 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade, from England.

The 26th Regiment, which was to have gone during the winter to Bermuda, is to embark at once for Malta, to replace the 61st Regiment, proceeding to India, the 38th Regiment, which had been warned for service in India, proceeding to the same station, to relieve the 98th Regiment. The 41st Regiment which would probably have gone to India early next year, goes now to Gibraltar, to take the place of the 2nd Battalion 24th Regiment.

The following details have been worked out for the despatch of troops to India, viz.:—H.M.S. Orontes embarks at Portsmouth, on Tuesday next, the 41st Regiment for Gibraltar, with families, and also fifty men of the 1st Battalion 24th Regiment, volunteers for the 2nd Battalion. She will proceed thence to Queenstown, and embark, on Friday next, 158 men of the 28th Regiment for the linked battalion, the 61st. The Orontes is timed to reach Gibraltar on the 11th prox., where the 41st will be landed, and the 2nd Battalion 24th taken on board. Malta will be reached about the 16th, when the Orontes will embark 250 men of the 61st Regiment and land 100 men, the transfers from the 28th, which will follow in the Euphrates. The Euphrates will embark at Portsmouth, on Friday next, 190 men —with officers and families—of the 26th Regiment. She will proceed thence to Queenstown, and there take on board, on the 9th prox., 246 men of the 64th Regiment for the linked battalion, the 98th, and also the 38th Regiment. She arrives at Malta on the 18th, lands the 26th and 38th, and embarks the 98th Regiment and 420 of the 61st Regiment for conveyance to Bombay. The Tamar takes to Malta 460 of the 26th Regiment, which will embark at Portsmouth on Saturday next. The 1st Battalion 23rd Fusiliers, 77th Regiment, and 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade follow in Himalaya (or Jumna) and Malabar, embarking at Portsmouth on the 16th and 18th prox., and proceed direct to India.

We cordially join in the expression of the desire that, in the interests of his office and of the public service, Sir John Adye may soon find a seat in Parliament. It will be especially interesting to hear his reasons for a graceful—as we trust it will be—submission to the necessity for abandoning the obsolete system of muzzle-loading ordnance, of which he was the obstinate champion for so many years. He will probably have to account for some other changes of less striking importance and urgency. The compliment which the Duke of Cambridge paid him at the distribution of prizes to the military students, was well deserved, and in his management at Woolwich there was much to praise; but in the history of our artillery, it will be recorded that Sir John Adye exercised an influence which would have been disastrous had it been permanent, and which leaves much to be redeemed in future.

Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., who has returned from the Cape, resumed command of the Chatham District on Wednesday.

Having been relieved at Chatham, where he has been in temporary command since the departure of Sir Evelyn Wood for the Cape, Colonel W. Earle, C.S.I., half-pay, late Grenadier Guards, has succeeded Major-General the Hon. R. Monck as Colonel on the Staff commanding the troops at Shorncliffe.

In the House of Commons on Monday, Mr. Creyke asked the Secretary of State for War whether, having regard to the relative rank of ridingmaster and quartermaster, the Government intended to consider the advisability of granting to ridingmasters the same advantages that had been given, and that might be under consideration to be given, to quartermasters. Mr. Childers, in reply, stated that the duties of ridingmasters being much less onerous and responsible than those of quartermasters, he could not undertake to make their advantages equal. This conclusion at which Mr. Childers has arrived will have astonished everybody. There is no harder worked and more deserving body of officers than the ridingmasters, and if Mr. Childers had ever served in a cavalry regiment, he certainly would not have expressed such an opinion.

Brevet Major C. W. Murray, 61st Regiment—who did good service lately in Zululand, and whose regiment is at Malta—is attached for duty to the 72nd Highlanders at Cabul, and has been appointed orderly officer to Brigadier Baker, C.B.

The report of the Royal Commission on Wellington College has been presented to the Home Secretary, and its publication may any day be expected. It is to be hoped that the Royal Commissioners have gone thoroughly into all the complaints of the Army with respect to this national institution, and have not merely confined themselves to one or two points. What is wanted is not an institution managed by a clique, but a good, sound school, at which poor officers of the Army and Navy can, at a moderate expense, get their sons educated in such a manner that they may have a fair chance of success at competitive examinations for admission into the public service. To accomplish this are needed a radical reform and publicity given to the accounts, in order that the public may see that the money they subscribed for one purpose is not diverted to another.

General the Right Hon. Sir W. Knollys, K.C.B., Usher of the Black Rod, has been suffering from a severe cold, but was much better yesterday.

Lieutenant-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., has been staying at Freshwater, Isle of Wight, but returned to town on Thursday, having been summoned to the War Office to arrange for the despatch of reinforcements to India.

The brevets announced last week for Major McCalmont and Major Stewart were certainly well deserved, especially in the case of the latter officer, who went out on Major-General Marshall's staff, and gained the highest credit for the admirable manner in which he discharged his duties. Major McCalmont went out later, with Sir Garnet Wolseley, but he made up as far as possible for lost time, and struck for the front whenever there was work to be done or to be made. The promotions in Friday week's Gazette strike us as being equitable, though there are some officers whose share in the arduous business of South-African campaigning must, we think, be acknowledged presently by similar honours.

Colonel C. G. Arbuthnot, C.B., R.A., is expected in England almost immediately from India, information having reached the Horse Guards of his having vacated his brigade command in Afghanistan, and left Safed Sang for Simla. On arrival, he will take a few weeks' leave, prior to assuming the duties of his new appointment as Deputy-Adjutant-General of Royal Artillery on October 1.

Mr. Lepel Griffin is a very smart young man, as the readers of the Chronicles of Dustypore may remember, but even he, in all the pomp and perplexity of his position at Cabul, cannot be allowed to make England quite ridiculous in the eyes of Afghans and of Hindoos and Mahommedans. To describe Abdul Rahman—the excited and defeated rival of Yakoob—as "long friendly to the British," is simple mendacity. When he was interviewed in his exile by travellers, he expressed the utmost hostility, as it was natural he should, to the English, and the greatest good-will to the Russians. In fact, if we could but see ourselves as others must see us in this Afghan business, there would be nothing to be proud of but our power of beating the Afghans, imprisoning any chiefs we liked to serve so, and eating any quantity of proud words and strong leeks. The substitution of Yakoob Khan for Shere Ali was bad enough; the selection of Abdul Rahman in lieu of Yakoob, and the imprisonment of the latter with a host of Sirdars in India, complicates the situation immensely. It is almost to be regretted that the Indian Government did not let Shere Ali play as he pleased with the Russian Embassy, or whatever it was at Cabul, and content itself with a policy of masterly watchfulness. From the present muddle nothing is to be expected, except the necessity for intense vigilance and the certainty of masterly activity being needed at no distant time. There is surely little prospect of peace with honour from it.

Captain Howard, 80th Foot, a deserving but unlucky officer, has been saved by the brevet of Major from the operations of the Retirement Warrant, though he, like Captain Yeatman-Biggs, was not so fortunate as he could have desired in his share in co-operation with Russell's attack on Sekukuni's Town. Captain Poole was mentioned in despatches for his Staff work, before he was entrusted with the custody of Cetewayo. Captain Spratt, 29th, and Captain Hutchinson, 4th, were conspicuous for their intelligent discharge of their duties as supply and transport officers, and Lord Gifford may feel that the ill-fortune which deprived him of the fruits of his labour in tracking the Zulu King has now been in some measure compensated. It will all come right, in time, for others.

Considering the proportion of Artillery to the other arms employed in Zululand, the gunners can scarcely complain that they have not received their fair share of rewards for our last little war. Lieutenant-Colonel H. Brackenbury has been made a C.B., and Captains J. F. Maurice, M. J. Clarke. W. R. Fox, W. G. Knox, A. G. Yeatman-Biggs, and J. R. Poole have been promoted to brevet majorities on the recommendation of Sir Garnet Wolseley; whilst Lord Chelmsford had previously obtained the Bath for Lieutenant-Colonels J. T. B. Brown, F. T. A. Law, and A. Harness; brevet lieutenant-colonelcies for Majors E. J. Tremlett, F. S. Le Grice, and J. F. Owen; and brevet majorities for Captains H. R. Y. Browne, J. Alleyne, and H. Vaughan. It will be allowed this time that the Royal regiment has at any rate been encouraged.

Major-General H. R. Browne, who went out to India early in 1873 to assume command of the 37th Regiment, to which he had exchanged from the 2nd Battalion 20th, and who since June, 1875, has held a brigade command in Bengal, is now en route to England, having vacated his appointment on the completion of his five years' Staff service.

Lieutenant Ivar M'Ivor, Bengal Staff Corps, relieves Mr. Edwards as Assistant-Resident at Bushire, Persian Gulf, the latter gentleman having retired, under the 55 years' system. Mr. Edwards is a very popular official, and has been of great assistance not only to the British Government, but to Colonel Ross, and in him the Resident loses a valuable assistant. It was the intention of the Indian Government to dispense with this post, but how far they have carried out their intentions is evident by the fact of another assistant being selected. Mr. Edwards has been for some time past engaged in buying mules for the Indian Government in Persia.

It is scarcely within our province to deal with such a question as that which the Dean of Westminster has, we think, placed beyond the reach of argument in his admirable letter, but there can be, we believe, no doubt but that, if the British Army could vote, there would be 999 voices out of every 1,000 given in favour of the erection of a monument to the memory of the son of our ally, Napoleon III., in Westminster Abbey. This week has witnessed the return to our shores of the widowed mother of the gallant lad who, under our flag, died in a distant land a soldier's death, and it would have been well if she could have found here the sad solace of knowing that the generous impulses which dictated the forgetfulness of all but the friendship of the father, and the circumstances of the son's career, had not been chilled by the cold hand of calculating Democracy and political device. It will not redound to the credit of Parliamentary institutions, nor to the renown of a great nation, that "the ungenerous spirit which governed the Parliament of 1661, under an altered form survived in the Parliament of 1880."

We would call the attention of our readers to an article in the August number of that spirited Service journal, Colburn's United Service Magazine, on the case of General Stannus. It is an ex parte statement, but, leaving out inferences, the facts are indisputable, and these show that General Stannus has received but a poor return for his long and distinguished service, and many wounds.

The Navy.

Surgeon Alexander Blood Trousdell, M.D., has been promoted to the rank of Staff Surgeon in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of 24th inst.

Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers (Liverpool Brigade)—Herbert Vernon Lillicrap, Esq., to be honorary Sub-Lieutenant (July 26).

In consequence of the death, on the 22nd inst., of Vice-Admiral Rowley Lambert, C.B., the following promotions have taken place, with seniority of 23rd inst.:—Rear-Admiral Arthur William Acland Hood, C.B., to be Vice-Admiral in Her Majesty's Fleet; Captain the Honourable William John Ward to be Rear-Admiral in Her Majesty's Fleet.

Consequent on the foregoing, the following promotion has been made on the Retired List, from the same date:—Captain Frederick Harrison Smith to be Rear-Admiral on the Retired List.

APPOINTMENTS.

Commander—F. W. Egerton, to the Alexandra, for service in the Condor, when recommissioned.

Lieutenants—Edward J. Lang, to the Monarch; A. Evan-Thomas, Archibald T. Carter, and Francis S. Wheeler (for navigating duties), to the Alexandra, for the Condor, when recommissioned.

Assistant-Paymasters—Charles de B. Stewart, to the Cambridge; William J. Kilroy, to the Euphrates; Robert W. Saunders, to the Alexandra, for Condor.

Surgeons—William H. Putsey, to the Alexandra, for Condor; James T. W. S. Kellard, to the Himalaya; Robert Bedford, to the Duke of Wellington, for Radnor Hospital.

Engineers—George Bremer, to the Pembroke, for the Zephyr; Frederick G. Whittaker, to the Asia, for charge of reserve stores.

Gunner—William Pollington, to the Excellent.

AGINCOURT, Com. Edward Stratford Dugdale, who has been employed as lieut. in this ship since Feb. 5, 1879, and whose promotion we recorded last week, served as sub-lieut. and lieut. in the Leander in the Pacific from March 15, 1865, until paid off, Oct. 17, 1866. He obtained his commission as lieut. on March 7, 1867, and on June 12 following was appointed to the Prince Consort, Capt. E. A. Inglefield, and was employed in the Mediterranean and with the Channel Squadron until transferred, Jan. 7, 1868, to the Minotaur, Capt. J. G. Goodenough; and subsequently served under the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir T. M. C. Symonds, attached to the Channel Squadron, until July 12, 1869, when he removed into the Excellent, Capt. Henry Boys, as additional, and subsequently served as her junior staff officer, until appointed, Nov. 10, 1871, to the Triumph, fitting for service with the Channel Squadron, and remained until July 1875. On Jan. 1, 1876, he was again appointed additional of the Excellent, and on Aug. 1 following was transferred to the Wolverene, fitting for service in Australia, and remained until Nov. 1877.

ALBATROSS, Com. A. J. Errington, sailed from Singapore for Hong Kong on June 7.

BLANCHE, Capt. C. G. F. Knowles, which was at Halifax by last advices, will shortly be ordered home, to pay off at Sheerness.

BRITANNIA, Capt. H. Fairfax, C.B., distributed the prizes on board the Britannia, Dartmouth, last week, to the successful cadets. Amongst those present were Admiral Sir Astley Cooper Key, K.C.B., Admiral the Hon. C. G. J. B. Elliot, C.B., and the Hon. S. Fortescue, flag-lieut. At the request of Sir Astley Cooper Key, the prizes were handed to the respective winners by Mrs. Fairfax. The number of cadets in the ship at present is 151, of which 41 were this time examined, 38 passing. The distribution over, a few words were addressed to the cadets. General regret was expressed that Capt. Fairfax would leave the ship, the time of his service on board having expired. His successor will, as we have previously stated, be Capt. Wells. Following is a list of the prizes as awarded. Study subjects—1, telescope, Mr. C. D. Granville; 2, despatch-box, Mr. E. H. Smith. Seamanship—1, binoculars, Mr. C. D. Granville; 2, gold compass, Mr. A. B. E. Greville. Charts and instruments—1, case of instruments, Mr. S. Nicholson; 2, atlas, Mr. W. Lumsden. French—1, despatch-box, Mr. H. H. Campbell; 2, Works of Erckmann-Chatrian, Mr. C. V. de M. Cowper. Essay—1, Macaulay's History, Mr. C. H. Morgan; 2, Napier's Peninsular War, Mr. S. Nicholson. Religious Knowledge—1, Bible and Concordance, Mr. F. K. C. Gibbons; 2, Church Service, Mr. H. H. D. Tothill. Latin—1, Rome, Mr. H. C. Scroggs; 2, Ruins of Pompeii and Athens, Mr. P. Walter; Mr. E. E. Lacy, equal. Drawing—1, sketching wallet, Mr. J. S. Luard; 2, etchings on the Mosel, Mr. H. C. Scroggs. Physics—1, despatch-box, Mr. S. Nicholson; 2, Mr. E. H. Smith; Deschanel and Ganot's Physics, Mr. F. K. C. Gibbons, equal. The chief captains, Mr. H. C. Scroggs and Mr. H. H. Campbell, each received a dirk. After the prizes had been handed to their respective winners, Sir Cooper Key addressed a few words to the cadets, in the course of which he stated that he had been for forty-five years in the Service, and his affection for it was greater than ever. The Rev. J. C. P. Aldous, principal instructor and chaplain to the cadets, also spoke, remarking that a member of Parliament had spoken against the Britannia in the House of Commons, but Dr. Hurst, who had examined the cadets, had said that the education on board the Britannia was as good as ever, one of the cadets having taken 100 per cent. in French, and another 50 per cent.

ENCOUNTER, Capt. the Hon. A. D. S. Denison, arrived at Shanghai on May 26, as senior officer of that division of the station.

FOXHOUND, Lieut.-Com. W. H. G. Nowell, sailed from Singapore for Hong Kong on May 29.

FROLIC, Com. Stuart H. Rickman, from the China station, arrived at Chatham on Saturday, for the purpose of being paid off and put out of commission.

HIMALAYA, Capt. H. W. Brent, is expected at Portsmouth early next month, and, contrary to former arrangement, will make another short round of service before laying up for repair. The Admiralty have declined to ratify the provisional arrangement made by their predecessors with Messrs. Laird for her repair, and have decided that the work shall be carried out at Devonport Yard, an item for which will be inserted in next year's Estimates. Messrs. Maudslay and Co. will construct and fix her new boilers and compound engines.—Hampshire Telegraph.

IRIS, Capt. Edward H. Seymour, arrived at Gibraltar on July 27, and left the next day for Malta.

LONDON, Capt. C. J. Brownrigg, was at Zanzibar on June 29.

PEGASUS, Com. the Hon. Horatio N. S. Hood, has been ordered to cruise along the Russian coast, and to rejoin and report to the flag on the Japan division.

PELICAN, Com. F. R. Dicken, was at Esquimault by last advices, but would be ready for sea by the 1st inst.

PHŒNIX, Com. Hubert H. Grenfell, left Halifax on the 16th inst. to visit ports in Gulf of St. Lawrence, returning to Halifax by Aug. 1, whence she would leave again on Aug. 5 for Jamaica.

RALEIGH, Capt. Charles T. Jago, which left Sydney on Saturday week for England, will call at Auckland and at the Falkland Islands on her passage home.

SPARTAN, Capt. R. E. Tracey, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Wednesday afternoon from the East India station, and saluted the Royal Adelaide. A small detachment of troops, invalids, &c., have taken passage home from Malta, and were disembarked on Thursday, after which the ship was to leave for Sheerness, to pay off. The Spartan left Trincomalee on May 16 for England, and has called at Aden, Suez, Port Said, Malta, and Gibraltar, on her homeward voyage.

TAMAR, Capt. T. H. Royse, was inspected on Saturday morning by Capt. W. B. Grant (Royal Adelaide), and was moved out of harbour into Plymouth Sound in the afternoon, when powder, &c., were placed on board. On her return from Malta she is to prepare for a West Indian trip, and according to present arrangements will leave about Sept. 15 for Gibraltar, Halifax, Jamaica, Barbadoes, and Bermuda, returning thence to England.—Western Morning News.

TRIUMPH, Capt. A. H. Markham, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Stirling, was at Esquimault on June 30. Letters from the Commander-in-Chief and from senior officer (Shannon), at Callao, show that the Osprey would leave Tahiti for Coquimbo on May 20; the Pelican would leave Esquimault for Honolulu and Tahiti on July 4; the Rocket arrived at Esquimault from Honolulu on June 26, and remains there; the Gannet, Thetis, and Turquoise were to meet the Shannon at Callao about June 18, for a court-martial, &c.; the Gannet would then proceed to Panama, the Shannon to Coquimbo to repair engines, and the Turquoise to Arica, the Thetis remaining at Callao.

WILD SWAN, Com. Seymour H. P. Dacres, has proceeded from Mozambique to the north-west coast of Madagascar.

WYE, Staff Com. H. D. Sarratt, while lying in dock at Sheerness Dockyard, undergoing repairs, was discovered to be on fire in the lower portion of the ship. Upon examination, it was found that the coals in the hold were on fire. The crew were promptly set to work to extinguish the flames, which was speedily accomplished. It is believed that the fire was caused by the heating of the bottom iron plates of the ship, as the workmen had a forge erected underneath.

It is satisfactory in these days, when one hears of so many retired officers coming to grief, to find others making a success in quite a new line. One of these is Lieut. Armit, who retired from the Royal Marines and turned his attention to opera. It was he who originated the idea of an autumn season of Italian opera at "popular prices," and as a proof of the manner in which his efforts were appreciated by the public, I may mention that Mr. Armit has now taken Her Majesty's Theatre for the next six autumn and winter seasons, during which time the direction will be under his sole control. This is a very spirited thing to do, and he is not likely to spare either money or pains to make these autumn seasons all that can be desired. Under this new direction we may look for some new operas. —Hampshire Telegraph.

TRINITY HOUSE BANQUET.

The anniversary banquet was held on Saturday at the Trinity House, Tower Hill. In the absence of the Master (the Duke of Edinburgh), the Deputy-Master (Admiral Sir Richard Collinson) presided, and proposed the toast of "The Queen." Sir Stafford Northcote gave the toast of "The Prince and Princess of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family," and in so doing referred to the presence of the Princess of Wales at Wimbledon that day. When he saw her Royal Highness distributing the prizes at Wimbledon to the various recipients,—Englishmen, Scotchmen, Irishmen, Americans, and Canadians,—it seemed to him that there must be the same difference between receiving those prizes from her Royal Highness or from the hands of the secretary as between receiving a beautiful engraved model and the rough nugget from which the model was made. He never saw the Royal Family take part in a work of charity without feeling grateful for the interest they showed in English society, and he felt sure that at every meeting of Englishmen the toast which he had risen to propose would be drunk with the utmost cordiality. The Deputy-Master proposed "The Navy, Army, and Reserve Forces."

The Earl of Northbrook, in replying for the Navy, said the toast was always drunk most warmly in all assemblies of Englishmen, but in none more cordially than that venerable corporation, which consisted not only of the most distinguished members of the Mercantile Marine, on which the influence and superiority of England mainly depended, but also of many distinguished members of the Naval profession. He was sure he would be excused for adverting to the fact that his Royal Highness the Master of the Trinity House was at present engaged, to the great benefit of the nation, in active service in the Navy. On his own part and that of the Board of Admiralty, he could only assure the company that they were determined to do their duty to the utmost of their ability in the most responsible office with which they had been entrusted.

Mr. Childers: I, too, like my right hon. friend, Sir S. Northcote, was at Wimbledon to-day, and what much struck me among many matters of interest was the evidence that our British Army is not the only army of the Empire, and at this table where you, deputy master, are honoured by the presence of several distinguished Ministers of the Dominion, I am happy to be able to note the fact that when, as you, sir, have said, diplomacy fails, and England has to put out her strength, we shall find efficient and well-organised alongside of our own a Canadian Army ready to defend the great interests of our empire. But the word "organised" reminds me that our Army has been for ten years or more going through a process of reconstruction and reorganisation, both as to its constitution and its administration; and I am bound to tell you that that process is far from complete. Great changes both in the government and in the character of the Army have still to be made, and in that work I and my advisers have to take our share, but on this you may rely, that the little Army of England, small as it is compared with that of other European military Powers, will not fall short in strength and efficiency, and will be ready for its work whenever that work may be found at home or abroad. Mr. Brassey, in responding to the toast of "The Volunteer Forces," said it was natural to refer to the salient fact that they had this year attained their majority. The Volunteer Force had its origin in a time of national anxiety and alarm. It had grown and flourished in the happier days in which we lived. It had not only been a strength to our own country, but had furnished a type and a model for imitation in the furthest dependencies of the Crown. With reference to the special branch of the Volunteer Force, with which was individually connected the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers, numerous and effective brigades had been established in London, Liverpool, and Bristol. Two hundred volunteers had been embarked in the first reserve ship stationed in the Mersey, and performed their duty efficiently during a short cruise in the Irish Channel. The only impediment to the extension of the force to every seaport was the want of funds. A subsidy was required on the same scale as that allotted to the land service, but what prospect there was of receiving the sanction of their noble friend at the head of the Admiralty to such a proposal he was not in a position to state. It was sufficient for the present occasion that he should say that they did their best with the limited resources at their disposal.

Messrs. Yarrow and Company, Poplar, have just completed a 21½-knot torpedo-boat for the Italian Government. The boat has a ram bow and a couple of funnels near the stern, but in other respects does not differ from the Lightning type. The speciality, however, is that the funnels, which are placed abreast, are arranged to turn down, so that the sparks and smoke are conducted into the sea on each side. The result of this arrangement is to considerably reduce the visibility of the craft when under way. It is of the utmost consequence to the success of an attack that the approach of a torpedo-boat should not be discovered by the enemy until it has either discharged its missile, or arrived so close as to allow the defenders no time to protect themselves against it. By the present arrangement, however, this purpose is defeated during the day by the column of smoke which is ejected into the air, and which, following the boat, can be seen long before the little craft itself can be distinguished upon the water; and during the night by the upward flight of red-hot sparks. And as the smoke from the furnaces appears actually solid when illumined by the electric light, the existing arrangement appears singularly objectionable. The plan adopted by the Messrs. Yarrow in the Italian boat is said to afford an effectual remedy; and as the funnels can be either placed in an upright position or inclined to any angle downwards that may be desired, they can be suited to varying circumstances. The same firm are also engaged in building some large torpedo-boats for the Russian Government, which are expected to exceed 22 knots an hour, and contain many novelties of design.

THE "ATALANTA" INQUIRY.

Calculations as to the stability of the Atalanta are being made at Lloyd's, independent of the Admiralty, for the information of the Committee intrusted with the inquiry into the loss of the Atalanta. After receiving and examining these calculations, a decision will be come to respecting the further witnesses that may be required. Some of the officers now in the Channel Squadron, who served in the Atalanta in her recent cruises, will be examined on the return of the Squadron to England next month.

CHILI AND PERU.

The Minister of Marine at the Hague gives notice that, according to a communication from the Netherlands Consul-General at Santiago, Chili, dated May 24, a number of torpedoes have been left by the Peruvians floating about in the harbour of Ancon and in Callao Roads, making the navigation very dangerous.

Advices received from Panama through Reuter's agency announce that the Panama Star and Herald of the 17th inst. publishes intelligence from Lima, dated June 30, stating that the Chilian Admiral off Callao had notified to the Diplomatic Body his intention of bombarding Lima, and that steamers would be allowed until July 8 to remove foreigners, and also the women and children. The inhabitants of Lima were preparing to remove their families beyond the Cordilleras, and President Pierola had decreed that all males between the age of sixteen and sixty years should provide themselves with arms for the defence of the city, no one being allowed to leave without a passport. The Archbishop of Lima had placed the treasure of his church at the disposal of the Peruvian Government. A Chilian transport vessel had been destroyed by a torpedo in the harbour of Callao. It was reported that the Chilian Government contemplated the issue of $6,000,000 in paper money to continue the war.

The Western Morning News says :—"Our correspondent at Lima sends interesting details of what appears to have been one of the most spirited actions of the war. After the battle of Tacna six thousand Chilian soldiers were sent by train to Lenta, and on June 7, after making a complete circuit of the city, so as to surprise the enemy where least expected, made a fierce and general attack upon the new outlying defensive works. With one grand charge the Peruvian forts were taken in the rear, every man in them being put to death, and a rush was made for the inner line. No sooner were the Chilians clear of the outer forts than they were blown high into the air by the explosion of mines fired just too late by electric wires from the city. The inner line of forts were stormed with equal quickness, and there was a desperate struggle. The remainder of the garrison made a last stand in the public platz, but were mowed down from all sides by the victorious Chilians until scarcely one of them remained—all demands for surrender being contemptuously refused. They were led by an officer who had deserted from the Chilians, and whose valour was stimulated by the fact that he would have been shot if he had fallen into Chilian hands. Meanwhile, an attack was made from the sea front, and the commander of the Peruvian monitor, Manco Capac, seeing that all was lost, steamed into deep water and sank her. The crew escaped in boats, but the numerous neutral ships-of-war in harbour refused to take them on board, and they had to surrender. They, however, received and rescued from otherwise terrific outrage and carnage, hundreds of women and children. The southern army of the allies has thus been practically exterminated."

A telegram from Washington, July 24, states tha Admiral Wyman, who was recently ordered by the United States Government to proceed to Havannah to investigate the circumstances under which two American schooners were fired upon by a Spanish war steamer off the Cuban coast, reports that the Cuban authorities have offered abundant evidence that the American vessels, when fired upon, were within a league of the shore. They have also unequivocally disavowed any intentional insult or indignity to the American flag, or the commission of any act contrary to the usages of civilised Powers. The Admiral nevertheless concludes by stating that the case warrants further inquiry.

The Leander, Phaeton, and Arethusa will be very similar to the Iris and Mercury, which are cruisers of the first-class. The chief modifications are that the engines will be of less power, and the weight thus gained will be applied to the fitting of an under-water armour deck over the engines, boilers, and magazine, and in increasing the the amount of coal carried. The principal dimensions of the second-class cruisers will be the same as in the first class—viz., 300ft. in length between perpendiculars and 46ft. in extreme breadth, with a load displacement of 3,700 tons at a draught of 19ft. The armour deck will consist of two thicknesses of $\frac{3}{4}$in. steel plating, placed slightly below the water at the centre of the ship, and rounded down to some 3ft. or 4ft. below it at the sides. Coal bunkers capable of containing 1,000 tons of coal will be ranged at the sides and ends of the engines and boiler spaces both above and below the armour decks, thus admitting of a very perfect system of coal protection for the machinery. The hulls of the vessels will be constructed entirely of steel. The engines are expected to develope 5,000 horse-power, which is estimated to give a mean speed of 16 knots on the measured mile, with all the weights on board. The new cruisers will be fitted with Whitehead and other torpedoes, machine-guns, electric lights, &c., and each will carry a couple of second-class torpedo boats. The armament will probably consist of a revolving gun on the forecastle and poop, and nine guns at the stern and broadside ports on the upper deck.

THE ROYAL MARINES.

SIR,—"Subscriber," whose letter appeared in your last week's issue, although he approves generally of the leading article on the Royal Marines, objects to the Royal Marine Artillery being called artillery companies before the year 1832, and says, "as a matter of fact, the Royal Marine Artillery were a separate corps from 1803 to 1832, when they were disbanded, with the exception of two companies, which were kept on," &c. Although they were styled "Royal Marine Artillery" anterior to the date quoted by "Subscriber," viz., 1832, yet an Order in Council, dated Aug. 18, 1804, authorises the formation of a company of artillery at each of the three divisions, to which a fourth company was added in the following year with the new Woolwich Division, so that, so far from being a separate corps, they were only an artillery company attached to each division until 1815, when they were increased to eight companies. The whole of this time, from their first formation until their separation in 1862, the officers were on the same list with those of the red corps, intermingled with them in seniority, and constantly changing by promotion from red to blue; and when the artillery companies were of sufficient strength to occupy a separate barrack at Portsmouth, and to be under the command of their own lieutenant-colonel, even then they were under the orders of the commandant of the Portsmouth Division of Marines, through whom their reports and returns were sent. No argument, therefore, could call the Royal Marine Artillery a distinct corps until they became so by total and entire separation in 1862, when they had a commandant and staff of their own, and had no more to do with the commandant of the Light Infantry Division than with the commanding officer of any other regiment in garrison.—I am, &c., ANOTHER SUBSCRIBER.

Capt. Archibald Lucius Douglas, whose promotion from commander we recorded last week, entered the Navy in 1856, and was employed as sub-lieutenant and acting lieutenant in the Arrogant, 47, Comdre. Wm. Edmonstone, senior officer's ship on the West Coast of Africa, from Oct. 18, 1861, until paid off in December, 1862. He obtained his commission as lieutenant on May 23, 1862, and on March 2, 1863, was appointed additional of the Excellent, gunnery-ship. On Nov. 17 following he was transferred to the Aurora, Capt. Sir F. Leopold M'Clintock, attached to the Channel Squadron and on particular service, and on the North American and West Indies station; and was paid off in Dec. 1867, when he was again appointed additional of the Excellent, and in September, 1868, was transferred to the Cambridge, gunnery-ship, Capt. the Hon. F. A. C. Foley, in which ship he was subsequently employed as senior staff officer until promoted to commander May 1, 1872. He was afterwards appointed May 14, 1872, additional to the Minotour, 26, Capt. Robert Gibson, flagship, with the Channel Squadron of Rear-Admiral G. T. P. Hornby, to instruct in Harvey's torpedoes; and on Aug. 6 following was transferred to the Achilles, 26, Capt. R. V. Hamilton, Coastguard ship, at Portland, for the same service. On June 5, 1873, he sailed with Lieuts. Jones and Bailey, and a party of about 30 petty officers and seamen, from Southampton in the Khedive, for Yokohama, to join the Naval College at Tokei, near Yeddo, where they were to be engaged in instructing the Japanese in the art of gunnery, and for his services as director of the Naval College in the formation of a navy was complimented by the Admiralty on the manner in which he conducted his duties while in the employ of the Japanese Government. On Jan. 27, 1876, he was transferred to the command of the Egeria, 4, at China, where he remained until relieved April 24, of the present year.

"From advices received from Aden by the English mail just in, we learn that the hot weather has set in there with considerable severity. On the 15th inst. H.M.S. Woodlark arrived at Aden on her way to China, and the same day the assistant-paymaster-in-charge died of heat apoplexy. It appears that the deceased officer was quite well on the morning of the arrival of the Woodlark, and that he was standing on the bridge of the vessel, when he complained of feeling unwell. This was about noon, and by 2 p.m. he was dead; he was buried the same evening. The transport Himalaya lost a warrant officer from the heat just before entering Aden. The health of the troops at Aden is reported to be excellent, the 1-6th Royal Regt. having hardly any men in hospital, and the weather, though hot, is said to be not unhealthy. A new club called the 'Union' has been started at Steamer Point, and as it has already 50 members, it may be looked upon as a success, and will supply a want long felt. Major Reid, R.A., and Capt Heron, commanding H.M.'s Seagull, have both been invalided home. Lord Ripon is said to have been very pleased with his day at Aden, which he liked much better than he had anticipated; and as the Himalaya will have to put in to Aden to coal on her return with Lord Lytton, Aden people are expecting soon to welcome the outgoing Viceroy."—Bombay Gazette.

Some administrative changes have recently been made in the Marine Department at Bombay. The storekeeper's appointment has, we learn, been reduced, and Lieut. Hewett reverts to his former appointment as dockmaster, which has been so well filled of late by Lieut. Brebner, late I.N., who, we suppose, will become shipping-master under the Bombay Government once more. Every one knows what an immense amount of extra work was recently thrown upon the Marine Staff and commanders, and it was largely due to the late dockmaster that the arrangements for transporting the large body of troops from Bombay to Kurrachee were carried out in so smooth and satisfactory a manner.

EPPS'S CHOCOLATE ESSENCE.—Product of a special refining process. It is chocolate devoided of its over-richness and substantiality. Sugarless and, when made, of the consistency of coffee. THE ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY.

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief awarded commissions and prizes to the successful students at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, on Monday. The whole of the gentlemen cadets were first paraded and inspected in the presence of a numerous company, which included Lord Morley, Gen. Sir John St. George, R.E., Major-Gen. Hamilton, V.C., Admiral Strange, Col. Sir John Stokes, Gen. Napier, Governor of Sandhurst Military College; and the staff and other officers of Woolwich Garrison. The cadets drilled remarkably well under the direction of Mr. Aylmer, the senior under-officer, and also in the hands of Under-officer Haynes and Corpl. Capper, who were severally entrusted with the command. Afterwards everybody repaired to the School of Arms for the principal business of the day. Gen. Beauchamp Walker, Director-General of Military Education, first read his own and the examiners' reports upon the recent examination, which has been of a twofold character, the cadets having studied for two terms without interval, in order to meet the demand for officers, and of the forty-two cadets who went up for examination thirty-nine had passed. On all the subjects of study the reports were satisfactory, and the Director-General especially commended the gentlemen cadets for the results obtained under pressure. Gen. J. F. M. Browne, C.B., R.E., submitted his first report as Governor of the Academy, to which position he was appointed on June 1. He certified that the cadets who had passed examination in studies were well fitted by their exercises and other attainments to receive her Majesty's commission. He thanked the staff and the gentlemen cadets for the support which they had given him, and of the cadets generally he made favourable report. Their attention and extra exertions under the abnormal circumstances of the time had been very praiseworthy. The average age of those recommended for commissions was nineteen years and one month, and they had been one year and eight months at the Academy. Commissions were then awarded as follows :—

The prizes were allotted in the following order :—Mr. Kincaird, the Pollock gold medal for distinguished proficiency, also prizes for mathematics and mechanics; Mr. Aylmer, the regulation sword for exemplary conduct; Mr. A. E. Haynes, prizes for fortification and military drawing; Mr. Capper, for chemistry and physics, and for drills and exercises; Mr. H. A. Bethel, the Tombs memorial scholarship, as senior cadet for the Royal Artillery; Mr. F. B. Fuller, for classics; Mr. C. E. Baddeley, for military drawing; Mr. C. P. Martel, for military history; Mr. R. W. Fuller, for riding; Mr. A. C. Baillie, for landscape drawing; Mr. T. T. Rowan, for gymnastics; Mr. A. T. Montanaro, for Italian; Mr. C. N. Fitzroy, for French; and Mr. A. G. Johnson, for German. The Duke of Cambridge, after presenting the prizes, addressed the cadets, and expressed pleasure at receiving such favourable reports of their proficiency and good conduct. The long period of hard work which they had undergone without a vacation was against a very high examination, but in spite of all disadvantages they had done credit to the academy, their instructors, and themselves. Much of this result he ascribed to the late governor, Sir John Adye, whose loss at the academy, though he was still useful in another vocation, he personally regretted, having always recognised the ability and efficiency with which he had conducted its affairs. The masters and professors had had a hard time of it, and he was glad to hear from the new governor, his friend, General Browne, that he had already experienced that support which the staff of the institution always gave to its chief. A great college of this description depended a great deal upon the efficiency and zeal of its officers and teachers, and, having these, it was the fault of the cadets themselves if they did not turn out well. The academy was, in fact, progressing most favourably. At one time it was subjected to some criticism, not always fairly; but it was certainly in no fear of criticism now. His Royal Highness then impressed upon the gentleman cadets the importance of the duties they were about to assume, and pointed out the opportunities of distinction and advancement which lay before them. Of late years, he said, many officers of the Army, and especially of the Ordnance corps, had occasion to distinguish themselves in the field, or had obtained openings to advancement and honour in the diplomatic service. Young men could not hope to win such positions immediately, but if they worked diligently the same advantages would be theirs hereafter, and the reason he mentioned the subject now was lest any of them might think that work was at an end when they left the academy, and the future only play. A man who would get on must work always, and opportunities would come to those who sought them. He was happy to know that this sentiment was appreciated in the Army, and in no branch of it more fully than in the Scientific corps, the members of which, by their studies and training in this academy, obtained a footing which, properly applied, would inevitably raise them to prominent positions. He warned the young officers, however, not to forget the men entrusted to them, and to begin by being good soldiers themselves.

Some men who were very scientific thought that the Military soldier was a second consideration, but in his opinion it was of the first importance that officers and men should have a thorough knowledge of their military duties, and that without this no officer could be selected by the authorities for a responsible position. Especially he enforced discipline as an essential quality in officers and men, and this, combined with spirit and zeal, and the knowledge they had acquired, would enable them, he said, to achieve honour and success in the honourable career before them. He hoped that they would bear in mind his advice, and work hard. The cadets then gave a gymnastic display, and the Duke of Cambridge returned to London. The cadets gave a ball on a large scale in the School of Arms at night, and have now broken up for the vacation, which will last until Sept. 29.

THE SCHOOL FOR DAUGHTERS OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The Princess Mary Adelaide visited the Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army at Roehampton on Wednesday, and presented the prizes to the successful pupils. Among the many ladies and gentlemen gathered on the platform were the Baroness Burdett Coutts, Bishop Claughton, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Henry Lefroy (chairman of the committee) and Lady Lefroy, Gen. Sir F. E. Chapman, Gen. Sir E. C. and Lady Hodge, Sir T. G. Logan, Gen. Sir W. Walker, Gen. Sir R. Dacres, Gen. Sir W. Wyllie, Major-Gen. J. T. Boileau (vice-chairman), Major-Gen. Sawyer, Major-Gen. T. W. Holland, Lieut.-Gen. Beauchamp Walker, and Mr. G. W. Foster (the secretary). In opening the proceedings of the day, Sir H. Lefroy said that the school educated and qualified for the highest positions in life the daughters of Army officers, the pupils frequently being consigned to the care of the institution from all parts of the world, as on foreign service it was well nigh impossible to obtain for them a suitable education. The recent examinations had been conducted by gentlemen appointed by the Cambridge Syndicate, and their report was full of encouragement, and such as conferred upon the school a high place among the educational establishments of the country. Her Royal Highness then presented the prizes and certificates, the principal being,—for general good conduct, May Rainsford; general proficiency, Bertha Geraghty and Margaret Chartres; and the scholarships, won by Mary Guy and Lily Pennington. Bishop Claughton next delivered an appropriate address to the pupils; and Gen. Boileau subsequently proposed a vote of thanks to the Princess for her gracious presence that afternoon. Before returning to town, her Royal Highness inspected the house and the beautiful grounds in which it is situated, expressing herself highly gratified with her visit. The band of the Coldstream Guards attended and played a well-arranged programme, under the leadership of Mr. Fred. Godfrey.

THE DEATH OF THE PRINCE IMPERIAL.

Brigdr.-Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B, has sent to the daily papers the following interesting and touching description of the death of the Prince Imperial, collected and collated from the independent narrative of eighteen of the Zulus who took part in the attack on the reconnoitring party on the fatal 1st of June, 1879 :—

"The attacking party numbered about forty, of whom twelve followed the Prince, and either seven or eight were concerned immediately in his death. The Zulus, having nearly surrounded the party, fired, and rushed on them a they were in the act of mounting. The Prince, not having succeeded in mounting, ran alongside his horse until it broke away from him on the hither bank of the donga, about 220 yards from the kraal where the party had off saddled. The Prince followed his horse into the donga, until, closely pressed by his pursuers, he turned upon them, in the words of the Zulus themselves, 'like a lion at bay.' Struck by an assegai inside the left shoulder, he rushed at his nearest opponent, who fled out of the donga and got behind another Zulu, who, coming up, fired at the Prince when only ten yards from him. The Prince returned the fire with his pistol, and faced his now rapidly-increasing foes, until, menaced from his right rear and struck by another assegai, he regained the level on which he had first stood in the donga, and where he was speedily surrounded. He then seized an assegai which had been thrown at him—for in struggling with his terrified horse his sword had fallen from its scabbard. He thus defended himself against seven or eight Zulus, who state that they did not dare to close on him until, exhausted, he sunk down on his hips. The above facts were elicited from the Zulus, who were examined separately on the scene of the attack, and out of sight of one another."

RIDINGMASTERS.

"Miles" writes :—"You have doubtless seen the reply of the Secretary of State for War on Monday night last, to the question put by Mr. Creyke, with reference to the relative position of the ridingmaster and quartermaster. Mr. Creyke asked if the Government intended to consider the advisability of granting ridingmasters the same advantages that had been given, and might be under consideration to be given, to quartermasters. The Secretary of State replied, that the duties of ridingmasters are much less onerous and responsible than quartermasters, and that he could not undertake to make their advantages equal. I should think this reply must have startled a good many Cavalry officers, none more perhaps than the Cavalry quartermasters themselves. I know nothing about the duties of an Infantry quartermaster, and shall therefore not touch that part of the question; but as the duties of a Cavalry quartermaster are, I presume, the same as those of an Infantry quartermaster, with forage, saddlery, and horse equipment added thereto, I suppose the Cavalry quartermaster's duties are the most onerous and responsible of the two. Knowing a little of cavalry, having spent some years of my life at home and in the field in that branch of the Service, I venture to offer a few remarks on the reply of the Secretary of State for War. I think it very unfortunate, at starting, that the case of the ridingmasters should have been coupled with that of the quartermasters. The case of the ridingmasters is a hard one, having its own grievances, which are plain and well understood by professional men, and needed no bolstering by being compared with that of the quartermasters. However, the comparison once drawn, and in the House of Commons, is, I submit, open to criticism; had it not been for this, I should have refrained from saying one word about the quartermasters. Well, let us see what are the duties of each. The quartermaster has charge of Government stores, attends the issue of bread, meat, and forage, is responsible for the general cleanliness of the barracks, and attends two parades a year (inspections). The ridingmaster attends all mounted parades, has charge of the riding of the regiment, the breaking of the horses, the fitting of the saddlery, and is entirely responsible to the commanding officer for the same. I am at a loss to see how the duties of the ridingmaster are to be considered less responsible than those of the quartermaster. I do not think any professional man will be found to say that the charge of Government stores is much more onerous and responsible than the charge of the riding of 600 men and nearly 400 horses. It was most unfortunate that the comparison was made at all, but I venture to say that nine-tenths of the ridingmasters in the Cavalry could undertake the more onerous and responsible duties of quartermaster to-morrow, and do them with satisfaction to their commanding officers. How many quartermasters are there who could perform the much less onerous and responsible duties of ridingmaster? Is there one? I could go into the question as to the advantages the quartermasters already enjoy compared with the ridingmasters, but I confine myself to the words of the Secretary of State for War,—'that the duties of the ridingmaster are much less onerous and responsible than the quartermasters,' a statement which I most respectfully and emphatically deny."

THE EXPENSES OF OFFICERS.

"Mephisto" writes :—"In your excellent article in the Army and Navy Gazette of July 17 on 'The Increase of the Expenses of Officers,' you leave out one item which, though uncertain in its operation, is often by no means unimportant in its results. I allude to the wholesale manner in which soldier servants desert now-a-days, of course carrying their plain clothes with them. Three cases of this kind have occurred to me in the last two years, besides soldiers deserting who are not servants generally contrive to carry off some servant's things. Four other officers in my regiment have suffered in the same way in two years, losing also money as well as clothes. It is not easy to point out a remedy unless officers were given allowance in lieu of servants, as is done on foreign service. As far as I can recollect, I have lost six suits of clothes in this way, three of these being almost new. This is a good deal in two years."

INDIA.

Col. C. C. Johnson, C.B., Bengal S.C., and Col. C. M. Macgregor, C.B., C.S.I., Bengal S.C., on completion of five years' tenure of their substantive staff appointments, have been reappointed Deputy-Qrmr.-Gen. and First Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. respectively.

Col. H. H. Firth, Madras S.C., is about to retire from the Service on a pension of £456 and extra annuity of £668.

The Madras Mail says :—"The order of the Commander-in-Chief of Madras, dated May 19, establishing recruiting depôts in the Madras Presidency, makes a new epoch in Indian military history. For the first time since the establishment of our Sepoy Army in the days of Clive have we been obliged to offer a bounty, and a pretty large bounty too, to obtain recruits for its ranks. The innovation of giving a bounty to native recruits is to be deprecated for several reasons: it is introducing the thin edge of a wedge which it will be difficult to withdraw, and it is a measure which must increase the expense of our already costly native army. It may introduce the crime of desertion, hitherto unknown in the Madras Army."

Col. C. M. Govan, commanding the Royal Artillery at Kirkee, has been appointed to the Brigade Staff temporarily, with the rank of Brigdr.-Gen. whilst so employed, vice Brigdr.-Gen. Bray, C.B., who retires on half-pay.

Extract from Indian Government General Orders :—"The under-mentioned officers have, on completion of five years' tenure of their substantive staff appointments, been re-appointed by Government thereto :—As Deputy-Qrmr.-Gen., until further orders—Major-Gen. C. C. Johnson, C.B., officiating Qrmr.-Gen. in India; as 1st Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., until further orders—Col. C. M. Macgregor, C.B., C.S.I., C.I.E., chief of the staff, Northern Afghanistan Field Force."

The following officers have been admitted to colonel's allowances, viz. :—Cols. C. T. Aitchison, Bombay S.C., from June 10, 1880; J. G. Touch and R. M. Macdonald, from June 12; and C. Thompson, Bombay S.C., from June 18.

The Times' correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta on Sunday :—"The Naga campaign despatches have been published, and both the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief take the opportunity to record their approval of the conduct and result of the operations and of the services rendered by Gen. Nation and his troops. This verdict, so far as it concerns the General, will hardly be indorsed by the public, the commonly-received opinion being that this little war was sadly mismanaged. The despatches themselves do not contain much that is interesting or new, unless it be Gen. Nation's summing-up of the results of the campaign. He says :—'The men of Konoma, formerly the terror of the Hills, have been entirely broken up and dispersed; their fortified villages have been levelled with the ground, and their magnificent stone-faced terraced rice-land, the work of generations, has been confiscated. They have also been deprived of their arms, and a heavy fine has been exacted from them, and this, with the punishment inflicted on other offending villages, will, I trust, satisfy the Government that the objects of the expedition have been attained.' Most people on the spot are, I fancy, somewhat sceptical as to the complete crushing of the Nagas and as to the future security of the Assam and Cachar frontier of which Gen. Nation seems so confident. The officers specially mentioned in the despatches are Major Evans, Capts. Williamson and Macgregor, and Lieut. Wingate. The total loss in the campaign between Oct. 14 and April 22 was 60 killed, including two British officers, and 51 wounded."

Major E. Faunce, Madras S.C., has been appointed an assist.-adjt.-gen. of division, Madras Army, from June 27, vice Col. D. Standen, Madras S.C., who vacates on appointment to a regimental command.

An Indian paper understands that authority has been given to Sir Henry Ramsay to raise another Ghoorka regiment in Kumaon, and so far has the matter progressed, that the arms (Sniders) and a large quantity of ammunition have actually been issued.

The death is announced of Lieut. T. Fairfax, manager of the Adjutant-General's Office, Madras, at the age of 40 years, which took place on June 30.

Lieut.-Col. W. Hicks, Assistant-Adjutant-General at Poona, has been allowed to retire from the Service from July 1, under the provisions of G.G.O. No. 10 of Jan. 7, 1880, subject to her Majesty's approval—ordinary pension, £365; capitalised value of annuity, £3,321.

The Times of India says :—"Many of our readers will regret to hear that Brigdr.-Gen. Hogg, Qrmr.-Gen., has had a relapse of the malady which he contracted on field service, and that the doctors have ordered him home. Gen. Hogg has left by mail steamer. Lieut.-Col. Pottinger will officiate as Qrmr.-Gen. during Gen. Hogg's absence."

PROMOTION AND RETIREMENT.

"Looker-on" writes :—"With reference to the article on Promotion in the Army, which appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette on the 17th inst., will you allow me to offer another suggestion, which is, that the retirement of non-Purchase captains be made voluntary, instead of obligatory, at the age of 40? By doing so, many would be glad to avail themselves of opportunities for retirement, and those who entered the Army to make it their profession would not have to undergo the hardship of being turned out at an age which prevents their making a fresh start in life. Voluntary retirement would cause an ample flow of promotion."

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "PERFECTED" OIL. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Campaigning in South Africa. By Captain W. E. Montague, 94th Regiment. (W. Blackwood.)

When we consider the large number of writers on military matters, whether professional or other, who were present throughout the Zulu campaign, it seems to be a matter of surprise that the book market has not already been flooded ad nauseam with descriptions of what took place in South Africa. No doubt several books have been published, but scarcely one of them seems to be remembered now. The war (though not its consequences) is over, other subjects are cropping up daily, quite sufficient to distract public attention. Even the poor Zulus who, scorning the Aquarium, took refuge in the police-courts, seem to be aware of this, and are about to return to their "kraals." Messrs. Blackwood have recently published, in the sensible one-volume form, an officer's view of what he saw, and the "shaves" he heard. For obvious reasons, he does not offer any critical remarks on the conduct of the war, but merely relates the facts that came under his own observation, or were derived from a reliable source. This is the description of book on the Zulu war most calculated to please the general public. A consideration of important military operations is eschewed, and more room thereby made for introducing the reader to the frolicsome side of a campaign, as well as the serious one. Before perusing a quarter of this volume, we find no difficulty in seeing that its author is competent to deal with either, and thus well qualified to write an amusing as well as instructive book. The position that he held during the campaign enabled him to consider calmly as well as accurately the condition of our troops in South Africa, and also the numerous scares to which they appear to have fallen so ready a sacrifice. When the cruel disaster at Isandlwana burst upon the country, it was felt that England must retrieve the reverse. The scene at Aldershot on the morning after the receipt of that terrible news is dramatically sketched by Captain Montague. It was to be a brigade day, but there were present no companies standing on parade, in readiness to be inspected, but men gathered in groups, "not talking much, just standing as if they had heard something, and expected shortly to hear more." There were but a few minutes of suspense. On the orderly-room table lay the order for the regiment "to be held in readiness for immediate embarkation on service in South Africa." Then came the realisation of what was about to occur to wives, mothers, and sisters, till at length all gloomy thoughts were stifled in the hurry of preparation. Amongst other amusing incidents of the time related by Captain Montague was the arrival in camp of three tailors, rivals, each anxious to supply uniform and helmets fitted for South Africa. They were small-sized men, and when told to come in, did so with a timid air, as if expecting some rough practical joke from the officers who had need of them. However, their goods were purchased, and when the author received his garments from the obsequious "Snip," he jocularly remarked that he supposed it would do if he paid him on his return. "Why, Sir, you see," was his reply, "when gentlemen are a going out as you are, Sir, it is a case of ready money." This is only equalled by the view of Isandlwana which was taken by a well-to-do bootmaker in the West End, who shook his head over the news pathetically, as he said, "Sad business, very sad! Nothing like it in England since I can remember. We lost three customers by it, Sir." But now the bustle is all over, the parting words are spoken; the last rush made to the gangway, and then the order, "Full speed ahead." The incidents of the voyage out are amusingly told, but such things bear a wonderful resemblance to each other. At 8 o'clock on the morning of April 2, the ship anchored at Durban, and great was the anxiety on board for intelligence. It was far from satisfactory. Moriarty's death, and the loss of his detachment on the Intombie River, far in the north, and the departure of the relief column for Etshowe, were the principal items of news. But now the order was passed to disembark, and all gloomy thoughts were dispelled. The author gives a very amusing description of the landing, and the scene at the "Point," and the incidents of the march forward, which should by no means be skipped by the impatient reader. It became clear at once that neither the soldiers nor the war was popular with the colonists. There was no cheering of any kind, with the exception of an outburst from a school of small, white children who turned out to see the soldiers pass. As the author observes, the colonists were unanimous in believing that England got them into the mess, and more unanimous in determining that they should take them out of it. The sentiment that seemed to rule among the colonists was that as soon as Cetewayo was fairly kicked out, annexation would follow, and every one's fortune be made. Great, therefore, was the indignation when the telegram arrived, stating that England would make her own terms with the Zulus, which would be especially directed against annexation. In Durban itself everything was bustle, noise, and confusion, the sleepy little town had woke up to find itself famous. Then came Isandlwana, and panic. A defence committee was formed, barricades erected, and every preparation made to stand a siege, and drive back the Zulus, who might arrive at any moment. Two months of anxiety had passed when the Pretoria steamed into the harbour with the first of the long-expected reinforcements, the 91st and 60th; shortly after followed the 21st, the 94th, and the 58th, the interval being filled up by Artillery and Engineers. Lastly arrived the much believed-in Cavalry,—the King's Dragoon Guards and the 17th Lancers, with the horses as bright and well as if they had not been a day from Aldershot, so bright and so well, indeed, that they elicited from the people a cheer, which was not vouchsafed to their owners. The description of "Society at Durban" is written with great spirit, and with more than a soupçon of a sense of the ridiculous. Some of the "rules," a code of which was published, are highly amusing, and should be studied carefully. Then comes the advance to the front—the first scare—what Cape waggons are, and the art of "laagering." The opening of Chapter 7 contains an interesting description of the regiment of Natal Native Contingent:—

> "Imagine 700 naked savages, in companies of 100 each, their only clothing the tiny kilt of fur, perhaps a plume of ostrich-feathers on their head, or a strip of leopard-skin round the forehead. Many dress their hair in strange fashions, divided like waves of the sea, twisted into points, or peaked into a central ridge like a cock's-comb; all carry an oval shield of black-and-white cowhide, four assegais, and a knob-kerri; some few have muskets; amongst them stalk giants, their bodies glistening with oil full seven feet high, true sons of Anak, magnificently built and proportioned. Many more are upwards of six feet in stature, and are models of symmetry and manly grace. Each company advances, brandishing shields and assegais aloft to some native tune in most perfect time. Their eyes roll, and they give out the war-song with startling energy and ferocity as they pass."

Helpmakaar ("Help my cart up") is next described, distant only twelve miles from Rorke's Drift. The author's first view of Zululand was not a cheering one. There it lay, beyond the deep valley at the bottom of which runs the Buffalo, dry and forbidding; no sign of life; no moving thing, no cattle; no smoke in the villages; opposite the river lies a slope, "Fugitives' Drift," at the bottom of which Melville and Coghill fell, and there stands the monument erected to their memories by their comrades. And yet not long before that silent hill was thronged with fugitives running for their lives, the cruel foe following; but now no living being was within sight:—

> "In the uninviting country across the valley some few miles away rises a small hill, standing alone, and just joined to the mountain range on the left by a low neck. A cloud is over it just now, and it stands out from the rest black and ominous. The glasses show little dots over the low land which led to it, otherwise there was nothing but dark rock and dry plain; and this was Isandlwana! Some way to the left, on the hills, was the spot where the Zulu army formed up in sight of the camp previous to the attack. The little dots were the deserted waggons, yet unclaimed. Ten miles or more to the right lay a range of high mountains, amongst which Lord Chelmsford's force was during the fatal day."

Camp life appears to have been thoroughly dull work, but at length the order came to bring the 94th Regiment some thirty miles nearer to the front, the object being the occupation of Conference Hill as a base of operations. Captain Montague gives an elaborate account of the second "scare" that took place. The particulars are curious, and it becomes easy to see that General Funk must have been in the camp at the time. His observations on the miseries of outpost duty deserve attention, and still more his distinct approval of flogging in the Army:—

> "The cases of good men being flogged are so rare as to be almost unknown, and it may be asserted as true that there is no spectacle which an officer dislikes more; and yet there is hardly an officer in the Army who would vote for its abolition."

The author's laughable description of "scare" number three (p. 128) will enable his readers to form a pretty accurate idea of the description of men who served to form her Majesty's army in South Africa during that momentous time. Their "form" can only be described by the words "abject terror." About the period of this memorable scare, Lord Chelmsford paid the camp a visit, accompanied by the Prince Imperial and General Wood, but met with little enthusiasm:—

> "He often wore mufti, and from under a rather low white helmet his anxious face peered out. His manner was rather pleasant, though his sentences were sharp and jerky; he gave one the idea of a man preoccupied under a spell, and glad to get rid of his thoughts by constant attention to details. The sad day of Isandlwana had left its traces plainly marked on his face and manner. Later on, just previous to Ulundi, his face was deadly pale, and he spoke but little, seeming to be absorbed in the unknown results of the next few hours. During the battle he gave his orders calmly and firmly, and on all sides praises of his manner during the fight were heard. When the day was won, he seemed like a man relieved from a burdensome load; his manner brightened, and he chatted kindly with all around him."

The Prince Imperial gave the author the idea of a small-sized young man, with a sallow face. His manner was pleasant and open, and he was perpetually asking questions the most minute, noting the answers carefully into a book after each was given him. That he was brave and bold, there was no mistake, though "rashness" would have been, in English eyes, the better term for his wish to accompany every reconnoitring party towards the front. The reader will also find, photographed by the author, General Wood, General Buller, "Bill Beresford," Colonel Harrison, and Captain Carey, "the youngest of the men, with a square figure, and bushy, black whiskers." Captain Montague does not go into the details of that case, probably because it was sub judice at the time. Conference Hill, being the chosen base of the centre column on its advance against the King's Kraal, became a place of considerable importance, and also a formidable position. Visitors were in abundance, from Generals down to newspaper correspondents, who were regarded as an "infliction." The tenth chapter of Captain Montague's book will probably prove one of the most interesting. It narrates the death of the Prince Imperial. In a few rapid sentences, the writer draws a vivid picture of this untoward event:—

> "We had settled down, as well as was possible amongst all our discomforts, and were sitting outside our tents before night fell, talking much, wondering much, and anticipating everything or anything, when of a sudden arose one of those undefined rumours of ill coming,—no one knew whence, no one knew how. Laughter was hushed, and men's tongues stopped, as their owners wandered from tent to tent, seeking out the cause; and as the news leaked out, and it was whispered that the Prince had been killed in a kraal hard by, fighting hard, it was plain to all that a great calamity had happened."

The news had been brought in by a few irregulars, who did not show much excitement, but at once having told their tale in a few words, took off their pouches and thick boots, and commenced to prepare their supper. The story told was a simple one. The party had been suddenly fired at and had bolted, leaving behind the Prince and two comrades. The men who told this tale had been similarly placed on former occasions, and when fired on had been withdrawn by their commander. Early on the following morning a squadron of the 17th Lancers rode to search for the body:—

> "Riding towards a kraal, the Lancers were halted, and the officers rode on to a slight depression, which hid each horseman as he approached it. A shout in front, and we found a trooper standing in the hollow, which was a worn and grass-grown 'donga.' Beside him lay a white object, stark and stiff; beyond, a little lower down, a second; and lower down still, a third; the body of the Prince, staring at the sky, surrounded by the poor fellows who had died with him."

Although it soon became known that what remained of Napoleon was to be sent as soon as possible to England, a military funeral on the spot was given, as a token of respect. A graphic description of this will be found in the tenth chapter. After many delays and disappointments, "Ulundi" came at last. We ourselves have spent so much space in reaching it that we must be content to refer our readers to Captain Montague's volume. In it they will find a masterly description of what occurred, accompanied by expressions of his own opinion on matters of considerable interest. It is clear that in his view Lord Chelmsford was unjustly blamed for the extreme caution he displayed before the battle of Ulundi; but the nature of the war he was waging, and the enormous stake that was at issue, may well be accepted as his justification. One of the most remarkable features in the battle of Ulundi was the confidence with which the attack was made:—

> "The men moved with the utmost deliberation till our square was surrounded; mules and ponies ready saddled were provided for the pursuit; the women begged to be allowed to stop, as they had heard so much of the red soldiers, and wanted to see them. Everything pointed to an expected easy victory. But our laager was too strong for them; it was sheltered by a steel shield, off which they saw their bullets drop like rainfall.

Many highly interesting topics are referred to in the succeeding chapters, probably the most interesting being "A Visit to Isandlwana," the capture of Cetewayo, and the disaster on the Intombie. We now very reluctantly part company with Captain Montague's spirited sketch of his campaign in South Africa. It would be difficult to find a volume treating of a similar subject so free from bias or ill-natured criticisms. From first to last, the author's desire seems to have been to do all honour to those to whom it was due, as well as to point leniently, but firmly, to the grave errors of commission and omission which occurred during the progress of a campaign that was fraught with exceptional difficulties.

Obituary.

We regret having to record the death, in his fifty-second year, of Vice-Admiral Rowley Lambert, C.B., which occurred on July 22, after a long and painful illness of several months, contracted by fevers. The late Admiral Lambert entered the Navy in 1840 as a first-class volunteer at the early age of 12 years, and served as midshipman on board H.M.'s ships Vernon, Formidable, Queen, and Collingwood, under Capts. W. Walpole, Charles Sullivan, Henry Eden, and Robert Smart. From the latter ship he passed, in 1847, for his lieutenancy, and served in that rank on board the Salamander and Sphinx in the East Indies, after having previously been appointed to the President, under Capt. Sir Richard Dundas, on the Mediterranean station. From the Sphinx, he served as lieutenant of the Fox and Sphinx during the war in Burmah in 1851-3, and on the advancement of his father, Sir George Lambert, from commodore of 2nd class to commodore of 1st class, and to be second-in-command of the squadron in the East Indies, Lieut. Lambert was promoted to commander, vice Tarleton, promoted to be captain of the Fox. Com. Lambert returned to England in the Fox in April, 1853, and after being paid off from that ship, was appointed to the Curlew, and joined the Black Sea Fleet, with which he served during the Crimean war, under Admiral Sir Edmund Lyons, till Sept. 1855. He rendered most important services in the Sea of Azov and Yenikale, and was promoted to post-captain for his services at the age of 27. He afterwards obtained a year's leave from the Admiralty, and proceeded with his friend, Capt. Sherard Osborne, in the Furious, to China, with a convoy of gunboats. He left at Singapore on hearing of the Indian Mutiny, and was employed at the taking of Cawnpore, where he headed a party of volunteers to recapture two guns from the enemy, and rendered important service. He was present also at the advance on and capture of Lucknow, after which he was obliged to quit the field and return to England for the recovery of his health. In 1859 he was appointed to the Scylla, on the Mediterranean station, and was actively employed in observing the operations directed by Garibaldi in Italy. He remained on that station till 1863, when he returned home, and paid off the Scylla, having previously been instrumental in saving the lives of Otho, the King of Greece, and his Queen, whom he conveyed from Athens to Venice after the Greek Revolution. In 1863, he commissioned the Liverpool, frigate, in which ship he served in the Channel Squadron, under Rear-Admiral Sir Sydney Dacres, and afterwards on the West Indies station, under Vice-Admiral Sir Alexander Milne. On return home from the West Indies, in 1866, he remained on shore till June, 1867, when he was appointed commodore, and hoisted his broad pennant in H.M.S. Challenger, on the Australian station. He was made aide-de-camp to the Queen. During this command, H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh visited the station in the Galatea, and upon the first occasion, an attempt was made upon his Royal Highness's life by an assassin at Clontarff, near Sydney. In February, 1871, Comdre. Lambert, after returning home through Torres Straits, paid off the Challenger, and was not again employed before his promotion to rear-admiral, in August, 1873. In June, 1875, he was appointed to the command of the Detached Squadron. He hoisted his flag in the Narcissus, and proceeded round the Cape to the East Indies, to escort H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, on arrival at Bombay, previous to the departure of his Royal Highness from India. The Detached Squadron visited Ceylon, Madras, and Calcutta, returning thence to Bombay; and when the war broke out in Perak, the Squadron, which had been under orders for home, proceeded to the Straits of Malacca until the restoration of peace, when it was sent to China as a demonstration during the negotiations resulting from the Margary murder. In June 1877, the Detached Squadron, under Rear-Admiral R. Lambert, returned to England, and the ships were paid off. He obtained the rank of vice-admiral in 1878. The deceased officer had served forty years, of which his whole service was in sea-going ships. Orders—Companion of the Bath, Chevalier Legion of Honour, the Medjidie; Burmah, with clasp Pegu; Crimea, with clasps Sebastopol and Azov; Indian Mutiny; and Turkish medal. This able and excellent officer was the fifth son of Admiral Sir George Robert Lambert, G.C.B. He was deservedly esteemed throughout the Service, and has left behind a large circle of sorrowing friends and relatives. The blank he has caused in the neighbourhood of his residence, at Thames Ditton, will be long and sincerely lamented, and the Navy loses a name which for over a hundred years has ever been found on its List.

Vice-Admiral Frederick Lamport Barnard, who died from heart-disease on Wednesday, was the eldest son of the late Rear-Admiral Edward Barnard, and was born in 1813. Entering the Navy in 1827 as a first-class volunteer in the Revenge, he was employed at the home station, and subsequently in various ships he served at the Cape of Good Hope, Lisbon, North America, and the West Indies. In 1851 he was appointed commander of the Leander, and subsequently occupied the position of senior officer at Buenos Ayres. He was promoted to the rank of captain in 1855, became a rear-admiral on the Retired List in 1874, and was promoted to the rank of vice-admiral in 1879.

COMMISSARIAT AND TRANSPORT STAFF.

"Retired" writes:—"A few months ago, when, after weary years of waiting, the unfortunate Commissariat Department emerged from its chronic state of reorganisation, and was handed over to the Horse Guards, it was hoped that better treatment was in store for it, and for its hard-working and well-conducted corps, at the hands of General officers commanding. Whilst the department was under the War Office, the corps was snubbed in every possible way by the Generals, and everything was done to make the non-commissioned officers and men think they were not soldiers. At Woolwich, where the corps numbers about 500 men and 300 horses, Major-Gen. Turner inspected it last summer in the stable-yard, the men on foot parade, and the horses unharnessed in their stables. I was present on that occasion, and know what the feelings of the men were at this ignominious treatment. I am told that the same thing has taken place again this summer, though the corps is under the Horse Guards, and is supposed to be 'Somebody's child.' The non-commissioned officers and men have very hard work, especially the drivers, who are usually out from 8 a.m. to 5.30 or 6 p.m., and then have to clean a pair of horses and a double set of harness, as well as their own accoutrements. Notwithstanding this, their horses are as well cared for, and their harness as well put up, as in any corps in the Service. In Feb., 1879, when called upon to suddenly embark for Natal. the strong detachment we despatched from Woolwich elicited the warm commendation of H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief, for its soldier-like qualities and smartness in getting itself, horses, mules, wagons, and equipment on board ship. There were no absentees, and none drunk. I think a corps that can turn out as this does when required, notwithstanding its hard work, and whose non-commissioned officers and men set so bright an example of good behaviour, is worthy of better treatment than that I have described, and deserves that some consideration should be shown to its feelings."

"THE FIELD EXERCISE."

"Canary" writes:—"Could you spare space in your next issue to notice two errors, as far as I can understand, in the Field Exercise for 1877, I should feel greatly obliged. On p. 93 may be read, under 'Signals,' the following instruction:—'The rifle, or sword, being held up perpendicularly, with the head-dress on it, will indicate that no enemy is in sight.' Turn to p. 321, and there we are taught that 'Signals, such as raising the rifle with a cap on it, to show that the enemy is advancing, &c., should be established.' I presume a cap is a head-dress, and if so, the signals seem to me somewhat contradictory. Again, on p. 158, the battalion caution is 'Retire in column of double companies in rear of the centre;' and on p. 268, the brigade caution for a similar battalion movement reads, 'Retire in columns of double companies from both flanks in rear of the centres of battalions.' Are the words I have underlined necessary in the brigade caution?"

Amusements.

Although the patrons of the ROYALTY THEATRE are not, as a rule, disposed to be sternly critical, they expect to be amused, and to have some vague idea of the story amusing them. Unfortunately, the new farcical comedy in three acts, called "Parlours," is neither very comic nor comprehensible. Mr. and Mrs. Snapperley, represented by Mr. Charles Sugden and Miss Kate Lawler, are a young married couple living in a boarding-house at Richmond, and much addicted to matrimonial bickerings. Mr. Goodman Muffitt, played by Mr. Edward Righton, is a fussy, good-natured, old gentleman, who, living in the parlours of the same establishment, desires to be a peacemaker. His well-meant interference only makes matters worse, and in the end, he is accredited with all the mischief he intended to avert. Considerable disapproval of the piece, which is a mere string of inconsequential absurdities, was expressed on the first night, and repetition of the performance has not caused the adverse verdict to be called in question.

"The Merchant of Venice" was played on Wednesday evening at the LYCEUM for the 250th and last time this season, being the longest consecutive run a Shakespearian play has ever attained. The season, which has been highly successful, terminates this (Saturday) evening with Mr. Henry Irving's annual benefit. "Charles the First" forms the prominent feature of a very attractive programme. Every available seat has been long secured.

The "Moore and Burgess Mintrels," who have so long enjoyed the distinctive peculiarity of never performing out of London, are now on a short provincial tour. The San Francisco Minstrels occupy the ST. JAMES'S HALL until the return of the popular troupe.

The COVENT GARDEN Promenade Concerts will be commenced this evening under the management of Messrs. A. and S. Gatti, and the musical direction of Mr. Frederick H. Cowen. Each alternate Monday one of Beethoven's Symphonies will be performed, and on the intervening Mondays there will be selections from popular classical composers.

The autumn season at the HAYMARKET will commence on Monday next, the Bank Holiday, with Mr. Boucicault's new comedy, "A Bridal Tour." The piece, which is in three acts, will be supported by Mrs. John Wood, Mrs. Canninge, Miss Gerard, Miss Linda Dietz, Miss Winifred Emery, Miss Edith Bruce, Mrs. Alfred Mellon, Mr. H. B. Conway, Mr. Kemble, Mr. J. G. Graham, and Mr. H. Beckett, an American comedian, who here makes his first appearance in London.

DRURY LANE THEATRE will be reopened for the autumnal season this (Saturday) evening with a new sensational drama by Messrs. Paul Meritt, Henry Pettitt, and Augustus Harris, entited "The World."

Mr. Edward Sothern, the popular representative of Lord Dundreary, remains at Brighton, suffering from serious illness arising from a complication of disorders. He has been compelled to relinquish all his engagements, postpone his return to America, and take a prolonged rest.

A grand military spectacle, entitled "Ulundi," introducing events of the Zulu War, in which 250 children will take part, is to be given at LUSBY'S PALACE OF VARIETIES, Mile End Road, on the 12th prox., for the benefit of the workmen's national movement for the restoration of the sugar refining industries.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT & PILLS. —INDISPUTABLE REMEDIES—In the use of these medicaments there need be no hesitation or doubt of their cooling, healing, and purifying properties. The Ointment stands unrivalled for the facility it displays in relieving, healing, and thoroughly curing the most inveterate sores and ulcers, and in cases of bad legs and bad breasts, they act as a charm. The Pills are the most effectual remedy ever discovered for the cure of liver complaints, diseases most disastrous in their effects, deranging all the proper functions of the organs affected, inducing restlessness, melancholy, weariness, inability to sleep, and pain in the side, until the whole system is exhausted. These wonderful Pills, if taken according to the printed directions accompanying each box, strike at the root of the malady, stimulate the stomach and liver into a healthy action, and effect a complete cure.

THE IMPERIAL LIVE STOCK INSURANCE ASSOCIATION (Limited).
Established 1878. Capital, £50,000.
Issue of 10,000 Shares of £2 each, at a Premium of 6d per Share.
Payable 5s per Share and 6d per Share Premium on application, and 5s per Share on Allotment.

This Association was established in 1878 for the purpose of insuring horses, cattle, &c., against death from accident and disease. Already a profitable business has been done, and as the premium income is rapidly increasing, the Directors are desirous to further extend the business, and to enable them to do this, they have decided to increase the capital by an issue of 10,000 Shares of £2 each, at a premium of 6d per Share, for which applications are now invited.

The Dividend for 1879 was 5 per cent., and the interim Dividend for the past half-year, 6 per cent., but as the business increases, much higher dividends may confidently be expected.

No promotion-money has been paid, either in cash or shares, and no agreements have been entered into.

H. ST. GEORGE WILKINSON & CO.

Have received large Shipments of well-matured

AUSTRALIAN WINES,

were awarded in Australia, and at Vienna and Paris.

These Wines are strongly recommended by several of the leading medical men, both in London and the Provinces. They are free from any added alcohol (which makes other wines so injurious to health), and are a sure cure for Gout and Rheumatism.

In the leading cities of Australia, and also in the country districts, the greater part of the Hospitals and other sanitary institutions use the Australian Wines, almost to the entire exclusion of Port, Sherry, and other foreign wines.

In introducing these Wines, MESSRS. WILKINSON and Co. have placed the prices as low as possible, so as to be within the means of all classes.

Prices range from 16s to 60s per dozen, delivered free of carriage at any railway station in Great Britain. Vide Circulars, posted free on application. Samples sent free.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' 'Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

ZOEDONE. — OHNE PHOSPHOR,

KEIN GEDANKE.—There has long been a desire to obtain a sparkling and agreeable beverage combining sustaining and invigorating qualities without intoxicating effects. This want is now, in every respect, supplied by

ZOEDONE, a non-alcoholic nutrient Tonic Beverage, which will be found invaluable in all cases of mental or physical strain, while its refreshing properties and pleasant flavour render it a delicious drink for daily use.

ZOEDONE is recommended by the Faculty. Dr. Simpson says:—"Zoedone contains two of the most important elements of the human organism, viz., phosphorus and iron, in a state easily assimilable, supplying exactly what is required where any extraordinary waste of tissue has been induced—a condition too common in this competitive age."

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A magazine which is not only an honour to the Services that patronise it, but also to the literature of the country."—Standard.

"'Colburn's United Service Magazine' is always a welcome visitor. Its numbers contain an absolute redundancy of able and important articles, the value of which is not merely confined to any peculiar distinctive interest that military and naval men may attach to them. Independent of its attractions to the two Services, there is a mass of sterling reading which no class of intelligent persons will fail to appreciate."—Morning Post.

"This is confessedly one of the ablest and most attractive periodicals of which the British Press can boast, presenting a wide field of entertainment, to the general as well as the professional reader. The suggestions for the benefit of the two Services are numerous, and distinguished by vigour of sense, acute and practical observation, an ardent love of discipline, tempered by a high sense of justice, honour, humanity, and a tender regard for the welfare and personal comfort of our soldiers and seamen."—Globe.

"Many of its articles will be found interesting to other than those immediately connected with the Services."—The Times.

"'Colburn's United Service Magazine' cannot be glanced over and laid down in an hour. Its papers are of such interest, and written by such competent men, that one would rather take one's time over its contents. We are glad to know that this Magazine is so well appreciated by the Services, and that its papers are interesting to many and doing so much good."—United Service Gazette.

A CONTEMPORARY some short time ago published a petition, which was to be presented to Parliament, in which a perfectly legitimate prayer was addressed to the House of Commons, accompanied by and based upon statements which, to say the least of them, were partial and misleading. It is quite right that public Departments should be subjected to public scrutiny, but they are also entitled to public protection and respect, till it be proved they are undeserving of either. Our contemporary had, no doubt, reasons for publishing a document to which was appended the names of some eminent workers in metal and men of science, and of others known in connection with artillery questions, either practically or theoretically. We have no reason whatever to take any side, one way or the other, except that which is based on the desire to see fair-play, and to have our batteries and our ships provided with the best guns that can be made. The War Office, the Woolwich Gun Factory, Elswick, Sir F. Campbell, Captain Noble, &c., are no more to us than so many establishments and so many persons engaged in providing or making guns. The Army and Navy Gazette derives no advantage whatever from either its advocacy or opposition, in the case of any one of them, or in the case of any other person or thing connected or unconnected with the War Office or the Admiralty, in the course it has followed, and will continue, to follow on the Gunnery question. Many years ago indeed, and at the very outset of the extraordinary career which, starting with the condemnation of the breech-loading system because there were defects in breech-loaders, led the country with a fanaticism almost ferocious back into the narrowest impasse of Woolwich Toryism in ordnance, we entered our protest against the policy of which we perceive with pleasure the compulsory abandonment; and for years single-handed, as far as the Press was concerned, we urged the Authorities to reconsider their fatal determination. The twists and turnings of Woolwich in gunnery and gun-making, more rapid, various, and perplexing than the twists and turns of the multifarious cannon which were made there, or suggested by the crowd of inventors who came hot-foot in the steps of Sir W. Armstrong, had previously inspired us with some distrust of the sagacity of Woolwich. Within this generation, Woolwich saw its pet pieces—howitzers and 9-pounders—beaten by the French artillerists in peaceful rivalry in the Crimea, and was sick at heart. When Sir W. Armstrong introduced his breech-loaders, Woolwich threw herself into his arms with effusion, and declared that the new guns were the best in the world. Then came trials in Sir Hope Grant's campaign and doubts, just as the French, abandoning their bicornes and Napoleon guns, adopted and used with effect against the Austrians in Italy their muzzle-loading system of rifled guns with studded projectiles. Filled with suspicion of the breech-loader because of the results accorded from China, and harassed by the opposition of the Navy, which demanded the dismissal of the Armstrong gun, Woolwich went in for the muzzle-loader and the studded projectile, and adhered to these with desperate tenacity, in the coiled guns built on Sir W. Armstrong's principle. The inventors, including such great mechanics as Sir J. Whitworth, who had obtained very remarkable results with his bolt guns, Mr. Britten, Mr. Thomas, and Sir W. Palliser, who has established his claims to consideration as a most ingenious and indefatigable artillerist, and others, animated by these changes, developed a surprising activity in pressing on the public and on the Authorities the merits of their various systems. One great artillery bubble burst in the American war, with the Blakeley guns; but there were ardent believers, as many know to their cost, in the virtue of that system. There was a great propaganda. The cemetery at Woolwich, where all sorts of tortured fragments attest the explosive power of gunpowder and the cruelty of experiment in destroying the works of faith, was furnished daily with fresh specimens of shattered theories. The Ordnance Select Committee had a heavy time of it. Captain Scott's ingenious adaptations of the French gun-carriages, and later, Moncrieff's exceedingly interesting and attractive utilisation of the recoil, and many other less deserving "notions," were inquired into and tested; whilst the Gun Factory were engaged in the series of experiments, continued year after year, which were worked out at Shoeburyness in the battle of the Plates and the Guns, and which have given artillery science such an immense body of data, at a vast expenditure to the country. The general result was that Woolwich hardened into the belief in its modification of the Armstrong gun—the "Campbell-Fraser modification," as it may be called—though professing to have no bigotry, and to be quite ready to make breech-loaders, if so ordered. The great national establishment of Krupp, and the experiments in France, Austria, and Russia, and, indeed, in the United States, showed that there were other systems which produced results equal to those of our Royal manufacture; and then came the war of 1870, wherein the Prussian breech-loaders and percussion shells completely crushed the French muzzle-loaders and the studded projectiles with time fuses. The French, as soon as they could, began to arm their field and other batteries with breech-loaders. Every great military Power adopted them. Woolwich and the Artillery Department at the War Office fought hard, and for a long time resisted a return to breech-loaders; but the Navy demanded them for their turrets at last, and the voice of scientific and unprejudiced artillery officers, who had all along gone with us in our efforts, began to be heard above the din of the Royal Factories. All this time, the inventors kept "pegging away" at the Authorities, aided, in some cases, by the Times. Our contemporary, indeed, displayed a most extraordinary enthusiasm at one time for the Whitworth gun; but it has lately died out, in some vapid invective against the War Office for not listening to what the leading journal calls "the metallurgists," although its influence may be traced in the way in which Sir W. Armstrong, the great rival of Sir Joseph, is treated in its columns. As the inventors could only agree in one thing—hatred of Elswick and its works, and animosity to Woolwich—it was not very difficult to get out of the range of their projectiles, and to put up a shield against their artillery; and a squib in the Army and Navy Gazette, which represented Colonel Stanley in counsel with the eminent metallurgists, was not an exaggeration of the situation of the Gunnery question, or of the position in which any War Minister would be placed, who called in these gentlemen to his assistance in deciding on a system of artillery, would be placed. Many of the inventors are theorists, who desire to force the Government to test their theories at the national expense. Others are men who have spent large sums of money of their own, or others, in experiments of doubtful success; but men like Whitworth and Palliser have unquestionably obtained results of a practical kind, and occupy positions which entitle them to respectful attention, though not to the absolute submission of the War Office to their demands. Under all the circumstances, it would, perhaps, be the most satisfactory course if the Government were to constitute a body something like the Ordnance Select Committee, which it was a mistake to abolish, and have a tribunal of high professional excellence to act as examiners and advisers for the War Office. The attempt to deprive artillery officers of a voice in artillery matters is, of course, to be resisted; but as a mere buffer between the War Office and the inventors and metallurgists a practical judicial body would be eminently useful,—and it would be as well if its members had no interest in any system of ordnance or in any invention. The outcry against Woolwich will only be justified when it shows it is obstructive, costly, and inefficient. It would be preposterous to do away with a national establishment of the sort. It is stated, without hesitation or qualification, by the many gentlemen who are dissatisfied with the course of successive Governments in their attitude towards the "inventors and metallurgists," that Sir W. Armstrong's firm enjoys exceptional favour, and almost a monopoly of Government orders, owing to the partiality of Sir F. Campbell for Elswick and its works. But Sir W. Armstrong has had, he thinks, very great difficulty in securing for the results of his experiments any proper consideration from the War Office. It is more than ten years ago since he offered the Government a 7-in. breech-loader on trial, but his offer and his advice that the breech-loading system should be inquired into were disregarded. Three years ago, the 6-in. Armstrong breech-loader (77 cwt.), with a charge of 33 lb. and 70-lb. projectile, was offered to the War Office, but it was tried at Shoeburyness with hesitation, if not reluctance, in May, 1878; the trials there proved that it was capable of giving an initial velocity of 2,000 ft., and that it was superior in penetration to the 9-in. Service gun, of nearly three times the weight. Again, Elswick produced an 8-in. breech-loader and an 8-in. muzzle-loader in the same year, and offered them to the War Office for trial; but the War Office declined to try the breech-loader, and it was not till the end of 1879 that their prejudices were so far overcome that they agreed to give the breech-loader a trial. The muzzle-loader pierced a 16-in. plate, which gave a penetration equal to that of the 35-ton Service gun. On the completion of the trials of the 6-in. breech-loaders at Shoeburyness, the War Office gave Sir William Armstrong an order for three guns of the same description, and these were delivered to the Government in the early part of this year, and are now in the hands of the Committee on Ordnance, which has also been experimenting with two of the Elswick 8-in. breech-loaders, and obtained from them admirable results. It has been somewhat carelessly assumed that the results which have been obtained at Shoeburyness have been greatly excelled at Meppen and elsewhere. Herr Krupp, in his pamphlet of August, 1878, had only claimed velocities for his armour-piercing guns of 480 to 500 metres, whereas the Armstrong 8-in. guns had developed 2,200 ft.; but stimulated by the reports of the latter trial, he worked up to higher velocities, as he showed at Meppen, the success of which we do not depreciate or deny. A comparison of the Krupp 15-centimetre gun with the Armstrong 6-in. gun, with which it closely agrees, gives an average of 2,172 foot-tons for Krupp, and 2,362 foot-tons for Elswick. The charge for the first was 33·1 lb., the shot 112·5 lb.;

for the second, the charge was 37·5 lb., and the shot 82 lb. The 24-centimetre gun gave, as compared with the 8-in. Armstrong gun, 480 foot-tons energy per ton weight of gun, against 567·5 foot-tons. But without any further investigations of data, which may be safely left to artillerymen, let us consider what truth there is in the allegation that the War Office has favoured Sir W. Armstrong. The War Office has had the loan for trial of three 8-in., and one 6-in. guns (two field-guns and two mountain guns), and the results of all the Elswick trials, and it has in return given Elswick an order for just three 6-in. breech-loaders. There remains, however, one matter which the War Office has not explained, and that is the rejection of the offer made by Colonel Hope and Colonel Ripley, C.S.A.; but to establish any charge on that rejection, it should be shown that there was an actual, tangible proposal, based on something stronger than assertion. If the War Office can prove that there is no favouritism towards Elswick, the next point to be attended to lies under the contention that the making of ordnance ought to be thrown open to competition, and that Woolwich should be regarded as a mere branch establishment, with a set of sealed patterns to go by, and that the trial-ground at Shoeburyness should be made free to all inventors. We venture to assert that in no other country would similar pretensions be made or listened to for a moment.

The German ironclad squadron, under the command of Captain Sachs, has completed a series of interesting torpedo experiments, in the presence of the Crown Prince of Prussia. The vessel selected to be experimented upon was the old Barbarossa, a jackass frigate, which, from 1848 to 1850, was flagship in the Prussian Navy. The torpedo was discharged from the Zietken, a torpedo-vessel of 975 tons' displacement, 2,350 indicated horse-power, twin screws, schooner-rigged, and steaming about 16 knots an hour. This vessel is easily handled, and discharges her torpedoes below the water-line, and with her light draught and high speed she could run into an enemy's harbour at night and do much execution before being sunk or captured, should she not succeed in effecting her retreat. During last week's experiments she steamed up to within 500 yards of the old Barbarossa, and discharged her torpedo without slackening speed. Within fifteen seconds it took effect, exploding under the Barbarossa's bottom, in which a hole four yards square was afterwards found to have been made. The Barbarossa sank within seven minutes of the explosion, and thus ended the career of the last relic of the old Prussian Fleet. Experiments were then made with three Hotchkiss revolving cannon of 1½-in. calibre, recently purchased for experimental purposes by the German Admiralty, on the recommendation of the Director of Naval Ordnance, that only shell-firing machine guns should be seriously considered, and that all mitrailleuses firing small solid bullets should be rejected, as insufficient when set to repel torpedo-boat attacks. How this opinion has been proved to be at variance with fact was recently demonstrated at the competitive trials carried out at Spithead. In the Baltic, last week, the Hotchkiss cannon did not succeed in giving quite as good results as those recorded in its favour at Spithead, where, we understand, a Nordenfelt shell-firing gun of the same calibre as the Hotchkiss, but with twice its penetration, and exactly twice its maximum rapidity of fire, will be tried against model torpedo-boats in a few days. The Admiralty might also experiment with advantage with Whitehead, Lay, and other torpedoes, on one or more of our "unappropriated" ironclads, as the effect on the bottom of one of these would be instructive.

The Royal Marines were hoping but the other day, when the news of the Afghan reverse was received, that there was, perhaps, just a chance that the disappointment they had suffered in being sent out to the Cape only in time to be too late for active service, might lead the Government to entertain the idea of giving the gallant corps a chance of service in India. But, unfortunately, the Cabinet has decided that the Royal Marines shall be employed elsewhere, and that they shall be sent to Ireland, where troublous times seem to be anticipated. It may be, and, indeed, is, a compliment to the loyalty of the corps, that they should be chosen for duty where disaffection exists, and the fact of there being a smaller percentage of Irishmen in the Marines than in most Line regiments may have partly influenced the Government to select the Royal Marines for this duty. But there is no denying that such duty is the reverse of being popular, and although it is right that those in the Services should go whither they are ordered in an unquestioning spirit, the Marines cannot fail to feel that when they are borrowed for land service, they are most generally employed on some odd jobs, and are either sent out as pioneers to make things straight for the Regular Forces, as in Ashantee, or else are not despatched until too late to share in the honour of a campaign, as at the Cape. The battalion which is to be formed and placed under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Maskerry, of the Chatham Division, the senior Lieutenant-Colonel on the List, may be excused for feeling that they are being despatched on a kind of military police duty rather than as regular troops, and those who were in Ireland during the late Fenian disturbances know full well how trying and unpopular was the service upon which troops were then employed. Of this we may, however, feel assured, that although the Marines would have been grateful had the Government given the corps a better opportunity of coming to the front than in such unsatisfactory soldiering as Ireland is likely to afford, they will do their duty to the best of their ability, and will prove their unchangeable loyalty in the disaffected country to which they are destined to be despatched. According to information which reaches us from the Ports, officers and men have been detailed for the service, and are held in readiness for immediate embarkation for passage to Kinsale in the Assistance, Humber, and Wye, which last-named ship has suddenly had her orders for the West Indies and the Brazils suspended. The battalion will be about a thousand strong, each Division being drawn upon to provide its quota. Full particulars of the officers ordered on this service will be found in the regimental columns.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh has forwarded £50 and her Imperial and Royal Highness the Duchess of Edinburgh £25 to the Lord Mayor, in aid of the Atalanta (Mansion House) Relief Fund.

The combined Channel and Coastguard Squadrons, under the command of Vice-Admiral Hood, C.B., and Rear-Admirals Somerset and and H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, leave Vigo to-day on the passage home. On arrival in the Channel, the Reserve ships will part company for their respective stations, excepting the Lord Warden, which will call at Plymouth for orders. The Minotaur will proceed to Spithead, and the Agincourt, Northumberland, and Achilles to Plymouth, to give leave to their crews.

Captain the Hon. Walter Carpenter has, we hear, been selected for appointment as aide-de-camp to the Queen, vacated by the advancement of the Hon. William Ward to flag rank. Captain Carpenter served in the Baltic expedition of 1854, and was present at the operations against Sebastopol, and at the capture of Kertch, Yenikale, and Kinburn, and wears the Baltic, Crimean, and Turkish medals, and Sebastopol clasp.

The general court-martial ordered to assemble at Portsmouth on Serjeant Marsham, R.M.L.I., who is charged with fraudulent practices in connection with his duties as marker at the Wimbledon Meeting, is postponed until Friday next, to allow of the production of further evidence. Much excitement is felt at head-quarters as to the result of the trial, the Marines having for so long been connected with the Wimbledon Meeting, and having always received the highest commendations from the Association for the manner in which they performed their duties.

A Sailors' Rest has been opened at Gibraltar, and it is intended to conduct it after the model of Miss Weston's "Rest" at Devonport, which has proved a boon to the seamen of the Fleet and an admirable institution.

The German Director of Naval Yards is about to pay a visit of inspection to her Majesty's dockyards and naval establishments at Chatham, Sheerness, Portsmouth, Devonport, and Pembroke.

The number of Naval cadets who passed out of the Britannia at the recent examination is thirty-seven. We regret to hear that four young gentlemen proved failures, and will not again be received on board the training-ship, but will be removed from the list of Naval cadets.

Commander Walter Ogle, on the Retired List, has, we hear, applied for permission to accept an appointment which has been offered him by the Sultan of Zanzibar.

The grounding of the Iron Duke has not proved as serious a matter as might have been anticipated, and this may probably be partly accounted for from the fact of her steaming slowly, owing to the density of the fog at the time. With the assistance of the ships under the command of the Russian and the French Admirals who were in the vicinity, together with the help given by H.M.'s ships Modeste and Foxhound, which were despatched to the scene of the accident from Hakodate, the Iron Duke has got off her perilous position at Okosivi Island on Monday, and examination proved that she had not received any important damage. It may be well to state, in justice to the officers responsible for the navigation of the ship, that the chart of these waters is most imperfect, not a sounding of any kind being given in the vicinity of Okosivi. If their Lordships send her Majesty's ships to cruise in "the unsurveyed world," they must not be surprised at an occasional grounding.

Captain Purvis, of the Danae, appears to have had to perform the unpleasant duty of shelling a leading native village at Samoa, the last mail from Australia bringing news of this affair. The Danae had, however, left the scene, and was, by last accounts, at New Zealand; and according to a telegram since received from Samoa, quiet has been restored, and the rebels have given in, from which, it may be supposed, that the lesson given by the Danae has been effective.

It would appear desirable, in view of the unprotected condition of our Naval Depôt at Esquimault and the neighbouring coal-fields, on which, in war-time, our squadron in the Pacific would be chiefly dependent for its supply, that an armour-plated turret-ship should be stationed there, as has been done at Hong Kong and Bermuda.

It is rumoured that on the news reaching Constantinople that a strictly pacific Naval demonstration to overawe the Turk was in contemplation, Admiral Hobart proposed a strictly pacific gathering of the Turkish Fleet inshore of the Allied Fleet demonstrating off the coast, suggesting, at the same time, that his Majesty the Sultan should proceed to review his ships in the presence of the foreign vessels, which would thus be forced to salute the Turkish Flag with twenty-one guns. Such a proceeding would probably have caused a report to spread among the inhabitants of the coast that the superiority of the Turk had been acknowledged by the Giaour, and the coercive result of the demonstration would be nil.

We are glad to see Admiral the Right Hon. Sir J. C. Dalrymple Hay, Bart., C.B., F.R.S., D.C.L., once more returned to Parliament, as the Navy could ill afford to lose so faithful a champion.

A Navigating Officer's naval pension of £50 a year, vacant by the death of Retired Captain Richard Browne, has been awarded by the Admiralty to Retired Captain William Forbes.

The Trenton, flag-ship of Rear-Admiral Thornton, U.S.N., has been lying off the Nore during the past week, and visits have been exchanged between Admirals Thornton and Sir R. Macdonald, K.C.S.I.

We called attention last week to service by her Majesty's ships in the Red Sea, and alluded to the deaths on board the Himalaya and Woodlark on their outward passages to India. We now learn with regret that the Himalaya lost another officer, Paymaster John Cowley, on her passage home, thus making the third officer who died from heat on the passage of that ship to and from Bombay. The Himalaya is a far more roomy and airy ship than the small craft often doomed to long service in the Red Sea, and the fact of her having lost three officers in her two passages will give an idea of the sufferings of those who are long detained in such a climate.

Captain P. W. O'Connor, R.M.A., has been appointed Gunnery Instructor to the Artillery Division, which became vacant by the promotion of Major Derriman. There were a large number of applicants for this appointment.

The Inconstant is to be commissioned at Portsmouth by Captain C. Fitzgerald; the Cleopatra at Devonport by Captain Sir Lambton Loraine, Bart.; and the Kingfisher at Chatham by Commander Reginald Thornton.

Advices from Constantinople state that Blum Pasha, one of the Prussian officers in the employ of the Porte, declares his opinion that the Dardanelles and Bosphorus could not be forced by any number of ironclads without the most terrible loss. This officer adds that by sinking torpedoes and submarine mines the Straits might be rendered all but impregnable. A Turkish ironclad, accompanied by another war-vessel, left Constantinople on August 2 to cruise off the coast of Albania.

Commander John Bruce, of the Cormorant, has found it advisable for the honour of the Service to bring the editor of the Samoa Times to a sense of the fact that he must not write exactly what he may please about her Majesty's Navy. A recent number of the Times contained the following :—" H.B.M.'s ship Cormorant.—This vessel, which arrived in our harbour on Tuesday last from Auckland, took her departure for Savaii on Thursday morning, bound on some political mission. We understand that Malietoa, accompanied by the usual number of hangers-on, honoured her Majesty's ship by taking passage on board her to Savaii. England's Navy in the past has performed glorious and honourable acts, but the historians of this age will have to record that her Britannic Majesty's vessels in the South Pacific were mostly employed, during the latter part of the nineteenth century, in conveying from place to place as honoured guests, oiled savages (some of them claiming to be Kings !) and recently liberated felons." This was, however, quickly followed by the apology as under:—" SIR,—I regret to inform you that I am the author of the above libellous and malicious article; also that I am the acting editor of the Samoan Times. That it is totally untrue, and that I offer my most humble apologies to her Britannic Majesty's Navy for the insult contained therein.—ANDREW SPIERS. To Commander James Bruce, R.N."

The deaths of the following officers have been reported since June 20:—Captain Alfred Markham; Sub-Lieutenant Egerton B. Cleeve; Deputy-Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets John Elliott; Paymaster John K. Cowley; Engineer Thomas M'Intosh; and Carpenter John L. Mason. Royal Marine Light Infantry—Major-General John Henry Stewart.

According to the Politische Correspondenz, the Admiralty has called upon Admiral Hobart Pasha to relinquish the command of the Turkish Fleet, threatening to strike his name off the Navy List should that officer continue in the service of the Sublime Porte. Our contemporary is evidently unaware that the name of Captain the Hon. A. Hobart was removed from the Navy List during the Russo-Turkish war.

The Hon. F. H. E. J. Feilding and Mr. Crawford Maclachlan, having been unable to present themselves at the last examination for Naval cadetships on account of ill-health, have passed a special examination granted by the Admiralty.

Orders have been received at Chatham for the Superb to be brought forward for commission. She will probably relieve the Rupert in the Mediterranean.

We suggest to the Admiralty and to the Editor of the Navy List, the advisability of removing to the Harbour-Service List such useless hulks as the Albion, Aurora, Doris, Ariadne, Pearl, Scylla, Rattlesnake, Cameleon, Rosario, and that ancient armour-plated floating battery the Erebus. None of these ships, it is well known, will ever be commissioned again, and it is difficult to see what purpose can be attained by keeping them on the Effective List.

Owing to the amount of work required to complete the Nelson, fitting at Chatham Dockyard, a further delay of some months will occur before she is ready for commission. The Frolic, recently returned from China, is ordered to be paid off at Chatham to-day.

The corvette Bayan, and the clippers Fsadnik and Gaidamak, are being prepared at Cronstadt for service in the Mediterranean. It is stated that they will represent Russia in the projected naval demonstration against Turkey. The German gunboat Iltis, 4 guns, and the corvette Victoria, 11 guns, are also to be stationed in the Mediterranean.

The Espiègle, sister-ship to the Mutine, was launched on Tuesday at Devonport, the ceremony of naming being performed by Mrs. Curme, wife of the Admiral-Superintendent.

An experimental target, composed of wrought-iron, one inch thick, and backed with seven feet of coal, is to be made at Sheerness, at a cost of £290, for use at Shoeburyness. The target will be so constructed that the thickness of coal backing can be increased or diminished at pleasure, by the timber supports being compressed or extended, The test is to decide upon the applicability of coal as armour for armed cruisers.

Commander Price has done the Admiralty a service in giving the Department an opportunity of explaining its action with respect to the relief of widows of the Atalanta's crew. When the unfortunate Ellen Hathaway committed suicide, it was generally stated in the papers that she was driven to it, in consequence of the allotment of her husband having been stopped, and she being thus left without means. So far from that being the case, she was informed that she would be given the balance of her late husband's wages, £16, immediately on filling up a form which was sent to her, but which she never returned. £42 was also due to her, being the amount of a year's pay of her late husband, and relief from the Atalanta fund would also have been given to this unfortunate woman. It is, therefore, plain that want did not drive her to commit suicide.

A battery of the London Naval Artillery Volunteers are now cruising in the Channel in the gunboat Esk, which has been appropriated for this service for the month of August. The Volunteers arrived at Dartmouth on Wednesday, and will next visit Portland.

The action of the Engineers of the Navy in sending a deputation from the Ports to London to interview certain Members of Parliament, does not find favour in the eyes of the Admiralty. It is looked upon rather in the light of a combination of that nature which is forbidden in the Fleet; and so strongly did the First Lord of the Admiralty see the necessity for declining to give any encouragement to such tactics, that he also "respectfully declined" to receive a deputation of Members of Parliament, who intended to have acted as a "go-between." Any grievance an Engineer officer may have to make, should, the Members were informed, be forwarded through his superior officer to the Board, when it is promised "every proper consideration." The Engineers have, however, scored a point by the action they took, inasmuch as their elaborate report on their grievances has been placed in the hands of Lord Northbrook by a Liberal Member, and is thus likely to receive more attention than any letter forwarded by an individual engineer through his superior officer.

The French squadron which has been mustered at Cherbourg to do honour to the President of the Republic on his visit consists of six ironclads—the Colbert, Suffren, Friedland, Gauloise, Revanche, and Surveillante; four frigates, the Flore, Armorique, Résolue, and Favourite; three corvettes, Desaix, Hirondelle, and Coligny; and four smaller vessels, the Lionne, Crocodile, Moustique, and Halcyon. There will be a night attack by torpedo-boats on the squadron in the roads.

The death of General Sir John Bloomfield, G.C.B., causes no promotion in the Army.

General Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., commanding the Aldershot Division, has removed from his temporary residence at Farnborough to Aldershot Park, which we some time since stated he had rented.

Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., and the Hon. Lady Wood, and Captain Bigge, R.A., proceeded to Osborne on the 29th ult., on a visit to her Majesty, on return from the Cape.

We are glad to learn that General Sir William Knollys is now fast approaching convalescence. His illness has been of a severe character,—congestion of the lungs, followed by an erysipelatous throat and quinsey, the result, doubtless, of blood-poisoning. Mr. Oscar Clayton has attended him from the first, and Sir William Jenner was only called in to confirm Mr. Clayton's opinion that Sir W. Knollys must not think of returning to his duties this session.

It must be gratifying to the many friends of the Oxford Military College to know that at the recent competition for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, three of its students were among the successful candidates, one of them standing fifth on the list. This institution is doing most useful work in preparing lads for the Army.

Count Carolyi, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at the Court of St. James, is now taking the waters at Ems, on his way to his shooting quarters.

Herr Krupp has left Ems, where he has been taking the waters. He is said to have offered the English Government a complete cannon foundry, in which he would invest a capital of two millions sterling, provided they would adopt his system, but refuses to sell guns as samples to be copied.

One result of the recent summer manœuvres of the Russian troops at Krasno Selo is, we hear, the appointment of a commission, at the express desire of the Emperor, to decide upon the best means of reducing the weight borne by Russian infantry soldiers.

A correspondent, signing himself "Fiat Justitia," in a letter which we published lately, asked,—Why are officers retired on pension from the late Indian regiments not allowed to commute their pensions? We would ask the same question. In all other branches of the public service, this arrangement is permitted, and it would cost the State nothing to extend the privilege to the retired officers of the late Indian regiments. The only obstacle can be that there is no precedent. Very well, let one be made, for at present officers in the position of "Fiat Justitia" have a reason to feel aggrieved at the exceptional treatment which they receive.

The overflowing condition of the superior ranks in the Royal Regiment of Artillery may be seen now at its height at Woolwich, where the extraordinary number of two colonels and seven lieutenant-colonels are congregated with five service and two depôt batteries of Field Artillery.

It is far more important to know what is the actual state of affairs in Afghanistan and in India, in relation to the defeat of Burrows's Brigade, than to learn the exact details of the action in which Ayoub Khan gained such an unexpected victory, and it is just at this critical moment that the telegraph fails us. When all goes well, the railroad and the telegraph do their work with certainty. It is when one or both are most needed that they are likely to be interrupted, and the reliance which has been based upon them is rudely shattered, and the effect is all the more depressing, and the anxiety all the greater, because custom and use have made us dependent on them in ordinary times, and we come to regard them as in some sort natural agencies incapable of being broken. It is a comfort to reflect at this moment that the Governor of Bombay is one who has served as a soldier in active warfare, and that he has as military secretary a very energetic and excellent officer, so that we may rely on the military resources of the Presidency being turned to the best account in co-operation with the excellent officer who commands the troops and his staff.

A quiet, but very interesting, ceremony took place place on Wednesday in one of the large huts in Shorncliffe Camp. Major-General the Hon. R. Monck is about vacating his command, which he has held considerably longer than the usual period, and during this time Mrs. Monck has greatly interested herself in the welfare of the families of the soldiers of the command, and in doing so she has succeeded in enlisting the sympathies of various ladies connected with the camp, and much good has been the result of the co-operation thus organised. The kindly influence of Mrs. Monck has so made itself felt among those with whom she has been engaged in her philanthropic endeavours, that they resolved among themselves to give expression to their appreciation of her many good qualities by presenting her with a token of their regard, which took the form of an ivory card case with a silver monogram of her initials. She was invited to an afternoon tea by those concerned, which she attended, and the Rev. W. Ponsford, Chaplain to the Forces, by request, made the presentation.

The attention of the Surveyor-General of the Ordnance, who is popularly supposed to be the confidential adviser of the Government on military matters, might with advantage be directed to the unnecessary number of field-officers in the Artillery, and which the retirements in May last seem little to have affected. At Woolwich, with three service and one depôt battery R.H.A., and at Aldershot, with two service and one depôt battery, there are respectively one colonel and two lieutenant-colonels, while no employment can be found for two colonels R.H.A. and six colonels and one lieutenant-colonel of field and garrison artillery, who are, nevertheless, all receiving full pay.

The next examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, will commence in London on Thursday, November 25 next, the Medical examination taking place at the Academy on the previous day. Applications cannot be received unless made in strict accordance with paragraph 5 of the Regulations issued with G.O. 77, of 1880. The successful candidates will be required to join the Royal Military Academy about March 17 next.

We are glad to learn that Mr. W. R. Buck, late of the War Office, who recently took his retirement, has been appointed secretary of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society. Mr. Buck was for several years secretary to General Sir Edward Lugard, G.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State for War, and subsequently on the superintending staff of the Military Education Department; and was also well-known as having long been Lieutenant-Colonel of the 26th Kent (Royal Arsenal) Rifle Volunteers. The excellent society is much to be congratulated on having secured the services of a secretary possessed of such undoubted qualifications.

Would it not be possible for the War Office to arrange for an encampment of Volunteers on a large scale in the northern counties and Scotland? Some of the smartest and best Volunteer regiments in the Kingdom are to be found in Lancashire and Lanarkshire, yet Lanarkshire, owing to the long distance from Aldershot, is allowed to send no representatives there this year, whilst Lancashire is represented by the small number of 196,—196 out of 4,703. This is a very small proportion. Considering how much Lancashire has done to raise the reputation of the Volunteer Force, it might have been allowed to have supplied, at least, a battalion. A correspondent points out that "of the twenty-one Lancashire Rifle regiments, no less than nineteen are in red and green—thirteen are in red; of twenty-six London and Middlesex only fourteen are in red and green, whilst but three are in red. Lancashire, therefore, has incurred greater expense than Middlesex, with a view to meet the wishes of the authorities in the matter of the change of uniform, and for this alone Lancashire deserves credit and better treatment.

A Liverpool paper, the Daily Courier, has a short article on a subject which we consider of so much importance that we give our contemporary's remarks the prominence they deserve:—"Until about 25 years ago it was customary for cavalry detachments arriving in Liverpool from Ireland to remain there until the next day, the men and horses being billeted on licensed victuallers, &c. The billeting has now been practically abandoned, and in the case of infantry the men are marched direct to a railway station, en route to their destination, whilst cavalry and artillery march at once to Prescot and Warrington, where they remain until next day. It is well known that horses suffer from sea-sickness, and to carry the heavy loads that cavalry troop horses have to bear for eighteen miles immediately afrer landing from a steamer is a very severe strain on them. For the last 25 years or longer this system has continued, but for about 10 years the authorities have had the means of avoiding it without reverting to the billeting system, viz., by using the cavalry barracks at Rupert Lane (established in 1870) which might easily be arranged to be vacant at the time a regiment was passing through Liverpool, and of course the regiment should move in squadrons to suit the capacity of the Rupert Lane Barracks. Perhaps now that Sir Garnet Wolseley has become Quarter-master-General, there may be some change in the manner of transporting troops in this district. Two amongst other important facts as to this locality appear to be ignored at head-quarters. One is that Fleetwood is a seaport, and the other is that there are cavalry barracks in Liverpool."

The Stockholm Gymnastic and Fencing Club, who will perform at the Aldershot Gymnasium on Monday, consist of some thirty-five members, of whom ten are officers of the Guards, the Cavalry, and the Line. In another column will be found a letter from a Swedish officer, explaining the system of training adopted in Sweden.

The vacant jacket caused by the death of Major Blackwood at Khushk-i-Nakhud has been given to Major Tillard, 11th Brigade (late Bengal). Major Tillard distinguished himself greatly at Ahmed Khel, and was very favourably mentioned by Sir Donald Stewart in consequence. Major Tillard will be re-placed in the 11th Brigade by Major Swinton, who has just been promoted out of the Horse Artillery Depôt at Aldershot.

The Indian Government have requested that a large quantity of compressed vegetables may be sent out for the use of the troops in Afghanistan.

The following General Order confirms the announcement we were enabled to make some time ago as to the issue of a South-African war medal:—"The Queen has been graciously pleased to command that, in consideration of the arduous duties performed, and the successful conclusion of the operations referred to in the next paragraph, a medal be granted to her Majesty's Imperial forces, and to such of her Majesty's colonial forces, European or native, as were regularly organised and disciplined as combatants, whether raised by the Colonial Government or by the General Officer commanding. 2. The medal will be granted to the forces employed against—(a), The Galekas, Gaikas, and other Caffre tribes, from September 26, 1877, to June 28, 1878, inclusive; (b), against Pokwani, from January 21 to 28, 1878, inclusive; (c), against the Griquas, from April 24 to November 13, 1874, inclusive; (d), against the Zulus, from January 11 to September 1, 1879, inclusive; (e), against Secocoeni, from November 11 to December 2, 1879, and including the troops that were stationed at Fort Burghers, Fort Albert Edward, Seven Mile Post, Fort Oliphant, Fort Weeber, and in Secocoeni's Valley; (f), against Moirosi's stronghold. 3. He Majesty has also been pleased to approve of a clasp being attached to the same medal, on which will be indicated the year or years in which the recipients of the medal were engaged in the late wars, thus—For operations against the Galekas, &c., on clasp 1877-78; for operations against Pokwani and the Griquas, 1878; for operations in the Zulu and Secocoeni campaigns respectively, or both, 1879; for operations as specified in paragraph 2 in 1877-78-79, 1877-78-79; for operation, as specified in paragraph 2 in 1877-78-79, 1878-79—the principle being that the year or years of the clasp cover all the operations in which the recipient may have been engaged in such year or years. 4. Those troops employed in Natal from the 11th of January to September 1, 1879, but who never crossed the border into Zululand, will be granted the medal without clasp. 5. The medal will be that granted by her Majesty to commemorate the successful termination of previous wars in South Africa; and those officers, non-commissioned officers, and men who are already in possession of this medal will, if they have been engaged in the operations referred to in paragraph 2, receive the clasp with the year or years inscribed thereon, in accordance with paragraph 3."

The 5th, 6th, 7th, and 9th French Army Corps are preparing to take the field for the Autumn Manœuvres. The latter corps will be commanded by the Marquis de Galliffet, who handled a large force of cavalry with so much ability last autumn. Since that date the Marquis has been offered the command of the 6th Army Corps, which has its head-quarters at the Camp of Châlons, and which comprises two independent cavalry divisions; but it appears that he prefers remaining at Tours to shifting his quarters and replacing General Clinchant, who at present occupies the important post of Military Governor of Paris. It is anticipated that a large number of foreign officers will follow the manœuvres of the 9th Corps, which will be reinforced for the occasion. Although the Marquis de Galliffet is still unpopular with the Radicals, in consequence of the manner in which he dealt with the Communists, he has made great way with the body of the French nation, who recognise in him not only a dashing and brilliant soldier, but an officer who devotes himself heart and soul to the Service, and thinks of nothing else but his profession.

THE DISASTER IN AFGHANISTAN.

From the Viceroy, August 3:—"Following from Col. St. John, dated Candahar, July 29:—'Arrived here yesterday afternoon, with General Burrows and Nuttall, and remnant of force. Burrows marched from Kushk-i-Nakhud on the morning of the 27th, having heard from me that Ayoub's advanced guard had occupied Mainwaud, about three miles from latter place. Enemy's cavalry appeared advancing from direction of Hyderabad. Their camp on Helmand, ten miles above Girishk. Artillery and cavalry engaged them about nine a.m. Shortly afterwards the whole force of the enemy appeared and formed line of battle—seven regiments regulars in centre; three others in reserve; about 2,000 cavalry on right; 400 mounted men and 2,000 Ghazis and irregular infantry on left; other cavalry and irregulars in reserve; five or six batteries of guns, including one of breechloaders, distributed at intervals. Estimated total force, 12,000. Ground slightly undulating, enemy being best posted. Till one p.m. action confined to artillery fire, which was so well sustained and directed by enemy that our superior quality of armament failed to compensate for inferior number of guns. After development of rifle fire our breechloaders told, but vigorous advance of cavalry against our left and Ghazis along the front caused native infantry to fall back in confusion on 66th, abandoning two guns, formation being lost. Infantry retreated slowly, and in spite of the gallant efforts of Gen. Burrows to rally them, were cut off from cavalry and artillery. This was at three p.m., and followers and baggage were streaming away towards Candahar. After severe fight in enclosed ground, Gen. Burrows succeeded in extricating infantry, and brought them into line of retreat. Unfortunately, no efforts would turn fugitives from main road, waterless at this season. Thus majority of casualties appear to have occurred from men falling from thirst and exhaustion. Enemy's pursuit continued to ten miles from Candahar, but was not vigorous. Cavalry, artillery, and a few infantry reached banks of Argandab, 40 miles from scene of action, at 7 a.m., not having tasted water since previous morning. Nearly all ammunition lost, with 400 Martinis, 700 Sniders, and two nine-pounder guns. Estimated loss killed and missing:—66th, 400; Grenadiers, 350; Jacob's Rifles, 350; Artillery, 40; Sappers, 21; Cavalry, 60. Officers killed or missing:—Major Blackwood, Osborne, Macleod, Henn, Engineers; Galbraith, M'Math, Garratt, Cullen, Roberts, Rayner, Honeywood, Barr, Chute, 66th; Owen, 3rd Cavalry; Hinde, Whitby, Grenadiers; Smith, Justice, Cole, Jacob's Rifles. Wounded:—Powell, Artillery; Lynch, Preston, 66th; Anderson, Grant, Grenadiers; Irlett, Jacob's Rifles. Preparations are being now made for siege. Durani inhabitants expelled. Provisions and ammunition plentiful. Wali was present during action, and is now with us assisting actively."

From the Viceroy, August 3. Agent, Quetta, telegraphs, under date 2nd, that tribesmen reported collecting between Chaman and Candahar, and that Ayoub is said to have marched to Mir Karez, and to have detailed force for attack on Chaman. Some cavalry supposed to be moving in direction of Kakran for interception of supplies to Candahar. Gen. Stewart has returned to Cabul from Camp; Deh Haji, chief political officer, has had several interviews with Ameer, with whom are principal Ghilzai Chiefs, and representatives of Maidan, Logar, Kohistan, and other districts.

From the Viceroy, August 3. St. John reports following list of killed, missing, and wounded:—66th Foot.—Killed and missing: Lieut.-Col. Galbraith, Capts. Garratt, M'Math, Cullen, Roberts, Lieuts. Rayner, Chute, Honywood, Barr. Wounded: Surg.-Major Preston, Lieut. Lynch. Artillery.—Killed and missing: Major Blackwood, Lieuts. Osborne and Maclaine. Wounded: Lieut. Fowell. 3rd Light Infantry.—Killed: Lieut. Owen, 1st Native Infantry.—Killed and missing: Lieuts. Hinde, Whitby. Wounded: Lieut.-Col. Anderson, Capt. Grant. 30th Native Infantry.—Killed and missing: Capt. Smith, Lieuts. Justice and Cole. Wounded: Major Iredell. Staff.—Killed and missing: Brigade-Majors Capt. P. Heath, Lieut. Henn, R.E. Estimated casualties other ranks: 66th Foot, 400; Artillery, 40; Cavalry, 60; Sappers, 40; 1st Native Infantry, 350; 30th Native Infantry, 350. There is very little hope that those missing will have escaped. Aslett, 1st Native Infantry, reported killed in mine 29th July, is not named in this list. The reinforcements proceeding from Bombay and Bengal by the Bolan line for Candahar, and the communications are:—From Bengal: H, R.A., and another battery not named; 15th Hussars, 8th Bengal Cavalry, 63rd Foot, 3rd and 4th Native Infantry. From Bombay: 5-8 R.A.; Mountain Battery (just started from Poona), 78th Foot, 13th and 15th Native Infantry.

From Viceroy, Aug. 4, 1880. The following telegram has been received from Stewart:—Begins—The following force detailed to be in readiness for special service, under command of Sir F. Roberts:—Infantry division, under Major-Gen. Ross—First brigade: 92nd Foot, 2nd Ghoorkas, 23rd Pioneers, 24th N.I.; second brigade: 72nd Foot, 5th Ghoorkas, 2nd Sikhs, 3rd Sikhs; third brigade: 60th Rifles, 4th Ghoorkas, 15th Sikhs, 25th N.I. Cavalry brigade: Gough's 9th Lancers, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, 3rd Punjab Cavalry, Central India Horse. Artillery: 6-8th, 11-9th, No. 2 Mountain Battery, A-C joined. Ends.

From Viceroy, Aug. 5, 1880. Following from Sandeman, Quetta, dated Aug. 4. Begins—Messengers despatched for news of Ayoub's movements state that up to Aug. 1 his army was at Sangbar. The leaders were in perplexity, not knowing whether to advance or remain where they were. Ayoub's loss very heavy. Messengers say he had no hope of successfully attacking Candahar. I give this news as received. Doubtless there is truth in it. Ends. There has been some skirmishing with the tribes in the Khojak Pass, between Chaman and Killa Abdulla. Our parties have been frequently attacked. Telegraphic communication continues up to Killah Abdulla. A convoy was attacked on the 3rd near Dinar Karez by large body of tribesmen, who were beaten off with slight loss.

The division under Gen. Roberts marches from Cabul on Sunday to the relief of Candahar. The full details of the force under his command have not yet been made known, but the following troops are under orders to march:—The 60th, 72nd, and 92nd Regts.; the 9th Lancers; the 6-8 Royal Artillery; and No. 2 Mountain Battery. The retirement from Cabul will then follow, it not being considered expedient to prolong the occupation in the face of such heavy expenditure, and the possibility of the presence of the British occasioning fresh complications. Col. Wilkinson, chief Military secretary, leaves for the front in command of a brigade. At Cabul a second interview has taken place between Mr. Lepel Griffin and the Ameer. The Ameer is friendly, but is very nervous on account of the unsettled temper of his followers. Great precautions were taken at the interview, both sides distrusting each other. The Ameer expresses his readiness to abide by the advice of the British. The durbar will not be held, the Ameer's people being adverse to it. The new brigade raised for Candahar and the supports includes the following troops from Bengal:—1 R.A., 15th Hussars, 63rd Foot, 4th Bengal N.I., 8th Bengal N.I. Cavalry troops on line all on move upwards for Phayre's command: 2-11th Foot, 2-15th Foot, D-6 R.H.A., F-2 R.A., H-8 R.A., No. 2 Bombay Mountain Battery, 2nd Bombay Light Cavalry, 2nd Sind Horse, 1st Madras Light Cavalry, two companies Sappers, and Bombay N.I., 5th, 10th, 16th, 8th, 9th, and 27th on line, and at Quettah 24th Bombay N.I., 23rd Bombay N.I., 14-9 R.A., and 1st Sind Horse.

The Lahore correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs on Thursday:—"It is stated that Gen. Burrows knew that two thousand Ghazis were with Ayoub Khan. The Bombay troops were in the first line, the 66th in reserve. Ayoub Khan chose the ground before Gen. Burrows's advance. The young Afghan has studied European tactics. Advices state that when the Ghazis charged to within 200 yards the Bombay troops dropped their arms and bolted, breaking the formation of the 66th. A route ensued, each acting for himself. The majority were killed in trying to reach Candahar. Gen. Roberts has orders to pick up troops to 10,000, and to find and beat Ayoub. The latter will probably proceed to Ghuznee, and disregard Candahar. Fighting is expected daily, and a rising of the tribes. White, of the 92nd, rejoins the Cabul Force. Probably Watson advances from the Shutargardan."

The following details of the services and connections of the officers killed in action during the battle with Ayoub Khan's army are given by the Morning Advertiser. The losses in the 66th Regiment include the lieutenant-colonel, four captains, and four subalterns killed, with the doctor and junior lieutenant wounded. Lieut.-Col. J. Galbraith, commanding the 66th, has been in the regiment from a boy, joining it as an ensign at the close of 1851. He served with head-quarters in Canada, at Gibraltar; in the Madras Presidency, chiefly at Cannanore, from 1857 to 1865; at Aldershot, Jersey, and in Ireland, from 1866 to 1869; and in Bombay, from 1870 until the commencement of the present year, when he succeeded Col. Barclay in command of the regiment, and went with head-quarters to Quetta and Candahar. The deceased officer was a member of an old Irish family, and fifth son of the late S. Galbraith, Esq., of Clanabogan and Riverstown, county Tyrone, and of Crowdrumin, county Longford. He was in his 47th year.

Capt. E. S. Garratt joined the 66th as ensign, by purchase, in June, 1865; purchased his lieutenancy in July, 1867; and his company in May, 1870; and accompanied head-quarters from Ireland to Bombay in the spring of 1870. He had been employed on transport service in Southern Afghanistan, and was severely wounded by Pathans on May 7 last; recovering, however, sufficiently to rejoin his regiment after a short absence.

Capt. W. H. M'Math joined the regiment from Sandhurst in Aug. 1865; purchased his lieutenancy in 1868; and obtained his company in April, 1877. When serving at Belgaum he was severely mauled by a panther while shikareeing.

Capt. F. J. Cullen entered the Army in Feb. 1865, and served for five years in the 1st West India Regt. He exchanged in 1870 into the 66th, with a view to Indian service, and obtained promotion to his company in Oct. 1879.

Capt. W. Roberts was one of the victims of the Cardwellian reductions in 1870, when his regiment, the 3rd West India, was disbanded. He succeeded in obtaining a transfer into the 66th, and was adjutant of the regiment from July, 1877, until last November, when he was promoted to his company.

Lieut. M. E. Rayner joined the 66th as a sub-lieut. in Feb. 1875, and had recently been selected for the adjutancy.

Lieut. R. T. Chute was second son of the late Richard Chute, Esq., J.P., of Chute Hall, Tralee, County Kerry. He served in the Cavan Militia prior to joining the 66th as a 2nd lieut. in Oct. 1877, and was nephew of Gen. Sir Trevor Chute, K.C.B., who commanded our forces during the second part of the New Zealand war.

2nd Lieut. A. Honywood was the fourth son of the late Sir Courtenay Honywood, Bart., of Evington, Kent, and brother of the present baronet, Sir J. W. Honywood. He was born in Nov. 1860, and was only gazetted to the regiment from Sandhurst in August last, proceeding out to Bombay in January.

2nd Lieut. H. J. Outram Barr was son of Lieut.-Gen. H. J. Barr, Bombay S.C. He received an Indian cadetship on account of the services of his father, and passed from Sandhurst in January last, leaving England for Bombay in the spring of the year.

The battery of Royal Horse Artillery—E of B Brigade—which has been in India since February, 1873, suffered severely in the engagement with the enemy, losing its major, two subalterns, and 40 men, while a third subaltern was wounded.

Major G. F. Blackwood, who commanded the battery, was a Bombay officer, joining the Artillery of that Presidency in August, 1857, from Addiscombe. He served with a battery of Artillery in the Looshai campaign of 1872, and was gazetted to a brevet majority for his services on that occasion.

Lieut. H. Maclaine, R.H.A., was the eldest son of W. O. Maclaine, Esq., of Kyneton, Thornbury, Gloucestershire, and grandson of Col. H. Maclaine, who served with distinction in Lord Hill's division during the Peninsular war. Sir A. Maclaine, grand uncle of the deceased, distinguished himself in the Peninsula by his gallant defence of Fort Matagorda, near Cadiz, in 1810. Lieut. Maclaine was born in Nov. 1851, and received his commission from the Royal Military Academy, Jan. 6, 1872.

Lieut. E. G. Osborne, R.H.A., entered the Royal Artillery from Woolwich in Sept. 1873. He had served in the operations of 1878-79 as adjutant of the Kurum Column, and was at the capture of the Peiwar Kotal.

The native infantry regiments are stated to have lost one captain and four subalterns killed, and the 3rd Light Cavalry one subaltern, Lieut. W. C. Owen, who served in the 3rd Hussars prior to joining the Indian S.C., and had been in the Army since Dec. 1871.

Lieuts. C. W. Hinde and C. Whitby are returned in the list of officers killed. Both belonged to the 1st Bombay Grenadiers. The former officer entered the Service in Oct. 1871, and was in the 83rd Foot prior to entering the Staff Corps. Lieut. Whitby was attached to the 1st Grenadiers as a probationer for the Staff Corps, and is down in the Army List as a subaltern in the 17th Foot. He was a member of an old Staffordshire family, deriving its name from Whitby, in Yorkshire, and existing, according to local tradition, in the north of England at a date anterior to the Conquest.

Capt. H. F. Smith, Lieuts. W. C. Justice and D. Cole, were attached to the 30th N.I., better known as Jacob's Rifles. Capt. Smith served for several years in the Connaught Rangers prior to joining the Staff Corps, and had been in the Army since June, 1866. Lieut. Justice belonged formerly to the 17th Foot, and Lieut. Cole to the 83rd Regt. Lieut. Cole was transferred to Jacob's Rifles in March last from the 14th N.I.

The two staff officers killed were Capt. P. Heath, brigade-major, and Lieut. T. R. Henn, R.E. Capt. Heath had been in the Army since October, 1866, and served with the 45th Foot in the Abyssinian campaign, taking part in the capture of Magdala. He afterwards joined the Staff Corps, and accompanied Gens. Primrose and Burrows to Candahar in January last for Staff service. Lieut. Henn had served through last year's operations in Southern Afghanistan with the Sappers and Miners. He entered the Royal Engineers in July, 1869.

THE NATIONAL ARTILLERY MEETING.

The annual camp and prize-shooting of the Volunteer Artillery from various parts of the kingdom, which has been progressing this week at the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness, does not excite that amount of public interest which its undoubted national importance demands. In the first place, Shoebury is difficult of access, but even were it not, those who essayed the experiment of searching out the locale of the neat little camp enclosed with magnificent trees would find that they would not be allowed, as at Wimbledon, to roam about at their own sweet will there, much less to enter the marshes and batteries where the real business of the meeting is carried on. The fact is that neither the Volunteers, the National Artillery Association, nor the authorities entrusted with the affairs of the School of Gunnery, care for the presence of admiring thousands. It would seriously impede the object for which the Volunteers are allowed by a generous Government to go to Shoebury, viz., for practical instruction, and impart an appearance to the proceedings by no means desirable, From England, Scotland, and Wales all the detachments may be said to be thoroughly representative- and an excellent representation it is. No "Royal" would wish to have better material to work upon than the 800 officers, non-commissioned officers, and gunners who form the 1st Division. They are evidently picked men, with few exceptions of fine physique, and expert artillerists—that is to say, so far as their opportunities for practice permit them to be. In this respect some corps possess a decided advantage over others, those round the coast especially, who may be said to live next door to their battery, and practise every week. In London the opportunities of firing a few rounds from the Palliser or Armstrong are, on the contrary, few and far between, and but for the arrangements of the War Department, whereby the four regiments are enabled to put in an appearance at Sheerness on holiday occasions, they would have no other experience of the firing of these and other weapons than the School of Gunnery affords. Seventy-six detachments have been under canvas this week, formed into four brigades, the first, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Tester, 1st Sussex; the second, by Major Keene, 2nd Middlesex; the third, by Lieutenant-Colonel Ray, 3rd Middlesex; and the fourth, by Major Marwood, 1st East York. London and Middlesex are represented by no less than 31 out of the 76 detachments; Surrey, by 2; Kent, by 8; Sussex, by 9. Lieutenant-Colonel Keate, R.A., again takes the post of Camp Commandant, and the Staff appointments, which have been approved by the Duke of Cambridge, are as follows:—

Camp Quartermaster—Qrmr. S. Cox, R.A.

Adjutants of Brigades (1st week)—Capt. J. Wallace, 1st Newcastle-on-Tyne; Capt. E. N. Edwards, 1st Sussex; Capt. H. Kemball Cook, 1st Sussex; Lieut. H. J. F. Praeger, 2nd Middlesex. 2nd week—Capt. J. Rigg, 1st Cheshire and Carnarvon; Capt. W. W. Clay, 8th Lancashire; Capt. C. H. Edmonds, 1st Devon; Capt. A. G. C. Stollery, 1st Surrey.

Brigade Quartermasters (1st week)—Lieut. F. W. Panzera, 1st Norfolk; Qrmr. A. Holliday, 2nd Middlesex. 2nd week—Capt. G. D. Laycock, 1st London; Capt. R. Lauder, 4th Durham.

Commissariat Department—Capt. and Adjt. J. C. Lowrie, 2nd Middlesex; Capt. L. F. Braddock, 1st Surrey.

Nearly all the detachments arrived on Saturday in full-marching order, and presented a really fine appearance, as they entered the camp gates and reported themselves to the camp adjutant. The tents had been previously pitched by the Royals, and settling down was carried out with no noise or confusion whatever, sentries detailed for duty and guards mounted with a correctness and precision which say much for the careful instruction they had received at home. Beyond the announcement of a case of English cholera on Saturday to one of the Royals, supposed to have been caused by drinking impure water, there was nothing calling for comment. The Volunteers were relieved from duty in the afternoon, but were all back by first post in the evening, and not a single case of absence or excess in drinking was brought before the Commandant. On Monday morning the firing opened with the 64-pounder Palliser (shell), for H.R.H. the Prince of Wales's prize, and others. In this contest, four banderols are so placed that they always make a parallelogram of 50 yds. by 12 yds. The target is placed at 1,850 yds. from the batteries, and 15 yds. beyond the front banderols. The competitions consisted of four rounds of common shell, with time fuzes, the time allowed being 10 min. Shells with time fuzes bursting within the parallelogram, and at a height not exceeding 20 ft. above the plane, counted 6 points; those bursting at a greater height did not count. Blind shells with time fuzes making a direct hit on the target counted 3 points. The competing detachments consisted of nine numbers. Of the 76 detachments, 38, or about one-half, failed to score; 23 made one direct hit, 9 made two direct hits, and 4 three direct hits; 33 exceeded the time, and 1 was disqualified. The result was that the Prince of Wales's prize to the No. 1 and eight cups for the other numbers of the winning detatchment, went to the seventh detachment of the 4th East York, for a score of 18 in 8 min. The second detachment of the 1st Midlothian took second prize (£20), for a like score, but longer time (9 min. 15 sec.); the seventh detachment of the 1st London the third prize, of £15, also of 18 points, completing just within the 10 min.; the first detachment of the 1st Kent the fourth prize, of £10 10s., for 18 points in 10 min. 32 sec.; and the twelfth detachment of the 3rd Middlesex the fifth prize, of £5, for 12 points in 7 min. 5 sec.

On Tuesday, the 40-pounder breech-loader Armstrong was the weapon in use, but consequent mainly on the fact of mirage at sea, the practice was poor. An analysis of the scores shows that thirty-four detachments failed, in many cases considerably exceeding the time allowed, which was seven minutes, during which four rounds had to be fired at 1,600 and 2,000 yards with shot; hits only counted, and a value of six was given for each "direct" and three for each ricochet hit. The winning detachments made two direct hits each, the prizes being thus awarded:—7th detachment 4th East York, 4 min. 54 sec., Mr. E. A. D. Brooshaft's prize of £30; 10th detachment 2nd Middlesex, 6 min. 4 sec., Lord Londesborough's prize of £20; 8th detachment 2nd Middlesex, 6 min. 13 sec., the 3rd Middlesex Artillery prize of £15; 2nd detachment 1st Surrey, 7 min. 42 sec., H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge's prize of £10; and 1st detachment 1st Hants, 8 min. 5 sec., the National Artillery Association prize of £5. Nineteen detachments made one direct hit each and four detachments one ricochet hit each. While at Shoebury, the Volunteers are instructed, when not otherwise engaged, in mounting and dismounting ordnance, the heavy and light gyn drill, and gun-drill with the Armstrong breech-loader, the 64-pounder Moncrieff carriage, the 9-in. 12-ton, and the 10-in. 12-ton, 11-in. 25-ton, and 12-in. 23-ton guns, besides drilling with the mortar. Then there are the repository competitions, this year very difficult, demanding much labour and smartness. Operation A has been engaged in this week. It may be described thus:—A 64-pounder is mounted on a common garrison standing carriage, on an Alderson's platform. It has to be dismounted down the rear by watered skids; a temporary sleigh to be built round the gun, to travel breech foremost; sleigh to be moved to the rear of another platform and dismantled; and then the gun to be mounted from the rear of the platform up the side of a spare carriage, by parbuckle, and placed in line of fire. Only seven detachments entered, the prizes being respectively £30, £18, and £12. The Fulham detachment 2nd Middlesex is first, 9 min. 14 sec.; the Brighton detachment, 1st Sussex, 10 min. 34 sec.; and the 3rd Middlesex Artillery, third, 12 min. 54 sec. During competition on Tuesday a corporal of the 3rd Middlesex met with a serious accident, by the falling of the prypole, which injured him so seriously that he had to be conveyed to the camp hospital. This was a most unsuitable place for a man whose life for some time was despaired of; but red-tape prevailed, and there he remained till the following morning, when it was discovered that the quiet and attention of the barrack hospital might be preferable to the bustle and activity of camp.

The Lords and Commons' prizes (nine silver cups), besides others given by the Association, Lieutenant-Colonel Gascoigne, and the Earl of Longford, were fired for on Wednesday with the Armstrong 40-pounder (shot), at the same ranges as on the previous day. No. 10 detachment of the 2nd Middlesex were the winners, with three direct hits out of the four rounds, in 5 min. 55 sec., or 1 min. 5 sec. under time. No. 2 detachment 1st Midlothian secured the second prize, for a like score, made in 6 min. 17 sec.; No. 12 detachment 3rd Middlesex, the third prize, for 15 points in 5 min. 48 sec.; and No. 6 detachment of the 3rd Middlesex, the fourth prize, also for 15 points, in 7 min. 27 sec., two points being subsequently deducted for excess of time. Eight detachments made 12 points, seven 9 points, sixteen 6 points, and twelve one ricochet hit each.

Thirteen selected detachments, representing as many regiments, competed on Thursday, with the 10-in. 18-ton muzzle-loader, for the Corporation of London and City Companies' Challenge Cup, to which were added money prizes. Each detachment fired three rounds at 9 ft. by 9 ft. targets at 1,200 yards' ranges, the Nos. 1 and 2 of the 3rd Middlesex scoring the highest possible of three direct hits in upwards of three minutes under the time allowed. The 1st Northumberland, with two direct hits and one ricochet hit, were second, with the best time during the contest, 6 min. 30 sec.; and the 1st Sussex third, with two direct hits and a ricochet hit, in 7 min. 20 sec. The 1st Surrey, 1st North York, and 1st West York also made 30 points each, and it is significant that in no single case was the time exceeded, the shortest being 6½ min. and the longest 9 min. 32 sec. Of the 39 rounds fired, 16 were direct hits, 11 ricochet hits, and the remainder misses. In the afternoon the division was inspected by Colonel Hastings, R.A., Commandant of the School of Gunnery, who subsequently, in a brief but soldierly address, reviewed the work of the week, pointed out faults which had been observed and reported, but praised generally the efficient manner in which the guns were handled, the excellent practice made, the good conduct in and out of camp, and concluded by saying he was very pleased with the appearance of all the men on parade; they were a fine, soldier-like body, such as one did not very often see. The division left camp yesterday, and the 2nd division arrives to-day. The health of the camp has been good, and taken altogether the men have enjoyed the outing.

We are requested to state that applications for shares in the Army and Navy Hotel (Limited) should be received not later than the 10th from town, 11th from country. Shareholders of five shares and upwards are entitled to 10 per cent. off the hotel tariff.

THE BRITISH POLAR EXPEDITION.

Sir,—In 1879-80 the Swedes, under Professor Nordenskjold, succeeded for the first time in accomplishing the North-East Passage, passing from European waters, round the north coasts of Europe and Asia, and coming out into the Pacific at Berhing Straits. Encouraged by this success, Sweden, Denmark, Holland and Austria (not a maritime country) are fitting out expeditions to establish scientific stations within the Polar area; and the United States of America have already despatched one expedition, and are now fitting out a second, to endeavour to accomplish the discovery of the North Pole, for the assistance of which object they are also about to establish a permanent station at about 81½ degrees north latitude, only 2 degrees south of the highest latitude hitherto attained. Whilst this is going on, England, the mistress of the seas, is content to stand by, with folded arms, and look idly on at these lesser maritime nations bravely striving to achieve these great objects and reach the long-desired goal. What are we coming to? If they succeed, and we make no effort to share the honour, I think all Englishmen must agree it will be an everlasting reproach to this country. A number of ladies and gentlemen have now formed a Committee, for the purpose of fitting out an English expedition to the North Pole. This expedition, being a private one, will not be hampered by any of those official instructions and restrictions which, I surmise, have heavily handicapped the commanders of all our previous Government ones. Then, again, our leader is a volunteer for the work, which I believe none of the Government leaders ever were. They were called upon, and, to a certain extent, compelled to go, whether in their heart of hearts they liked the ugly job or not; and I mean to cast no reflection on those brave, devoted, and skilful officers, whose names will serve for all time as bright examples for present and future generations of English sailors to admire and follow, if they can, when I say that a volunteer leader would probably tackle to at such work with more zest than would a pressed one, however good and zealous he might be,—witness M'Clintock, the volunteer discoverer of Franklin's fate. In May, 1875, the Admiralty selected Capt. G. Nares to command the last expedition England has sent out, who, though well known to be a skilful and scientific officer, as well as a first-rate practical seaman, had then had but little Arctic experience, he had been on but one expedition previously, and he was the only officer in the one he was now called on to command who had ever passed a winter in the Arctic regions. Furthermore, he was taken direct from active service in a tropical climate, and sent forthwith to face the rigours of a frozen one, there to undertake a task which, above all others, required a special and practical knowledge of its difficulties, as well as physical fitness to cope with its hardships, to enable any man to grapple with it successfully. The best and boldest sailor in the world, under such circumstances as Capt. Nares was placed, might well be overwhelmed and baffled by the magnitude of the task before him, and however he could have been expected to succeed is beyond my comprehension. It is true the Government, reluctant from the first, only consented to send the expedition out when they could no longer resist the pressure of the various learned Societies and public opinion, which insisted upon its being done. But at last it did go forth; they got into the ice, and leaving his consort in Discovery Bay for the winter, Capt. Nares proceeded with the Alert some forty or fifty miles further north, where she also was frozen in; and then, instead of the crews being inured to the Arctic climate by outdoor exercise and as much exposure to fresh air as they could with safety stand, they were bottled up in the warm, artificial temperature generated between decks, so that when spring arrived, and the sledging parties started, the men, already enervated by the winter's inactivity, were almost immediately prostrated, and, having been sent away unprovided with lime-juice, were stricken with scurvy; so, after getting within 400 miles of the Pole, they returned to their ships, which, equipped and victualled for a three years' cruise, at once bore up for England, where they arrived in October, 1876, after an absence of one year and six months. The expedition having thus signally failed, its members were rewarded with honours, promotions, &c., and the public were induced to believe that all that was by any means practicable having now been accomplished, it would be useless ever to send out another expedition. Many Englishmen, however, who are acquainted with Arctic navigation entertain a very different opinion, and feeling no inclination to be left in the lurch by foreign seamen, have set to work to organise the present expedition. Com. Cheyne, R.N., who has undertaken to lead it, has been on three previous ones, and should he on reaching the ice find his progress arrested by a barrier of piled-up grounded pack ice (styled, by Sir G. Nares, Palæocrystic ice), purposes going up in a captive balloon, and so looking over the barrier, ascertaining if there is open water, or ice practicable for sledging beyond it. If there is advantage will be taken of it, and if not, they will retrace their steps, and try a second or a third passage in the same way. On a former occasion, Com. Cheyne sent up four trial balloons simultaneously to four different elevations; say, by way of exemplification, 2,000, 3,000, 4,000, and 6,000 feet. All were wafted to different points of the compass, nearly at right angles to each other, say N.E., S.W., N.W., and S.E. as thus shown. -+‡+- Therefore by trying different altitudes he expects to find a current of air favourable to his desired course; so, if the sledges are finally stopped, he will endeavour to travel the remaining distance in balloons. As 500 miles have been thus accomplished in eighteen hours by Mr. Green, and 250 miles in five hours at night by Mr. Coxwell, in Europe, where houses, trees, and telegraph wires, preventing the use of trail-ropes, render ballooning so much more difficult than it would be in the bare Arctic regions, the plan appears to be perfectly feasible. It has been remarked that, as all official expeditions backed by the resources of Government, have hitherto failed, it cannot be expected a private one, with much smaller means, can succeed. The answer is, after all the costly efforts of Government to ascertain the fate of Sir John Franklin had failed, and they had given the case up as hopeless, his widow privately fitted out a little vessel, called the Fox, of 177 tons, with a crew of 24 men all told, at an expense, from purchasing to dismantling, of £10,413, and her brave volunteer commander, Capt. M'Clintock, R.N., unfettered by Admiralty instructions this time as to where he should go or where he should not, and at full liberty, in the exercise of his own clear judgment, to act as circumstances on the spot suggested, sailed from England on June 30, 1857, and was home again on Sept. 21, 1859, triumphant. He had solved the mystery. I earnestly hope that that specimen of volunteer heroism and private energy may help to rouse our countrymen, and spare England the shame of hearing foreigners wondering what has become of her once mighty spirit of national pride and enterprise, and coming to the conclusion she has had her day, and is on the wane. Let us wake up, and show them we have not come to that yet.—I am, &c.,

John C. Bailey, Retired Captain, R.N.

GENERAL STANNUS'S CASE.

Gen. Stannus writes:—"I observe in your issue of Saturday last you call attention in your editorial columns to an article in Colburn's United Service Magazine for August, headed 'Lieut.-Gen. Stannus, C.B., and the Horse Guards.' You refer to the article as being ex parte. Will you allow me to state that it was founded entirely on the printed official correspondence, and that I was wholly unacquainted with the editor, and had never even heard his name?"

A telegram to the Daily News, dated July 29, says:—"A company of the Pioneer Regiment which left Larnaca for Famagusta on Saturday is reported to have mutinied. The colonel left here for Famagusta yesterday evening."

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, attended by the officers of the Horse Guards Staff, visited Aldershot on Tuesday, and was present at a review of the Division.

The Army.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Orders have been sent to Ireland from the Horse Guards to discontinue preparations for the movement of the regiment to England, for the present.

5th Dragoon Guards. Another troop will shortly be vacant in the regiment.

7th Dragoon Guards. We (Standard) understand that Capt. F. T. Blunt, formerly of the regiment, has been appointed Chief Civil Commissioner of the Seychelles. Capt. Blunt was highly recommended by Sir Arthur Gordon for his services in the Mauritius, where he rendered valuable aid in the reform of the Coolie system. He was also officially employed in inquiring into the treatment of Indian Coolies in the French colony of Réunion. Capt. Blunt served with the 12th Lancers in the Crimean campaign from May 17, 1855, including the battle of the Tchernaya, siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal and clasp, and Turkish medal). Also served, as adjutant of the left wing 12th Lancers, with the Saugor and Nerbudda field force during the Indian campaign in 1858-59, and was present at the battle of Banda, actions of Jegunge, Kobrai, and Lowheria, and surrender of the Rajah of Kirwee (twice mentioned in despatches, medal and clasp). He obtained his commission as cornet by purchase, Aug. 4, 1854; became lieut., May 1, 1855; capt., May 17, 1861; and retired from the Service fourteen years ago.

1st (Royal) Dragoons. The movement of the regiment from Manchester, &c., to Ireland has been delayed for a while.

5th Lancers. The regiment has left Aldershot for York during the week, as follows:—One squadron on Tuesday, viâ Wokingham, and another on the same day, viâ Reading. Head-quarters and one squadron on Wednesday, viâ Wokingham. The dismounted detachment on Thursday by rail, viâ Reading.

8th Hussars. We regret to learn from India of the death of Capt. G. A. de Visme. While out riding at Murree Capt. De Visme was struck by a stone rolling from the hill-side. His hand was severely injured, and he lingered only two hours. The deceased, who was in his 35th year, obtained his commission from the ranks in 1872, and was promoted capt. in 1877. He was a connection of the foreign Count de Vismes, the head of which family, having descended from the Sovereign Counts of Ponthieu, claims the title of Prince. Two days after Capt. de Visme's death his wife was delivered of a son.

9th Lancers. The regiment will leave Cabul to-morrow with the column under Sir F. Roberts, for the relief of Candahar.

11th Hussars. The regiment is under orders to proceed from Aldershot to Hounslow. One troop has proceeded to Kensington as follows:—Mounted portion, 2 officers, 40 men, and 45 horses, by march route on Tuesday; dismounted portion, 20 men on Wednesday. The date of the removal of head-quarters is not yet notified.

13th Hussars. The Morning Advertiser states:—"Should another British cavalry regiment be required in Afghanistan, the 13th Hussars would probably be selected. the regiment taking the field under the command of Col. Sir Baker Russell."

14th Hussars. Major Knox has been appointed to the command of the Wellington Convalescent Depôt, Madras, from the 1st ult., vice Brevet Lieut.-Col. Trent, 48th Foot.

15th Hussars. The regiment has been ordered to join the column being formed for service in Afghanistan.

16th Lancers. Old 16th men will be glad to learn from the telegram in Thursday's Standard that Col. Wilkinson, Sir F. Haines's military secretary, has been selected for a brigade command in Afghanistan.

19th Hussars. Capt. Williams has applied for permission to retire.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The death is announced of Gen. Sir John Bloomfield, G.C.B. The deceased, who was the son of Mr. P. Bloomfield, of Sligo, was born in 1793, and educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He obtained the commission of 2nd Lieut. in the Royal Artillery, April 28, 1810, and in March, 1813, arrived in the Peninsula. He was present at the battle of Vittoria with a field battery, and at San Sebastian served in the siege batteries during both series of operations against that fortress. When Napoleon landed from Elba, and a British Army was assembled in Belgium, Lieut. Bloomfield was one of that renowned host. He was young, but he had already gained the good opinion of his chiefs, and was employed at Quatre Bras and Waterloo as orderly officer to Sir George Wood, commanding the whole of Wellington's artillery. His services were reported to the Board of Ordnance, and Sir George Wood requested that should Lieut. Bloomfield at any time desire to enter the Horse Artillery, his wishes might receive favourable consideration. He continued to be attached to the staff of the artillery of the Army of Occupation for three years. In 1832, after twenty years' service, he was at length promoted to the rank of 2nd Capt., being then 39 years of age. In 1841 he was promoted to the rank of 1st Capt. In the following year, however, he joined the Horse Artillery. In 1846 he obtained by seniority his brevet majority, and in 1848 his Lieut.-Colonelcy. On June 20, 1854, he became Col. by brevet, and on Nov. 28 of the same year Col. regimentally. Soon afterwards he was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Queen. Between this time and his promotion to the rank of Major-Gen. in 1859, he held the post of 2nd Commandant at Woolwich. He was subsequently Inspector-General of Artillery. In April, 1866, he was appointed Col.-Commandant of B Brig. R.H.A., and in May of the same year became Lieut.-Gen. In 1867 he was created K.C.B., and in 1873 advanced to the dignity of G.C.B. In 1876 he became full Gen. Sir John was in possession of the silver war medal with six clasps and the Waterloo medal.

Major C. A. Gorham, R.A., deputy-judge-advocate, Cabul Field Force, has prepared a third edition of his Text-Book of Military Law. The work is published in India by Messrs. Brown and Co., of Calcutta, and a separate edition of it is to be brought out by a London firm. The book has been carefully rewritten and corrected in accordance with the provisions of the new Army Discipline Act. A chapter has also been added on Indian military law, which will be found very useful, especially by officers of the Staff Corps and Indian local army.

Lieut.-Col. F. W. de Winton, R.A., retains his appointment as Military Secretary to the Marquis of Lorne, Governor-General of Canada, on his recent promotion.

Lieut.-Col. J. F. Betty, who arrived home a few days ago from service in India, has succeeded Col. R. Curtis, R.A., in the appointment of Chief Instructor at the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness, for which we lately stated he had been selected.

Major E. V. Boyle, 5th Brig., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

No. 8 Baty. 9th Brig. arrived at Chatham on Saturday last from Sheerness, and occupied the camp recently vacated by the Engineer Volunteers. The Artillery are taking part with the Royal Engineers in carrying out a series of siege operations.

L Baty. 4th Brig. will arrive in Dublin to-day from the Curragh, to go through its annual course of gun-practice.

K Baty. 2nd Brig. proceeded from the Curragh to Kilkenny on Monday, and arrived on Wednesday.

The following batteries have been selected for service in Afghanistan, viz.:—D Baty. B Brig. (Major F. W. Ward), from Kurrachee; F Baty. 2nd Brig. (Major J. R. J. Dewar), from Kurrachee.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Lieut.-Col. C. E. Webber, after a long period of service in connection with the Telegraph Department of the General Post-Office at St. Martin's-le-Grand, has been ordered to return to military duty on his arrival home from active service at the Cape, and will not, therefore, resume his former appointment, as had been arranged. Col. Webber has joined the Engineer Department at Cork.

An opportune work has been published by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., entitled Kandahar in 1879, being the diary of Major Le Mesurier, R.E. The author was present with the Quetta Column at the first advance and the retirement, and, after the massacre of the Embassy, returned with the brigade to Candahar. His work contains the results of his personal observations on the locality in which an interest now centres.

The 9th and 20th Companies at Chatham have been placed under orders for foreign service. It is expected that both companies will go to Bermuda.

Brevet Major W. H. Collins died at 78 Cromwell Road, S.W., on the 28th ult., aged 41 years, of small-pox. Major Collins served in the Bhotan campaign of 1864-65, in command of a company of Sebundy Sappers, and was severely wounded at the assault and capture of Fort Dalimcote (medal with clasp). He joined the Army, Dec. 21, 1859; became captain, Aug. 28, 1872; and brevet major, Aug. 29, 1872.

Brigade of Guards. The annual inspection of the brigade was held on Wednesday morning in Hyde Park, by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge. The ground was kept by a troop of the 1st Life Guards. Of the seven battalions, four were represented, the 2nd Batn. Scots Guards being quartered at the Tower, and discharging the duties of their comrades during the day. Major-Gen. Higginson was in command. The men looked well, and were admirably in hand, and their appearance and steadiness elicited the praise of his Royal Highness.

6th Regiment. Lieut. Maunsell, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

11th Regiment. The 1st Batn., stationed at Preston, was inspected by Lieut.-Gen. Willis, C.B., commanding Northern District, on the 27th ult. Although the battalion is mainly composed of very young soldiers, the General was good enough to express himself much pleased not only with the efficiency, but also with its good conduct since its arrival in Preston. Lieut.-Col. Birch and the officers entertained their friends at a dance in the evening. The Bombay Gazette of the 10th ult. contains the following:—"The head-quarters of H.M.'s 2-11th Regt., at present stationed at Colaba, have received orders to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Sind, the Reserve Brigade being under orders for the front. The battalion will embark on board the Government hired steamer Ellora, on the 12th inst., for Kurrachee. Strength as follows:—Fourteen officers, one warrant officer, four 1st-class staff serjeants, four 2nd-class serjeants, 425 non-commissioned rank and file, 52 public and 30 private followers, and five horses. The following is the list of officers:—Lieut.-Col. Corrie; Capts. Street, Marriott, Kinder, and Yule; Lieut. Kelsall, and Lieut. and Adjt. Park; 2nd Lieuts. Watson, Pirie, Smith, Ellicombe, and Wood; Qrmr. Evans, and Surg. Slaughter." Major Smyth, 2nd Batn., commandant Purandhur Sanitarium, has been appointed acting assist.-adjt.-gen. of a Division of the Bombay Army. 2nd Lieut. Watson, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Bombay S.C.

14th Regiment. A correspondent writes:—"In your issue of May 29, it is stated that 'at the time of the mail leaving India, the 2nd Batn. 14th Regiment was moving from Lundi Kotal to Peshawur.' Now, the real facts are that on May 5, the 2nd Batn. 14th Regiment, instead of returning to Peshawur, moved forward to Peshbolah, in Afghanistan, where it is at present. Further, with reference to your remark regarding Capt. Noyes being wounded, it might be added, on May 20, in an action at Mazeena, the 2nd Batn. 14th Regiment lost one officer, Capt. Noyes slightly wounded (sword cut), two men killed, two men severely wounded, and one slightly wounded. The enemy, between 4,000 and 5,000, had taken up a strong position, in which they were attacked by Gen. Gib's force, about 900 men. They were defeated and pursued, losing some 120 killed and over 200 wounded. Capt. Noyes was wounded in capturing a standard of the enemy, in doing which he killed two Afghans with his sword."

18th Royal Irish. Capt. Pearson, who has just been appointed to the Pay Department from a company in the 1st Batn., has succeeded Capt. Mosse as Paymaster of the 2nd Batn. at Aldershot, Capt. Mosse having embarked for India to join the 1st Batn.

19th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. left Aldershot on Wednesday by special trains for Sheffield and Weedon, where it has relieved the 76th Regt., moved to Ireland.

22nd Regiment. Capt. Kerr, 1st Batn., has returned to the Curragh from Dublin, where he has been performing the duties of D.A.A. and Q.M.G., and resumed his duties as brigade-major.

23rd Fusiliers. The Woolwich correspondent of the daily papers wrote on Monday night:—"No regimental parade has ever excited greater interest at Woolwich than that which attended the inspection this afternoon of the 1st Batn. 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, one of the regiments selected to make up the reinforcements for India. The arrangement for the inspection having become known, several thousands of spectators congregated around the Royal Artillery Parade, where the regiment was drawn up in line at half-past 2, under Col. Elgee, who has recently been promoted to the command in succession to Col. Prevost. The commandant of the district, Major-Gen. Turner, C.B., R.A., then rode on to the ground, attended by his staff, and Cols. Markham, R.A., Stirling, C.B., R.A., A.A. and Q.M.G.'s. After the usual salute the General inspected the ranks, and the regiment then marched past with remarkable elasticity and precision. The regiment had 800 men in the ranks, and marched in broad companies of some 35 files. Taken as a whole, they were a fine body of men, and a company of recruits, which was dismissed without drill, presented as good an average in physique as the rest. After returning in close column the battalion performed the manual exercise under command of Major Tilly, to the admiration of all beholders. Then Capt. Tulloch was given charge of the regiment, which he put through the bayonet exercise. The commandant then addressed the men in terms of high commendation. He expressed his regret that he now met this magnificent battalion for the last time, for their soldier-like qualities and good conduct on all occasions had been an example to the garrison. On leaving England they would, he knew, still do their duty as soldiers, and the particular duty of soldiers being that of beating the enemies of their country, he was confident that, if opportunity offered, they would distinguish themselves again, and so maintain the high character and noble reputation of the Welsh Fusiliers. He assured them that they would carry with them the esteem and hearty good wishes of the whole garrison." Capt. Creek has resumed duty as D.A.A. and Q.M.G. of the Dublin District, from brigade-major at the Curragh.

24th Regiment. Brevet Major C. J. Bromhead, Capt. Paton, C.M.G., Lieuts. Logan and Birch, 2 serjeants, and 92 men embarked at Portsmouth on Tuesday in H.M.S. Orontes, to join the 2nd Batn. The Queen sent out to Natal by the Empress Eugénie two wreaths, to be placed on the graves of Lieuts. Melvill and Coghill, who were killed after the battle of Isandlwana while attempting to save the colours of the 24th Regiment. Mrs. Melvill, who is now on a visit to Penzance, has received a note from the Queen, enclosing an extract from a letter received by her from the ex-Empress, which extract (in French) is in the Queen's own handwriting. It says:—"We have placed the wreaths with which we were entrusted upon the graves of Lieuts. Coghill and Melvill. If, as I believe, the dead see that which is done for them, these gallant officers will be happy in the consciousness that they have not been forgotten by their Sovereign, whose colours they gave their lives in order to save. The site of the graves is a grand one and very wild; a little further and they would have been saved. It was the loss of their horses that caused their death."

25th Regiment. Capt. Hope, 1st Batn., has arrived home from India to take up the appointment of aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. Hope, commanding the troops in Scotland, to which he was lately gazetted. Lieut. Travers, 1st Batn., a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, officiating wing-officer, 2nd Goorkhas, is about to be admitted to the Bengal Staff Corps, with effect from Sept. 3, 1877.

38th Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies will embark at Queenstown on Monday for Malta in H.M.S. Orontes. Capt. Price has applied for permission to retire on half-pay, for the purpose of joining the Militia. Capt. Kell is about to exchange into the 109th Regiment.

39th Regiment. Lieut. and Adjt. Fenwick has been granted leave from India to England for nine months, on medical certificate.

41st Regiment. Head-quarters and the service companies, strength 23 officers, 10 staff serjeants, 32 serjeants, 16 trumpeters and drummers, 630 rank and file, 62 women, and 95 children, left Chatham on Tuesday morning for Portsmouth, to embark for Gibraltar. The following officers accompany the regiment, viz.:—Col. Allan (in command); Brevet Lieut.-Col. Wavell; Major Haydock; Capts. Gray, Torkington, M'Causland, Wade-Dalton, Gordon, Rudman, and Roberts; Lieuts. Quirk (adjt.), Parreidt, Parkinson, Sillem, Reade, Harkness, and Giffard; 2nd Lieuts. Clarke, Goodwyn, and Lancelot Tristram; Major and Pymr. Furlong; and Qrmr. Miller. The regiment was loudly cheered on leaving Chatham, where it has been in garrison since the end of last January, when it came from Aldershot to relieve the 86th Foot. On arrival at Portsmouth, the men, families, and baggage were quickly transferred on board the troopship Orontes.

46th Regiment. Capts. Grieve and Forster have arrived home from Gibraltar. Lieut. MacMullen, a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, has been appointed to the 34th Bengal N.I., on probation.

47th Regiment. Capt. Cooper, who, we stated lately, had been permitted to resign his appointment in the Consular service under Lieut.-Col. Wilson, C.B., R.E., in Asia Minor, has joined the Intelligence Department of the War Office. Capt. Trotter has joined the depôt at Preston for two years.

48th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Trent has been relieved in his appointment as commandant of the Wellington Convalescent Depôt, Madras, with effect from July 1, by Major Knox, 14th Hussars.

49th Regiment. The following attended the annual dinner on June 11:—Col. Fitzgerald; Lieut.-Cols. Mitchell, Corban (in the chair); Majors Hopkins, Huyshe, Bradley, Mackay; Capts. Lamb, Rogers, Lonsdale, Hincks, Temple, Cresswell, Green, Thornton, Shirley; Messrs. Chaplin, Jephson; Lieuts. Holden, Remmington, Collings, Burney, Turtees, Gordon, Hemphill, Rhodes, Brook, M'Clintock, McCracken, and Mr. Maguire. Capt. Ponsonby, a probationer for the Commissariat and Transport Staff, has joined the Supply Branch at Aldershot.

The Admiralty have appointed Capt. P. W. O'Connor to be instructor of gunnery at the Royal Marine Artillery Barracks at Eastney, from the 3rd ult., vice Derriman, promoted.

There is a strong feeling in the garrison, says the Western Morning News, that if opportunity offers, a battalion of Royal Marine Light Infantry ought to be afforded some chance of active service. Their great disappointment in connection with the Zulu campaign ought not quickly to be forgotten. The project of incorporating the Royal Marines with the Royal Marine Artillery, although finding some favour at the Admiralty, is abandoned, it being understood that her Majesty the Queen does not view with favour any merging of the red into the blue. It is probable, however, that further steps will be taken to render Royal Marines proficient as gunners.

Orders have been issued for a battalion of Royal Marines (detailed below) to be sent to Kinsale, Ireland. A portion of this force, about 300 strong, will leave Chatham to-day; the remainder, consisting of 700 officers and men, leave Plymouth on the 10th inst.:—Staff.—Lieut.-Cols. Maskery, Chatham, commanding; and West, Depôt; Majors Munro, Portsmouth; and Walsh, Plymouth; musketry instructor, Capt. Bamber, Portsmouth; pymr., Capt. Gray, Depôt; adjt., Lieut. Thompson, Chatham; qrmr., Lieut. Corbet, Portsmouth. Company officers.—Capts. Colwell, Portsmouth; Norcock, Plymouth; Innes, Portsmouth; Liardet, Plymouth; (Brevet Major) Crosbie, Chatham; Peake, Portsmouth; Craigie, Chatham; and Kirchhoffer, Chatham. Lieuts. Liardet, Hamilton, Denny, Scott, Hadley, Booth, Willis, and Roberts, Plymouth; Lieuts. Robbins and Percy, Portsmouth; Lieuts. Hart, Roche, Wilkinson, Brittan, Oldfield, and Matson, Chatham. Non-commissioned officers attached to Staff.—Colour-serjts., 8; serjts., 32; corpls., 64; buglers, 16; privates, 840. One capt., 1 lieut., and 65 non-commissioned officers and men of the Chatham Division will be embarked in H.M.S. Wye to-day, for passage to Portsmouth, to be there transferred to H.M.S. Assistance; the remainder of the Chatham detachment will embark in the Humber on the 7th inst. Lieut.-Col. West, Capt. Gray, and the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Portsmouth Division will embark in the Assistance at Portsmouth, on the 9th inst.; and the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Plymouth Division will embark in the Assistance at Devonport on the 10th inst., the whole for passage to Kinsale.

57th Regiment. Major Bicknell joins the 50th Brigade Depôt at Hounslow for two years, on the termination of his leave of absence at the end of next month.

59th Regiment. Major Lawson has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months, on medical certificate.

60th Rifles. The 2nd Batn. will form part of the column under Sir F. Roberts, ordered to march for the relief of Candahar.

61st Regiment. Capt. Fowler, Lieut. and Adjt. Partridge, Lieut. Humphrey, 2nd Lieut. Baxter, and Capt. and Pymr. Sutherland embarked at Portsmouth on Tuesday for conveyance to India, accompanied by a draft of 56 men. A draft of 200 men from the 28th Regt., at Fermoy, will embark at Queenstown in the Orontes, under command of Major Heywood, Capts. Dickin and MacDonnell, Lieut. England, and 2nd Lieut. Vines.

63rd Regiment. The regiment has been selected for service in Afghanistan.

64th Regiment left the Curragh on Wednesday for Templemore. Capt. Green has been granted leave of absence, pending his retirement being gazetted. Capt. Bingham is about to exchange to the 2nd West India Regt. with Capt. Stanley.

72nd Highlanders will leave Cabul to-morrow with the column under Sir F. Roberts to effect the relief of Candahar.

76th Regiment. The regiment left Sheffield and Weedon on Wednesday for Liverpool, where it embarked in H.M.S. Assistance, for conveyance to Queenstown, en route to Kinsale.

78th Highlanders. A correspondent at Poona writes to the Bombay Gazette:—"Two or three months ago, the 78th Highlanders were moved from Wanowri to the Ghorpuri Barracks at this station, to allow the 4th King's, when that regiment arrived from Natal, to occupy the latter barracks, which are more commodious, and believed to be more healthy than the former. It now appears that the gallant Highlanders are suffering so much from malarious fever that the medical authorities deem it necessary to send as many companies back to Wanowri before the rains as they can make accommodation for by limiting the 4th King's to the regulation allotment of space, which will leave the head-quarters and about two companies only of the 78th in the Ghorpuri lines. This, no doubt, is a very judicious arrangement under the circumstances, but the breaking up into so many detachments of a regiment like the 78th, composed as it is chiefly of young soldiers, cannot but be fatal to discipline. There are already two companies of the 78th at Baroda and one at Kirkee. The Ghorpuri barracks are built on black soil, and it is well known that they were condemned some years ago by the highest medical authorities as unfit for occupation by European troops on account of their insanitary surroundings. Notwithstanding this, Government, acting on the usual 'penny-wise and pound-foolish' plan, and in the opposition to the views of the Acting Sanitary Commissioner at the time, who strongly advocated the total abandonment of the Ghorpuri lines, and the construction of barracks in a more salubrious locality, actually built several additional blocks on an improved plan, to increase the accommodation for a full regiment of infantry, which the old buildings did not afford. It is believed that, if the hospital records of the last regiment that occupied these lines were consulted, it would be found that a larger percentage of sick men were admitted for treatment from the new barracks than the old ones."

85th Light Infantry. Col. Appleyard, C.B., is en route to England, on vacating the lieutenant-colonelcy.

92nd Highlanders will leave Cabul to-morrow with the column under command of Sir F. Roberts for the relief of Candahar. Major White rejoins head-quarters from the staff of the Marquis of Ripon.

94th Regiment. Two officers and 52 men of the 65th Brigade Depôt will embark in H.M.S. Euphrates at Portsmouth for Natal on the 16th inst., to join the regiment. The Lydenburg correspondent of the Transvaal Argus writes:—"The troops in garrison, consisting of head-quarters and three companies 94th Foot, with detachments of Royal Engineers, Army Service Corps, Army Hospital Corps, and 94th Troop Mounted Infantry, paraded in review order at twelve noon, on May 24, 1880. The Queen's Colour was trooped, the troops marched past, gave the Royal Salute, and three cheers for her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, after which the troops formed three sides of a square, the letter and General Order were read, notifying the fact that her Majesty had been graciously pleased to award to Pte. Flawn, 94th Troop Mounted Infantry, the distinction of the Victoria Cross. Pte. Flawn was then called to the front, and addressed by Lieut.-Col. Malthus, C.B., commanding the 94th Regiment and sub-district of Lydenburg, in the following terms:—'Pte. Flawn, it affords me peculiar pleasure to have the privilege of presenting to you, in the name of her Most Gracious Majesty, this decoration of the Victoria Cross. It is one of the highest distinction—ardently desired by every officer and soldier in the Service, but which very few have the honour to obtain. I congratulate you on the conduct which has rendered you deserving of it, and which was marked, not only by personal courage, involving merely a reckless exposure of your own life, but also by coolness, judgment, and common-sense—qualities eminently desirable in a soldier, as enabling him to do the right thing at the right time, and to make the best of the circumstances in which he may be placed. In placing the Victoria Cross upon your breast, I may express my confidence that the obligations imposed upon you by the possession of this treasure will ever be remembered by you, and will serve, if necessary, to save you from the commission of any action unworthy of a good soldier, and of the proud possessor of the Victoria Cross. I congratulate you most heartily on the distinction which you have so deservedly obtained.'"

98th Regiment. Major Raper and Capts. Tyacke and Allen have embarked with the draft proceeding to join the service companies at Malta, and Brevet Major Stracey has been appointed to the depôt for two years.

109th Regiment. Lieut. Murphy has assumed the duties of acting musketry instructor, vice Lieut. Hoyes, promoted.

2nd West India Regiment. An exchange has been arranged between Capt. Stanley and Capt. Bingham, 64th Regiment.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. The following officers of the late Commissariat and Transport Department, still serving under the Royal Warrant of May 1, 1878, are about to be retired, viz.:—Assist.-Comy.-Gen. C. B. Shervington; Comys. C. B. Knapp, S. R. Brown, P. G. F. Furse, J. Macfarlane, C. W. Prentice, J. F. W. des Barres, and S. W. Rains; and Deputy-Comys. E. T. Price, W. H. Hawtayne, and M. S. J. Woollett. Mr. Whalley asked the Secretary of State for War on Tuesday, having in view the recent reorganisation of the Ordnance and Commissariat Departments and the Royal Warrant issued for the guidance of the same, upon what principles had the "selection" for the retention and the retirement of certain officers been made. Mr. Childers said:—"In reply to my hon. friend, I have to state that the reduction in the Ordnance Department effected by my predecessor was from 160 to 90 officers, and in the Commissariat from 270 to 160—a reduction in all of 180 officers. My right hon. friend, on the recommendation of the late Surveyor-General of the Ordnance, carefully selected those whom he found to be the best officers for retention in the Service, and the rest were retired on compensation rates."

Medical Department. Surg.-Major Maunsell and Surgs. W. Cowen and J. R. Clark embarked for India on Tuesday in H.M.S. Orontes. Surg.-Major M. L. White is under orders of readiness to embark for India, as soon as accommodation can be provided for him. Surg.-Major Scott, who has just returned from South Africa in the suite of the Empress Eugénie, was formerly in the 18th Hussars. In the Zulu campaign he was specially selected to accompany the late Prince Imperial, and was with him up to that 1st of June when the Prince fell at Ityotyosi, and died heroically fighting against his savage foes. Dr. Scott was, on the morrow of the fatal day, specially despatched by Lord Chelmsford to assist Capt. Molyneux in his mournful search for the body of the unfortunate Prince, and it was he who discovered and identified the remains. Hart's Army List says of this officer's career that he "received the special approbation of the Madras Government, followed by that of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, for his services rendered while in medical charge of the 18th Hussars during a most virulent outbreak of cholera at Secunderabad in May, 1871. Served in the Zulu war of 1879; organised the bearer company and made the hospital arrangements at the Fort Pearson base for the Ekowe relieving column; served afterwards with the 2nd division on the personal staff of Lord Chelmsford, and in medical charge of the head-quarters' staff. Was present at the battle of Ulundi, when his services were described by Lord Chelmsford as of the greatest value, and served subsequently to the end of the war as senior medical officer of Port Durnford and the line of communication between Ulundi and the Tugela. Mentioned in despatches."

MILITIA.

1st Royal Lancashire. The regiment, which assembled on June 18, under command of Col. the Right Hon. F. A. Stanley, M.P., was inspected on the 22nd ult. by Col. Lock, commanding the 11th Sub-District. The entire strength on parade was 673. The officers present at the inspection were Cols. the Right Hon. F. A. Stanley and Sheppard; Majors Marton and Trappes; Capts. Whalley, Schneider, Saunders, Royds, Massy-Westropp, William Peel, Walter Peel, and Yates; Lieuts. John Yates, Hon. R. Gerard, Gray Grayrigge, Lutwyche, Cross, J. E. Renshaw, W. C. Renshaw, Gardner, Rooke, Murphy, N. North, Vyvyan, and Dawson-Greene; Capt. and Adjt. Stokes, Surg. Johnson, and Qrmrs. Dixon and Danby. The most interesting event in connection with the inspection was the presentation of new colours to the 2nd Batn., which was recently formed. The ceremony of consecrating the colours was first gone through, this duty devolving upon the Vicar of Lancaster, (Rev. Canon Allen, D.D.) The blessing having been pronounced, Lady Constance Stanley advanced towards Major Trappes, who held the Queen's colour, and Capt. Whalley (acting as major), who held the regimental colour, which were separately handed to her ladyship, who passed them into the hands of Lieuts. Lutwyche and Gardner. In making the presentation, Lady Constance Stanley said:—"Gentlemen,—I commit to your care these colours, and I feel sure that the battalion to which they are now presented will ever maintain, to the utmost of its power, the honour of our Sovereign, the safety of the country, and the traditions which have always distinguished your regiment in times past." Col. Sheppard, in accepting the colours, said:—"Lady Constance Stanley, on behalf of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, of the 2nd Batn. 1st Royal Lancashire Militia, I beg to assure you that we fully appreciate the honour you have this day done us in coming to Lancaster to present us with our new colours, and it is most gratifying to the regiment at large that this interesting ceremony should have been performed by the wife of our esteemed and distinguished commandant, whose family has been connected with this, the old county regiment, for so many years,—I believe I am right in saying since the year 1759. To a certain extent we are now saying farewell to our old colours, those of the 1st Battalion, under which the regiment has always served with honour and soldier-like efficiency. We wish them God-speed, and in welcoming the new ones, I feel confidence in saying that our reputation will remain untarnished, and that the flattering expressions and kind wishes you have been good enough to address to us will be remembered by us all for many years to come, and act as an incentive in the maintenance of discipline. In conclusion, we offer you our warmest thanks for your attendance here to-day, and for having presented us with our colours. We are also grateful to you, Dr. Allen, for your attendance, and hope you will accept many thanks for having performed the service of consecration usual on these occasions." Col. Stanley and the officers entertained a select company at luncheon in the mess-room. Covers were laid for 150 guests. The band of the regiment was present on the ground for a short time, and played a selection of music. A ball was held in the mess-room in the evening.

2nd Somerset. A Central News telegram published on Saturday stated that Col. Adair had been killed by a fall from his horse at the inspection of the regiment. The following letter appeared in Tuesday's Standard:—"Sir,—Your impression of to-day contains a mistaken account of an accident, which did not happen to me, but to Col. Boldero, commanding 36th Brigade Depôt. I am thankful to say the accident was not fatal, and I trust is not more serious than concussion of the brain; and the accounts of his state are satisfactory and improving. I do not command the regiment that was being inspected, but was riding on Col. Boldero's staff at the time.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, Alex. Wm. Adair, Col., Lieut.-Col. commanding 2nd Somerset L.I. Militia. Heatherton Park, Wellington, Somerset, July 31."

Royal Wiltshire. The regiment completed its annual training on Saturday last, and it must have been with regret that both officers and men returned to their every-day occupations. It would be difficult to find a better Militia regiment. The men are steady under arms, they drill well, and are particularly well-behaved. Col. Lord Methuen is deservedly a very popular commanding officer, and he has good reason to be proud of the regiment he commands. During the last week of the training, a soldier belonging to the brigade depôt was marking in the butts for one of the Militia companies which was going through its course of musketry, when the splash from a bullet glanced into the mantlet and struck the marker in the eye. It was at first thought that the man would lose his eyesight, but it is to be hoped that the wound will not turn out to be so serious. The range, however, ought to be looked to, for at present it is highly dangerous.

Westmeath Rifles. The annual inspection of the regiment took place last week at Mullingar, before Col. Sargent, commanding the Birr Brigade Depôt. The officers present were, viz.:—Col. the Earl of Granard; Major Malone; Capts. Grant, Tottenham, Kelly, Fitzgerald, Mecham, and Levigne; Lieuts. Battersby, O'Conor, Purdon, Chapman, O'Hara; Second Lieut. Jameson; Capt. and Adjt. Harden, Qrmr. Foley, &c. At the conclusion of the inspection Col. Sargent congratulated the Earl of Granard on the efficiency of his regiment. The regiment was dismissed on Saturday.

The following officers joined the School of Instruction for Auxiliary Forces at Aldershot on Monday, viz.:—Capts. Slater and Smirthwaite, 5th Lancashire; Lieuts. W. J. Todd and Hon. E. R. Hanbury, Hereford: and 2nd Lieut. Davidson, 7th Royal Lancashire.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Indian Army.

29th Bengal N.I. The late special correspondent of the Times of India with the Kurum Field Force writes on June 13:—"My attention has been called to a statement which appeared in my telegram of Dec. 2, 1878, to the Times of India, giving an account of the preliminary operations before the Peiwar Kotal. The statement I allude to is to this effect;—'Capt. Reid, 29th P.N.I., has been severely wounded in the back.' I now wish to correct this statement, and to remove any misapprehensions it may have created. The facts are these:—On Nov. 28, 1878, Capt. Reid was wounded by the flanking fire of the enemy from the crags high up to his right, whilst leading his company against the front of the Afghan position on the Peiwar range, and not during the retirement which afterwards took place that day. The Medical Board which, in March, 1879, invalided Capt. Reid to England, reported that 'he had received a very severe and dangerous gun-shot wound of the loins, 15 inches in length, from an Enfield bullet, fired from a stockade on his right. The bullet entered on the right side of the spine, and was cut out lower down, 3½ inches above the left hip joint.'"

QUARTERMASTERS AND RIDINGMASTERS.

"Subscriber" writes:—"Your correspondent 'Miles,' in last week's issue, hardly does justice to the Ridingmasters, although few will be disposed to deny the hardship suffered by a well-mounted man in sitting out a few parades, each of an hour's duration. He might have informed your readers of some of his office cares and worries, his correspondence, books, and perplexing accounts. 'Miles' is also silent as to the nature of his labours on the following important occasions, namely, when his regiment is on the move from place to place, on embarkation and disembarkation, encamping, on the line of march, say, in India, and in the field itself. I am far from thinking that the position of ridingmaster is all that it should be,—no class of officers can be said to be fairly treated to whom all professional advancement is denied; but at the same time, I may observe that comparisons of this kind can hardly do Ridingmasters any good. All-round justice is an excellent panacea for discontent; and therefore in the Military Service, as in civil life, men should be paid in proportion to their anxieties and labours. By any such test, a marked line should be drawn between the two classes of officers in question. For the rest, any ridingmaster who may wish to embark upon a 'sea of troubles' will, if duly qualified, find no difficulty in moving from one post to the other, as opportunities offer."

The Standard states, and correctly, that "Col. W. Bellairs, C.B., who was employed as Deputy-Adjt.-Gen. of the Zulu expedition, is appointed as colonel on the Staff commanding the troops in Natal and the Transvaal. The pay of the appointment will be £415, with half-pay and allowances."

The Globe is informed that the Argentine Navy, while engaged in hostilities with the Buenos Ayres Government, captured a small sailing vessel containing a cargo of about 10,000 Paysandu ox tongues, en route for shipment to this country.

We have much pleasure in calling the attention of the public to the teas of the Oriental Company, Oxford Street. Their blends seem to be most judicious, and the leaves not to have been exposed to the deleterious effects of the atmosphere. The aroma and delicate flavour of these teas, we fancy, will soon make a large demand for them.

OFFICE—40 CHARING CROSS, S.W.

This Asylum was opened in February, 1854, to provide a home for the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army, of not less than 50 years of age.

There are 57 widows in the Asylum.

Each widow has a furnished room, and receives seven shillings weekly, besides a monthly allowance of two shillings and sixpence for coals.

The funded income of the charity yields only £617, with an additional £50 from the Princess Mary's Fund for Nurses, to meet an estimated expenditure of £2,300 per annum.

An annual subscription of half-a-guinea, or a donation of five guineas, entitles to one vote at each election, with the right of nominating a candidate.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 7, 1880.

THE accounts at present received of the battle near Kushk-i-Nakhud, although they show that the valour of our troops is what might be expected, do not apparently reflect much credit on the organisers or the commander of the force engaged. It has hitherto been an invariable axiom in our Eastern wars, by following which we have obtained constant victory, that our Indian troops always require a strong leaven of British troops, and it is in distinct contravention to this rule that General Burrows' cavalry consisted of native troops only. It is more than probable that even a single squadron of British Hussars would, by their example and the encouragement of their presence, have added most considerably to the fighting power and tenacity of the cavalry. The Horse Artillery evidently made a most obstinate fight, but artillery at close quarters can do little unless well supported. In all our glorious victories in India at the beginning of this century, a practice was adopted which was always most effective, but which in the present case has been discarded. Through careful discipline and training, our troops possess a manœuvring power far superior to those of any troops likely to be brought against them in the East. For a good example of how that could be brought into play, we may turn to the battle of Assaye, where the disproportion between the combatants was not so far different to that at Kushk-i-Nakhud; but the result, through skilful manœuvring, was far different. The battle of the other day seems to have been a ding-dong front attack, on a well-posted enemy superior in force. General Burrows evidently originally desired that the enemy should attack him, but if the accounts at present to hand are reliable, he appears to have been taken in by a manœuvre which, from the time when Joshua employed it against the men of Ai, has been in constant use, and was most effectively used at Thrasymene and Hastings. It might be supposed that a General brought up in India, and having consequently, as we are so often told, the great advantage of a thorough knowledge of native character, would be the first to expect and guard against a manuœvre so old and so thoroughly in consonance with Oriental character. In the formation of the line of battle, it appears that the Native Infantry were placed in the front line, the wing of the 66th being kept in reserve. The result might have been expected; when the native infantry were broken by the enemy's fire and attack, they rushed pell-mell, probably mixed up with the pursuing enemy, towards the ranks of the 66th, who were thus prevented from forming with the steady calmness characteristic of British troops, and all chance of retrieving the day was thrown away. General Burrows may have had good reasons for such a formation; but it is generally held that native troops require the example of British Infantry, and that there is nothing more likely to deter the native soldiers from stubborn fighting than the idea, easily raised and rapidly communicated, that they are being sacrificed to save the English soldiers. As a rule, hitherto the British soldier has been always put forward in the post of danger, and experience has shown the value and security of such an arrangement. How did Wellington act at Assaye? He put forward one of his best regiments (H.M.'s 74th Foot) to be the head of his attack, to strike at the strongest point, and to hold their ground, in spite of all losses, till the rest of his little army were in position. There was no question of saving his British soldiers there; and the Native troops would see that, and vie with them in valour. That General Burrows knew little or nothing beforehand of the strength and military value of the enemy, is probably hardly so much his fault, as that of the vicious system which has grown up in India, by which a political officer charges himself with obtaining all information, and would be mortally offended, and probably would loudly complain of interference, if the General took on himself the ordinary measures that would be employed in Europe for the discovery of the enemy's force and position. It is, probably, fortunate for us that the system of Political Officers taking on themselves some of the most important duties of a General on a campaign was not at its present height, in the days when Wellington was first making himself known as an invariably successful commander. The comments of Sir Charles Napier on the system are well worth reading, and there can be no doubt that an arrangement by which a General is accompanied in the field by an officer much his junior, whose attention has been turned away from military matters, but who yet has power to interfere at every step, without sharing the responsibility of action, must prove a constant hamper to success in the field.

The Government of India will be allowed to hold back, if necessary, the following regiments, under orders to return home from India, viz.:—The 15th Hussars, 1st Battalion 5th, 59th, 2nd Battalion 60th, 85th, and 92nd Regiments, all serving in Afghanistan. The 2nd Battalion 1st, 1st Battalion 6th, and the 73rd and 83rd will be brought home, if possible.

The War Office has at length been induced to add an adjutant to the establishment of the little corps of Submarine Miners, which has been for some time in existence at Portsmouth, and which has had so many difficulties to contend with in consequence of the absence of a properly qualified permanent instructor. The appointment has been offered to and accepted by Lieutenant H. P. Knight, R.E.

In reply to Sir W. Barttelot, who put a question in the absence of Colonel North, Mr. Childers stated on Monday, in the House of Commons, "I have to say that I have studied with much care what is known as the case of the Purchase captains of the Army, but that to deal with it conclusively requires more time than I have been able to give to the subject since I took office. I have, however, postponed for a year the action of the Royal Warrant which made succession brevet promotions cease on October 1, 1880. These promotions, therefore, unless meanwhile determined by the introduction of other regulations, will continue until October 1, 1881."

The distinguished-service reward vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General the Hon. J. W. B. Macdonald, C.B., to the colonelcy of the 21st Hussars, has been conferred upon Colonel G. S. Young, half-pay, late 80th Regiment, who has just completed his term as Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Dublin District. Colonel Young served the Sutlej campaign of 1845-46 with the 80th Regiment, including the battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon, wounded (medal with two clasps); served in the Indian campaign of 1858-59, commanded the head-quarters wing of the 80th with the column in Oude, at the capture of the Fort of Simree, at Beera, and Doondeakeira (brevet of major and medal). He entered the Army, July 16, 1841, and became colonel, July 20, 1870.

The following has been published in Dublin District Orders:—"Staff Major-General Glyn, C.B., takes this opportunity of expressing his regret at the approaching termination of Colonel Young's duties as Assistant-Adjutant-General to the Dublin District on completion of his term of staff service. He has filled this onerous and responsible position with distinction as regards himself, and to the general advantage of the Service. The Major-General feels confident that in publishing this tribute to the efficiency and ability of a valuable staff officer, he is merely giving expression to the opinion of all who have had connection with him, whether officially or socially."

Mr. Childers, in reply to Mr. Puleston, stated on Monday that he could not lay on the table any part of Lord Airey's Report until the questions with which it deals have been decided upon by her Majesty's Government, and even then he will not undertake to lay on the table the whole Report.

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel F. S. Le Grice, who commanded N Battery 6th Brigade, R.A., in the Zulu campaign, and was brought to notice on account of his services, has arrived in England from India, to assume command of H Battery C Brigade R.H.A., for which he has been selected, in recognition of the zeal and ability displayed by him whilst actively employed in the field.

Major E. G. Clayton, who retired upon pension lately from the Royal (late Bengal) Engineers, vacating the adjutancy of the 1st Lanarkshire Engineer Volunteers, has succeded Lieutenant-Colonel L. Griffiths, R.A., as a Deputy-Governor of H.M.'s Convict Prison at Portsmouth.

The arrangements made by the new Quartermaster-General in carrying out the orders of the Government for the despatch of relief to India are prompt and creditable, and the Horse Guards and the Admiralty work in perfect accord, which is sometimes, we have heard, not the case. The difference between such an operation as the mobilisation of an army corps and its transport to a given point by land, and the despatch of an expeditionary force by sea, is well indicated in the present operation. Given full magazines and the railway, 50,000 or 100,000 men could be called out and moved off by France or Germany to invade her neighbours in the time which is needed to move and embark 10,000 men here for India. It was ten a.m. on July 13, 1870, when the King of Prussia and M. Benedetti had the few words on the promenade at Ems which, artfully utilised, stung France to madness, and drove the Emperor to war. In one week after the declaration, the Prussians had 110,000 men between Coblence and Mayence, and in a fortnight they had 300,000 men écheloned between Forbach and Landau, and on August 4, Spicheren and Weissenburg established the invaders on French territory. But they had endless supplies behind and around them; all they had to do was to feed and to fight, and they did both well. In our case, the troops must be picked and sorted, the regiments made up to their proper strength from others, drafts sent to this garrison and that; and then there is a sea voyage for nearly half the circumference of the globe—including, at this time of year, the Red Sea, too!—before the troops reach Bombay. The points in their favour are that they do not suffer from long marches, and are delivered pretty fit for action, barring accidents none the worse for so many thousand miles of travel. Our military critics on the Continent understand these differences very well, and Moltke himself would admit that it was not a very easy operation to ship 50,000 troops in a fortnight,—a very comforting reflection, under all the circumstances.

Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Edward Clinton, commanding the 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade, and Major Bunbury, junior major, had sent in their applications to retire from the Service, when the order reached Aldershot last week for the battalion to proceed to India. They at once applied for permission to withdraw their "papers," and will embark with head-quarters. Both officers will quit the Service as soon as order is restored in Afghanistan; they would not, however, allow themselves to be gazetted out whilst there was any chance of their being ordered on active service.

We have reason to believe that one of the principal recommendations of the War-Office Committee on the Scientific Corps will be the removal of all regimental colonels of Artillery who attained that rank before October 1, 1877. This will be probably effected by the offer of considerable pensions, and by a temporary increase of the Major-Generals' List.

There will be to the end of time differences of opinion among men respecting the necessity of Sir Bartle Frere's ultimatum to Cetewayo, and the invasion of Zululand, but there will never be any difference of opinion, we think, among the students of history in thinking that the treatment of Sir Bartle Frere by the present Government was pre-eminently mean. We have always expressed the opinion, founded on some acquaintance with colonial politics and jealousies, that the Confederation scheme was not a project which could be carried just now by any Governor or Government, and that it will never be effected at all until the Colonies are ready to assert practical independence, or are left to feel that they must fight for their own hand. One thing is quite certain, that Sir Bartle Frere is the most popular proconsul, and therefore the most powerful, the Cape Colony has ever seen; and that his successor has a most arduous, if not hopeless, task before him, in any efforts he may be directed to make for the accomplishment of that which Sir Bartle Frere failed to effect. The Government must be prepared for a strong display of feeling and much irritation at the Cape, in consequence of the step they have taken, "motived," as it is, on the ground that Sir Bartle Frere could not carry Confederation.

The vacant Horse Artillery jackets have been given to Lieutenants W. R. M. Daunt, 7th Brigade, D. E. Dewar, 8th Brigade, and W. B. Fletcher, 1st Brigade. Lieutenant Daunt joins H Battery C Brigade, at Woolwich, Lieutenants Dewar and Fletcher being posted to E Battery A Brigade, at Peshawur.

Major-General H. R. Browne has arrived home from India, on vacating his brigade command on the Bengal establishment.

Lieutenant-General W. J. Smythe becomes a Colonel-Commandant in the Royal Artillery, in consequence of the death of General Sir John Bloomfield, G.C.B.

Surgeon-General H. G. Gordon, M.D., has vacated his appointment as principal medical officer at Gibraltar, and arrived in England a few days ago, in view of his early retirement under the age clause. On Dr. Gordon's retirement, Surgeon-General W. Munro, M.D., C.B., his successor at Gibraltar, will become the senior surgeon-general. Dr. Munro does not attain the age of sixty-five until November, 1881. Dr. Gordon will be retired with effect from the 2nd inst.

Captain A. C. Alexander, R.E., who lately returned home from Cyprus, has been selected to proceed on a special service to Antigua.

Young soldiers will be young soldiers, and we were not much astonished to learn that on the occasion of the recent fête in France they behaved as such, and that in several places liberty degenerated into licence. One might have doubted the complaints of the strictly Conservative papers concerning the insubordinate and disorderly conduct of the troops at Lyons, Marseilles, Nismes, Tours, Grenoble, Avignon, Belfort, Douai, and other towns, but for the severe, and no doubt necessary, punishment since inflicted upon some of the rioters by the War Minister. General Farre deserves a good deal of credit for putting a stop to all unseemly manifestations with a high hand, although the consequences of celebrating, as it were, the return of the Communists might have been foreseen. During the disorders, the cry of "Vive le Ministre de la Guerre!" was frequently uttered, and the soldiers, no doubt, imagined that everything would be tolerated under a Radical War Minister. In this they were mistaken. In the meantime, the Radical papers have opened a heavy fire upon General Farre, who has quite sacrificed his popularity with the tag, rag, and bobtail, who listen to the wild ravings of Henri Rochefort and his compeers. The French Army is now national rather than Governmental, and it has long been feared that, no matter what its capacity for meeting a foreign foe, it would be very apt to give trouble at home.

The Navy.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of June 26, 1867, Retired Navigating-Lieutenant John Riches has been allowed to assume the rank and title of Staff Commander on the Retired List from the 26th inst.

ADMIRALTY, July 31, 1880.

ANTELOPE, Lieut.-Com. the Hon. Walter Hylton Jolliffe, remains at Constantinople.

ASIA, Capt. R. Wells, flagship of Rear-Admiral the Hon. F. A. C. Foley, gave a ball on board on Saturday last. The upper deck was used for dancing from immediately abaft the foremast, a canvas roofing forming a protection from the sun. The inside of the roofing was completely covered with flags of all nations, and from the roofing to the bulwarks on the starboard side the ship was completely covered in with canvas, thus preventing any unpleasantness from too great a force of wind being admitted. Along the front of the poop, which was used as a promenade, a choice array of exotics and potted plants, rich in bloom, were effectively arranged. A novel feature was introduced by the formation of a miniature fountain and aquarium. This was arranged in the after hatchway, so as to bring the water in the pond, in which numbers of fish disported themselves, about on a level with the deck. Diminutive grottoes were arranged in the water, and plants heightened the effects. The fountain was kept supplied from a tank in the mizentop. Trophies of bayonets and cutlasses were arranged at various points. The visitors were conveyed from the shore in steam launches, which ran at intervals from the Portsmouth shore, Gosport, and Fareham, and were in attendance on the arrival of the Isle of Wight packets to take the passengers who arrived from the Island to and from the ship. Dancing commenced about three o'clock, and concluded about six.

CLEOPATRA. Capt. Sir Lambton Loraine, Bart., who will shortly commission this ship, entered the Navy in 1852, when he also succeeded to the baronetcy. He was a midshipman in 1854, and served as mate in the Marlborough, Capt. Lord F. H. Kerr, flagship in the Mediterranean of Vice-Admiral Arthur Fanshawe, C.B., from May 19, 1858, until promoted to lieutenant, Sept. 13 following. As lieutenant, he was appointed, Feb. 7, 1859, to the Algiers, fitting at Portsmouth, commanded successively by Capts. G. W. D. O'Callaghan and E. B. Rice, at first with the Channel Squadron, and afterwards in the Mediterranean. He was paid off from the Algiers at the close of 1862, and on April 27, 1863, was appointed to the Royal Oak, Capt. F. A. Campbell, fitting at Chatham, and in her served again with the Channel Squadron, at Devonport, and in the Mediterranean, and on May 11, 1864, was transferred to the Sutlej as flag lieutenant to Rear-Admiral the Hon. Joseph Denman, in the Pacific, from which ship he was promoted to the rank of commander on the haul-down of Admiral Denman's flag, July 9, 1867. His next appointment was on March 15, 1871, when he was borne for passage in the Himalaya to recommission the Niobe, screw sloop, on the 26th of the following month, at Bermuda, and in June of that year left for the west coast of Cape Breton to take up her cruising ground for the protection of the fisheries. On July 3 the Niobe arrived at Halifax, and after a refit sailed on the 13th for Jamaica. On September 9 she remained at Kingston, and on the 15th sailed from Port Royal for Santiago de Cuba. She afterwards visited Halifax and Bermuda, and in June, 1872, again left Halifax for Cape Breton for the protection of the fisheries. In October she remained at Prince Edward's Island, and in March, 1873, left Port Royal for Puerto Plata, in consequence of an insult to the British flag in the previous month, when three political refugees were taken by force out of the English Vice-Consul's house. Capt. Loraine had an interview with the President's Ministers, and after some thanks the Dominican Government ordered the restitution of the prisoners at Puerto Plata, after rehoisting of the Consular flag with a salute of twenty-one guns. In April the Niobe had returned to Jamaica, and in the following August, while she was cruising about seven miles from Amoa, on the coast of Honduras, Capt. Loraine having received intelligence that the British flag had been insulted, the Consulate wrecked, &c., he at once proceeded to the scene of the outrage, and on learning that the natives had plundered the Consul and the British merchants, and imprisoned three of them who resisted the outrage, the Consul, Mr. Deprote, having sought safety in Belize, on the 19th of the same month brought his ship into position, and demanded satisfaction of the authorities, which, not being given, the ensign was run up the mainmast and a blank shot fixed. This was returned from the Port. An active cannonade then ensued, which lasted from 3 to 6 in the afternoon, and which was renewed the next day. After two or three hours, the fort being silenced, a flag of truce was sent on board. The affair was arranged by the release of the imprisoned British subjects, and payment of an indemnity of £30,000. The enemy had several killed and wounded. The action of Sir Lambton, in bombarding Amoa, was not allowed to pass unnoticed by the British merchants of Central America, who presented to him a testimonial in the following terms:—"We, the undersigned merchants of Belize, British Honduras, have learned with very great satisfaction of the measures adopted by you for the honour of our national flag, and for the protection of British interests against the acts of Gen. Streber, commanding the forces of the Provisional Government at Amoa, in the Republic of Honduras, we feel and consider it a duty incumbent upon us to tender you our most sincere thanks for the intrepid manner in which our honour as a nation has been vindicated. We considered your action in this affair deserves the spontaneous and grateful thanks of the whole British nation. In the protection and redress that you have thus far secured for our interests, we cannot find words adequate to convey the sense of our appreciation. We, however, feel certain that the course you have seen it proper to assume will have the most lasting and beneficial effect on our trade and intercourse with all Central America in the future; and, therefore, we again repeat to yourself and to your subordinates the thanks you so justly merit at our hands." The Niobe again returned to Kingston on Sept. 21 from Truxillo, and on Nov. 8 arrived at Santiago, when Capt. Loraine commenced an active correspondence with the Governor on behalf of the British and other foreign prisoners in the hands of the Spaniards. He was posted Jan. 22, 1874. The Cleopatra is a 14-gun corvette, built of iron and steel and cased with wood.

CONFLICT, Lieut-Com. H. G. Archer, had proceeded by last advices to the relief of the foreign colonists taken to New Zealand by the Chandernagore, of whom nine had died from hardships incurred and others were seriously ill.

COQUETTE, Lieut.-Com. E. G. Festing, is to be relieved at Corfu by the Bittern from Malta, and will join the flag after refitting at Malta.

DANAE, Capt. J. C. Purvis, had visited Samoa, and was reported to have shelled a native village, but no particulars had been received when the mail left Australia. Information has been received of the shelling of two villages in Samoa by this ship, and the threatened massacre by the natives of all the white inhabitants of the place. A later telegram has, however, been received at the Foreign Office, stating that the rebels had surrendered to the proper authorities, and quiet had been restored.

DWARF. Capt. Wm. Home Chisholme St. Clair, who is promoted from the command of this vessel, entered the Navy in 1854, and on Dec. 20, 1860, was promoted to be additional lieutenant of the Nile, flagship of Sir Alexander Milne, K.C.B., on the North-America and West Indies station; and on March 30, 1861, was transferred to the Cadmus, on the same station. On the 19th of the following August he again removed into the Nile, and returned with her to England, and was paid off April 23, 1864. He was appointed additional to the Excellent, gunnery-ship, at Portsmouth, June 23, 1864; and on Oct. 16, 1865, additional of the Bristol, fitting at Sheerness for the West Coast of Africa, on which latter station on Feb. 9, 1866, he became acting-commander of the Sparrow, and brought her to England, and was paid off in August, 1866. On Oct. 30 following he was appointed to the Reindeer, fitting at Chatham for the Pacific, and was promoted to the rank of commander from that ship Dec. 4. 1868. On Feb. 14, 1873, he was appointed to the command of the Cockatrice, gunboat, in the Mediterranean, which he commanded until February, 1876. He subsequently commanded the Dædalus, drill-ship at Bristol, from June 1, 1876, until April 8, 1879, when he was transferred to the command of the Dwarf, fitting for the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa. Com. John Hugh Bainbridge, who has obtained command of this vessel, in succession to Capt. St. Clair, previous to his promotion to lieut., June 28, 1866, served from June, 1864, till Jan., 1866, as sub-lieut. in the Cossack, Capts. W. R. Roland and R. D. White, in the Mediterranean. On June 18, 1867, he was appointed additional of the Octavia, Comdre. Charles F. Hillyar, in the East Indies, from which ship, on July 16 following, he removed into the Vigilant, gun-vessel, Com. Ralph A. O. Brown, and was paid off at Bombay, Dec. 31, 1868. On June 15, 1870, he was appointed to the Columbia, fitting at Sheerness for the East Indies, and returned in her to England and was paid off in May, 1874. He was employed in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, from Sept. 18, 1874, until promoted to commander, Aug. 18, 1876. He has been employed since Sept. 29, 1877, as inspecting officer of the Yarmouth Coastguard division.

ENCOUNTER, Capt. the Hon. A. D. S. Denison, remained at Hong Kong by last advices. "We are informed that the success of the Dramatic and Nigger Club on board this ship is due to Lieut. Bayly and Mr. Pratt, the popular and favourite boatswain, and Friday's entertainment was the fruit of their meritorious exertions to provide amusement for their shipmates."—Hong Kong Daily Press.

FALCON, Com. Bouverie F. Clark, having paid a visit to Prince's Islands, returned to Constantinople before the departure of the last mail.

FANTÔME, Com. W. C. Karslake, was expected at Port Royal about August 7 from her cruise to the Bahamas and Port-au-Prince.—Hampshire Telegraph.

FAWN, Capt. W. J. L. Wharton, was at Constantinople when the mail left.

HIMALAYA, Capt. Harry W. Brent, with Lord and Lady Lytton and family on board, arrived at Gibraltar on Aug. 1, and after remaining at anchor for half an hour, proceeded on her voyage to England. The Himalaya will not touch at Lisbon, and may therefore be expected to reach Spithead this evening. This ship has lost three of her officers during her present voyage, death in each case having been caused by the excessive heat. Letters received from Suez, dated July 21, announce the death of the paymaster, Mr. John R. Cowley.

IRIS, Capt. Edward H. Seymour, arrived at Malta on Sunday last, and proceeded on August 4 to join the Fleet at Palermo.

IRON DUKE, Capt. Henry F. Cleveland, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Coote, grounded off Okosivi Island during a fog, but was got off on Aug. 1, the French and Russian Admirals rendering all the assistance in their power. Okosivi is in the Japan division of the China station, and lies off the south-west coast of Yesso, not far from Hakodate.

KINGFISHER, recently built at Sheerness, has made a preliminary trial of her engines and machinery over the measured mile at the Maplin Sands, before being commissioned. The ship was in charge of a staff of the Medway Steam Reserve officials, and everything was found to answer very satisfactorily.

MIRANDA, Capt. the Hon. E. S. Dawson, was undocked at Devonport Yard on Monday morning, and proceeded at once outside the Breakwater for a short steam trial. She afterwards anchored in the Sound to prepare for a full-power trial, which was made on Wednesday, when a speed of something over eleven knots was obtained. She will now complete fitting out for the Australian station.

NORTHAMPTON, Capt. John A. Fisher, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir F. Leopold M'Clintock, K.T., was at Halifax on July 16, and was about to start on a cruise to the New Brunswick and Nova Scotian coasts. During the absence of the Admiral, the Blanche was to remain at Halifax as senior officer's ship.

ORONTES, Capt. R. G. Kinahan, sailed on Wednesday from Portsmouth with reinforcements for India.

OSBORNE, Com. Lord Charles Beresford. On Wednesday evening the Government tug Camel left Portsmouth at seven o'clock, with a number of dockyard officers on board, for the purpose of witnessing the display of fireworks at Cowes by the Royal Yacht Squadron. Owing to the crowded condition of the harbour and roadstead, it was very difficult for the tug to pick its way. When near the Osborne, on board of which were the Prince and Princess of Wales and children, the Camel was caught by the strong tide, and in endeavouring to extricate herself she backed against the yacht, injuring the beautiful figure-head, destroying the floral embellishments, carrying away the string and steps of the accommodation ladder, and running foul of the buoy. Though the accident naturally caused considerable alarm on board, the damage was found to be small.

PHILOMEL, Com. H. R. Berners, has returned to Aden, after a fruitless search for the Queen Victoria, which was supposed to have been wrecked in the neighbourhood of Cape Guardafui.

POLYPHEMUS. The construction of this armour-plated torpedo ram is being watched with the greatest interest at Chatham Dockyard. The novelty of the design and the great care with which every detail of construction is being worked out makes it a little doubtful to forecast when she will be quite ready for launching, but the exact date will be fixed before long The engines are to be fitted on board before the launch The boilers, ten in number, are in their place. They are of the locomotive type, the shells being made of steel, and the interior parts of Bowling iron. As compared with ordinary marine boilers of the same steaming capacity, the difference in size and weight is exceedingly striking.

Raleigh, Capt. Charles T. Jago. A telegram has been received announcing the arrival of the Raleigh at Wellington, New Zealand, on July 28, and she was to sail about the 7th inst. for England.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Ranger has been for a six hours' run over the measured mile at the Maplin Sands. The engines and machinery were found to answer satisfactorily in every particular.

Spartan, Capt. E. Tracey, arrived at Sheerness on Saturday morning. She is being dismantled in the dockyard preparatory to being paid out of commission, when the crew will be granted the usual leave of absence.

Superb, ordered to be immediately brought forward for commission at Chatham, will, it is expected, go to the Mediterranean. This will be her first commission since she was purchased from Turkey.

Tamar, Capt. Thomas Royse, will embark troops for Malta this day, and leave forthwith. She will also take out a new crew for the Condor, which will be recommissioned at Malta, and will convey some torpedo launches to Gibraltar and Malta, for the defence of those places.

Thalia is being converted at Devonport into a sort of man-of-war transport for the conveyance of blue-jackets and Marines to the China station. She will be completed early in January. It is an open question whether the cost of converting this ship for such a service is a judicious expenditure. She has the appearance of a frigate without the fighting power, although she carries a crew of 235 men, and she will make but poor work steaming against the monsoon; in fact, as an efficient ship-of-war, whether for the protection of commerce or otherwise, she will be almost useless.—Portsmouth Times.

Tourmaline, Capt. R. P. Dennistoun, was due at Port Royal about the middle of July, from Montego Bay.

Vigilant, Lieut. and Com. W. M. Annesley, arrived at Yokohama from Kobe on June 16.

Wye, Staff Com. Henry D. Sarratt, was ordered to to leave Sheerness on the 7th inst., and Devonport on the 10th, for Bermuda, Jamaica, Colon, and the Brazils. She will take 55 men for Jamaica and Colon, to be then conveyed across the Isthmus for the Pacific station, and 35 men for service at the Brazils. She is also to take any stores or parcels for the fleet that may be ordered. Upon arrival on the south-east coast of America, she will be retained to transfer stores from Rio to Monte Video, in consequence of the Admiralty having decided to abolish the naval store depôt at the former place. These orders have now been suspended, as the Wye is required to take Marines to Ireland.

The Admiralty have awarded medals for long service and good conduct to the following men:—Wm. Sutton, leading stoker, of the Malabar; Benjamin Simmonds, leading stoker, Malabar; Richard Daly, gunner's mate, Excellent; Wm. Morris, plumber, Excellent; Wm. Tamblin, armourer, Vernon; Geo. Rehbeck, captain's coxswain, Serapis; F. H. Dousbery, ship's corporal, Duke of Wellington; H. E. Williams, gunner's mate, Boscawen; Wm. Jones, plumber, Agincourt; Edward S. Jezzard, ship's corporal, Agincourt; Samuel Loveless, captain main-top, Ganges; Joseph Bailey, ship's steward, Implacable; Jeremiah Grayling, commissioned boatman, Coastguard; Michael Sullivan, boatman, Coastguard; Henry J. Walker, commissioned boatman, Coastguard; Henry J. Hughes, captain fore-top, Royal Naval Barracks; John Helson, boatswain's mate, Dryad.

At the last weekly meeting of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, held at the office, Hibernia Chambers, London Bridge, Capt. Vincent Budd, deputy-chairman, in the chair, as many as 1,385 necessitous widows and 1,810 orphans of seafaring men were awarded small grants of money, as annual relief for the current year, amounting in the aggregate to £4,171, being over £300 in excess of the last issue.

Replying to Mr. Parnell in the House of Commons on Monday, Mr. Shaw-Lefevre said: The funds of Greenwich Hospital are now devoted almost wholly in payment of a limited number of pensions to officers of various ranks, and of age pensions to many thousands of old seamen. It is not true that £4,000 a year is paid out of its funds to Sir Sydney Dacres as visitor; the sum so paid to him is only £434 a year. By the 15th clause of the Greenwich Hospital Act, 1865, the Admiralty are authorised to appoint an officer as governor and visitor of Greenwich Hospital. By an Order in Council the salary was fixed at £1,200 a year, and it was arranged that this should include half-pay. Consequently, Sir Sydney Dacres receives only the difference between £1,200 and his retired pay of £766. No one who is aware of Sir Sydney Dacres's long and distinguished services in the Navy will consider that £1,200 a year is more than an adequate reward, as compared with pensions and rewards in other branches of the public service.

The Espiègle, a 6-gun composite sloop, was launched at Devonport Dockyard on Tuesday afternoon. The keel of the Espiègle was laid on Sept. 23 last, and consequently she has only been ten months building. She is a vessel of 1,124 tons' displacement, built of steel and cased in wood, and is also sister-ship to the Phœnix and Miranda, which were launched last year at Devonport, the only difference being that in the latter two vessels the propeller cannot be hoisted up on deck, as is the case in both the Mutine and Espiègle. The ceremony of naming the vessel was performed by Mrs. Curme, the wife of Rear-Admiral C. T. Curme, Superintendent of the Dockyard; the Rev. J. H. Knapp, M.A., chaplain R.N., reading the usual form of prayer dedicated to this service. The Royal Marines band was in attendance, and after the ceremony an "at home" was given by Mrs. Curme, at the official residence of the Admiral-Superintendent.

THE INTERNATIONAL DEMONSTRATIVE SQUADRON.

The international Naval demonstration off the shores of Turkey has, we believe, been given up by most European Powers. Regarding the attitude of France, Le Temps says:—

> "We do not dispute England's right to interfere in Turkish affairs for the gratification of Mr. Gladstone's views. We cannot prevent the Powers more nearly connected with the Danubian territories than ourselves from prematurely reopening the Eastern Question, with all its dangers; but we mean to keep aloof from everything that may be likely to give rise to such complications. France returned from the Berlin Congress with empty hands. At the least, then, she should keep her hands free, that all her powers may be applied to the re-establishment of her own position. That is her plain and simple policy; and so necessary and natural is it that the organs of every party coincide in maintaining it, and any Minister disregarding it would run the risk of being overthrown, not in consequence of the nation's fears, but of its just and reasonable sentiments. The Journal de St. Pétersbourg has every reason to believe that the Porte has resolved on the cession of Dulcigno, thinking that this will prove more feasible than the cession of the territory mentioned in the April Convention. Proposals to this effect, adds the Journal, have already been formulated, evidently with the view to prevent the despatch of a combined Fleet. The Golos, hearing of Mr. Gladstone's illness, hastens to inform its readers that the English Turcophiles—a comprehensive title for all supporters of Lord Beaconsfield's foreign policy—'are undoubtedly at the present moment quietly rubbing their hands with satisfaction, at the idea that the illness of the Liberal Premier may keep him for a long time from taking part in the work of the Cabinet. If, however,' continues the Golos, 'they think that the illness of Mr. Gladstone can change the current of events in the East, they are very much mistaken. In the first place, the rest of the Liberal Cabinet may be relied on; but even were England to change her policy, it would scarcely have much influence on the events that are preparing. The impulse is already given, and Europe will not be lightly stopped.' But, in the event of a naval demonstration being made, after all, in the Mediterranean, seniority will, it is said, decide which admiral is to have the command over the allied squadron, to which, as the Pesther Lloyd pretends, Turkey herself will contribute four fine ironclads. Report speaks of a letter from Abeddin Pasha to President Grévy, in which the ancient alliance between France and Turkey is referred to, and France's good services and advice are asked for to help the Porte out of her present difficulties. This letter, it is said, has influenced M. de Freycinet's decision not to let General Thomasin's mission start for Greece."

THE ATALANTA.

The New York Herald publishes intelligence from St. John's, Newfoundland, stating that the barque The Girl of Devon, from Plymouth, has picked up, in latitude 46·12, and longitude 22·30, a large white painted figurehead, which the captain believes to be that of the training ship Atalanta. It bears evidence of a collision, and is the figure of a goddess three-quarters length, with a coronal fillet on the head. The robes flow loose and gracefully over the figure, and are gathered by a buckle above the knee. A few inches below the figure is truncated, and takes a fluent, wedge-like shape, where it entered the cutwater. During Saturday afternoon a telegram was received at Portsmouth from the Admiralty asking whether the description tallied with that of the figurehead of the Atalanta. Inquiries were instituted by the Admiral Superintendent, and the heads of the several departments were consulted.

We learn from the Admiralty that it appears to be certain, from the description which has been received at the Admiralty from the Governor of that colony, that it could not have belonged to H.M.S. Atalanta, whose figurehead differs in several important respects from that which has been found.

CHILI AND PERU.

As previously announced in these columns, a Chilian transport was last month destroyed in the harbour of Callao by a Peruvian torpedo-boat. A despatch from Panama, published in New York on Aug. 4, gives further details of this affair. According to advices from Callao to the 6th ult., it appears that the vessel destroyed was the Chilian transport Loa. The Peruvian torpedo-boat was disguised as a fruiterer. One hundred and fifty officers and men perished on board the Loa, forty only being saved.

SERVICE IN THE PERSIAN GULF.

Sir,—It was in 1871 that the present system of stationing men-of-war permanently in the Persian Gulf (to which you call attention in your last number) was first commenced. When the proposal was mooted in the previous year, it was pointed out that such an arrangement was quite unnecessary, and a counter-proposal was made to the effect that the ordinary naval duties of the Persian Gulf should (as had previously been the case) be carried out by two gunboats of the Bombay Marine, which are manned by natives, and that a man-of-war should be stationed in support at the more healthy station of Kurrachee. Kurrachee, being in telegraphic communication with the principal ports of the Gulf, the Resident could have summoned the ship in any emergency; whilst it would have been part of her duty to visit every port in the Gulf, and to show the white ensign where necessary during the cool season. By the adoption of this plan, equal efficiency with the present system would be maintained, whilst the health of our European crews would not suffer.—I am, Sir, &c., H.

THE NAVAL CHURCH SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the above Society was held last week at Portsmouth, Admiral A. P. Ryder, Commander-in-Chief, vice-president, in the chair. There was a good attendance of members. The annual report, which was adopted by the meeting, shows that the Society is very gradually gaining ground in the Royal Navy, and is attempting more practical work for the promotion of religion in men-of-war than in former years; thus, the Society is bringing out a manual of devotion specially adapted to the condition of a sailor's life afloat, and containing many good and practical hints as to conduct in times of trial and difficulty. A volume of prize essays upon "Promotion of Religion in Men-of-War" is in the press, and will comprise suggestions from men of widely different views and experiences, who have devoted their attention to the matter. Lectures on the same subject have been delivered, notably at the Church Congress, by two of the vice-presidents, viz., Admiral Ryder and Rev. Canon Scarth, and at the Royal Naval College by Rev. J. L. Robinson. At Portsmouth, the Vicar of Portsea (Rev. E. Jacob) has taken much interest in the Society, and has given valuable assistance. Meetings for Bible-reading and other devotional purposes have been held at Portsmouth, Plymouth, and on board some of her Majesty's ships. One member, a lady whose death has been a great loss to the Society, has done good work among the boys of H.M.S. St. Vincent, meeting them at the Soldiers' Institute on their day ashore, and affording them much kindly personal influence, and strengthening their home associations and good fellowship in its best sense. The following is the list of the officers elected for the ensuing year, viz.:—President, the Chaplain of the Fleet; vice-presidents, Admiral A. P. Ryder, Rev. Professor T. Main, and Rev. Canon J. Scarth. Council—Rev. T. Ashe, chaplain, H.M.S. Excellent; Rev. G. Clemenger, chaplain, H.M.'s Dockyard, Portsmouth; Rev. O. Corfe, chaplain, Royal Naval Barracks, Sheerness; Rev. G. Carwithen, chaplain, Royal Marines; Rev. J. B. Harbord, Admiralty; Rev. E. Jacob, Vicar of Portsea; Rev. F. Nickoll, chaplain, Haslar Hospital; Rev. J. Robinson, Royal Naval College; Rev. C. Tompkins, St. Jude's, Southsea; Rev. E. Williams, chaplain, Sheerness Dockyard; Rev. F. Davies, chaplain, H.M.S. St. Vincent; Rev. F. Lang, chaplain, H.M.S. Hector; Com. L. A. Beaumont, H.M.S. Excellent; Capt. H. Everitt, R.M.A., hon. secretary; Com. E. Ommanney, R.N.; Serjt. C. Oakley, R.M.A.; H. Shanks, Esq., secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, Plymouth; Capt. H. Swainson, R.N., hon. treasurer; C. Shapcote, Esq., Paymaster, R.N.; G. Tuck, Esq., Inspector of Machinery, R.N.; Mr. F. Webb, Schoolmaster, R.N., H.M.S. Excellent; Capt. T. Whale, R.M.L.I.; Lieut. R. Lowry, R.N., H.M.S. Cambridge; Lieut. H. May, R.N., H.M.S. Excellent; Lieut. H. Preedy, R.N., H.M.S. Assistance; Capt. W. Tucker, R.M.A.; G. Weeks, Esq., Engineer, R.N., H.M.S. Victoria and Albert; W. C. Symonds, captain fore-top, H.M.S. Excellent. The finances of the Society are not in a flourishing condition, and an appeal to the members was agreed upon. The matter of visiting the sick at Naval hospitals and on shore was discussed at the meeting, and it was agreed to endeavour to obtain facilities for members of the Society to visit sick comrades in hospitals and waterside parishes, under conditions which should guarantee the faithful performance of such duties, with due regard for the responsibility to proper authority. Alterations in the Society's Manual were adopted, with a view to meet the difficulties of some who had taken exception to certain portions of the book.

The Royal Humane Society have awarded a silver clasp, the recipient having previously been awarded the silver medallion and afterwards a silver clasp, for two separate act of gallantry, to Gustavus Parkes, leading seaman of the Vestal, for saving C. Summers, of the same ship, who fell overboard while painting the ship's side off the Isle of Wight on July 6th, the vessel being under steam at the time. The bronze medallion of the society has been awarded to William M'Ghee, quartermaster of the Minotaur, for assisting to save William Davison, who fell overboard and became insensible, from striking against the anchor at Berehaven, Ireland, on the 30th May. The silver medallion has been voted to Captain the Hon E. Fremantle, commanding the Invincible, for jumping from the bridge of the ship to the rescue of a seaman who fell overboard on the 7th February, while on a voyage from Alexandria to Abankie Bay, the ship at the time steaming at the rate of seven knots an hour.

The directors of the London and District Omnibus Company have issued their prospectus, inviting subscriptions for 10,000 shares of £10 each. The directors state that their main object in establishing the company is not purposely to compete for the traffic of other omnibuses, but to supply an improved class of vehicles, well ventilated, and better lighted by day and night, improved facilities for reaching outside seats, with an ingenious contrivance for keeping those seats dry. Should the directors succeed with the improvements suggested, there can be no doubt but that their omnibuses will be largely patronised, and that a boon will be conferred on the public at large.

Rowland's Kalydor cools and refreshes the face and hands of all exposed to the hot sun and dust, and eradicates all Freckles, Tan, Sunburns, Stings of Insects, and Cutaneous Eruptions; gentlemen will find it allays the smarting and irritation of the skin after shaving.

Rowland's Macassar Oil prevents the hair falling off during hot weather. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. Ask for Rowland's articles.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "Perfected" Oil. Sold only in capsuled imperial ½ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

ARMY MEDICAL SCHOOL.

The summer session of the Army Medical School at Netley terminated on Monday, when, after the preliminary business of winding up the session had been concluded, the prizes at the disposal of the senate were handed to the successful competitors, before a large assembly of officers and visitors, by Sir C. K. Pearson, K.C.M.G., C.B., Governor of the Royal Victoria Hospital and Commandant of the station of Netley. Mr. J. Simpson, candidate for her Majesty's Indian Medical Service, carried off the Herbert prize, which was founded in memory of Lord Herbert, to whose exertions the school mainly owes its existence, together with the Martin gold medal, which was established to commemorate the late Sir Ranald Martin, who also took part in originating the institution, and, as a member of its senate, for many years exhibited a very active interest in its welfare. Mr. C. P. Lukis, also of the Indian Medical Service, gained the Parkes medal. This distinction is given to the probationer who shows the most merit in practical hygiene, the branch of study at the school which the distinguished Professor Parkes conducted from its opening up to the time of his lamented decease in the year 1876. After delivering the prizes, Sir C. Pearson gave an interesting and lengthened address on the position and responsibilities of officers of the medical department in the different branches of the Military Services, which was listened to with marked interest by every one present on the occasion. Sir J. Fayrer, K.C.S.I., Physician to the Council of India, and Mr. MacCormac, the eminent surgeon of St. Thomas's Hospital, also addressed some appropriate remarks to the assembled probationers, and the proceedings shortly afterwards terminated. The visitors then adjourned to the Army Medical Staff mess-room, where luncheon was served. The following are the names of the successful surgeons on probation for her Majesty's Army in order of merit, and with the number of marks obtained by them. In the instances of these gentlemen the marks gained at Netley are not counted, and they retain the places taken by them in the competitive examination at London :—

THE SWEDISH SYSTEM OF GYMNASTICS.

SIR,—From times remote a lively intercourse (in an intellectual as well as in a material sense) has constantly been kept up between England and the Scandinavian countries. Kindred ties, both as regards religion, race, language, and an inborn spirit of freedom, having tended to maintain and strengthen the interest felt by the hardy Norseman in his no less hardy Anglo-Saxon brother, it is but natural that England and Englishmen are well known in the far North, and that English sports, especially of late, should have more and more attracted our attention, and become to some extent naturalised with us, or at least have served as models to us Northerners in the same way as they have done to other nations. Shooting, hunting, fishing, and skating have always been national sports in Sweden, and are likely to remain so, as long as our forests, lakes, and rivers exist. Freely admitting that we have borrowed much from England which relates to the various branches of sailing, boating, racing, coursing, &c., we can still claim perfect independence as regards gymnastics and fencing, for which we have a system of our own, entirely distinct from those of all other countries. Some of your readers, we have thought, might, therefore, possibly take an interest in the following general description of Swedish gymnastics. The Swedish system of gymnastics was founded by Professor P. H. Ling, a man of rare intellect and varied gifts, who died in 1839. Sweden, as far as I know, was the first country in Europe where instruction in gymnastics became obligatory by a law passed in 1820, since when they have been constantly developed, till, at the present time, there is not a single State college or school in Sweden without one or more instructors in gymnastics. Such is now, also, the case with regard to all private educational establishments. The same system ("Ling's") is followed throughout the whole of Sweden, under the guidance and control of a Central Gymnastic Institute, where all instructors are trained. The latter are mostly officers in the Army or Navy, on account of the military exercises, target practice, and drilling, which also form an obligatory part of the education given in our public schools. The same system is likewise adopted by the private gymnastic societies and clubs, as well as by the Army and Navy in the training of their recruits. For this purpose about 40 subalterns, from various regiments, are every year ordered to undergo a two years' course of instruction at the Gymnastic Central Institute, which course embraces, both theoretically and practically, the study of gymnastics in connection with anatomy and physiology, orthopœdia, dissections, as well as gymnastics proper (pedagogic and curative), fencing (with the foil, broadsword, bayonet, and dagger), riding, &c. Only pupils from this establishment, after having passed their examinations, can obtain appointments as instructors of gymnastics. As individual strength or weakness does not depend so much upon the development or upon the condition of certain muscles, limbs, or parts of the human body, but more upon the right relations and proportions between all these parts, the chief feature of the Swedish gymnastic system also consists in a thoroughly harmonious training of the human body. It does not aim at turning out clever acrobats, but at a well-poised physical development of the whole body. A characteristic of Swedish gymnastics is the abundancy of "free-isolated" or "free-standing" movements, as they are technically termed, that is to say, the gymnast is put through a series of flexions, tortions, extensions, and contractions, comprising and calling into action, successively or simultaneously, every group of muscles in the whole frame. These movements are executed by word of command, and without the assistance of any kind of apparatus whatever. A course of gymnastics in Sweden always commences with a series of these "isolated" movements for the head, neck, legs, arms, and trunk, as a kind of introduction; then follow movements by grasping an apparatus called the "ribstool," a kind of ladder or ribbed contrivance, firmly attached to the wall, which are intended to raise and expand the chest, and to make the back flexible. More ordinary movements follow next, acting upon the arms and the upper extremities, such as practice on the trapeze, planks, and ropes, rope climbing, ladder exercise, &c. The gymnasts are then drawn up in line, to go through another series of "isolated" movements, chiefly acting upon the lower limbs. Afterwards, with the use of the "ribstool" benches, &c., other movements are gone through, which strengthen the muscles of the lower parts of the trunk, the stomach, back, and sides. Then, "free-standing" movements in ranks, consisting principally in powerful exercise of the trunk and legs, followed by slow and quick march and running (not at racing pace), during a certain short time. Arm movements now follow (raising the body by one or both arms); and lastly, leaping and jumping in different ways over ropes (free leaping), over the horse (lengthwise and crosswise), somersaults, and vaulting. The lesson concludes with some "free-standing" movements in ranks, calculated to regulate and modify the action of the respiratory and circulatory organs. These arrangements thus enable any healthy youth or man to partake in such exercises, each according to the measure of his own strength, and they also allow of the simultaneous training of large numbers (100 or 200 at the time) by one single instructor. Great importance is attached to the order in which these exercises are gone through, especially as regards very young persons. Strong movement, accelerating the action of the heart, ought not to succeed each other immediately, but should alternate with movements which sooth this organ, i.e., draw the blood towards the extremities. Much value is set upon leaping, vaulting, and jumping, because they combine the application of almost all other movements, at the same time requiring a perfect control over the body; they also tend to develope moral qualities such as the fearlessness and bravery, whilst they brace the spirit and nerves. Such exercises, may, therefore, truly be called the "soul" of gymnastics, and all others the "body." Every exercise and movement should have its definite object, and looking upon gymnastics in that light, as we Swedes do, it accounts for the corrective qualities of the Swedish system, which aims at correcting those very faults or imperfections of the body, which arise from one-sided exercise, occupation, or work. As regards outdoor games, Sweden, like most other countries, is a long way behind England. This, to some extent, can be accounted for by climatic causes, but, unfortunately, also by a recent school law, which so severely taxes the minds of the scholars with studies during the winter months that they never are at liberty during the few hours of daylight, and during the summer months the scholars have long vacations. Nevertheless, some fine national games which have long been known in Sweden still survive in some districts, amongst them some few of a difficult and peculiar kind, played with balls in the Island of Gottland, as well as wrestling and foot-racing in all forest and mountainous districts. In some towns also, our youths have of late commenced, and are frequently practising, football and other ball games. Foremost amongst all our pastimes we naturally count swimming and skating. As a rule, every schoolboy at fourteen can swim, and we may, therefore, without any exaggeration, assert that every educated Swede is a swimmer; but should there be any exception, he, as a rule, prefers not to mention what is an acknowledged deficiency in his physical education. Amongst the rural population, swimming is also a very common attainment, owing, no doubt, to the extensive sea-boards of the country, and its numerous inland lakes and rivers. Skill in skating may be said to be general all throughout the country, and in the North, sliding on a kind of snow-shoe ("skida") is also generally practised. The Swedish snow-shoe (a word which we must employ for want of a better) in no way resembles the Canadian, but is simply a strip of strong, flexible wood, some twelve or fifteen feet long, of the breadth of the foot, and pointed at both ends. It is fastened to the foot by a leather thong. The shoes are used when the snow lies deep, and is covered with a kind of icy crust ("skara"), on which the wearer glides along in a kind of sliding walk, propelled and assisted by a pointed staff or spike. Downhill this staff is but seldom used. During the last five years a constantly increasing interest has been taken in athletic societies, and gymnastic clubs have been formed in nearly all towns of any importance, and are increasing in numbers every year. Several members of the Stockholm Gymnastic Club, which was founded five years ago, are about to visit England in August to study sports and athletics in their proper home, hoping thereby to gain some useful experience and knowledge. In return they will only be too glad to exhibit the Swedish gymnastic system, such as it is now carried out throughout Sweden and Norway, to enable those numerous classes of the British public who take an interest, professionally or as amateurs, in gymnastics, fencing, and athletics, to become acquainted with that system.—I am, &c.,

Stockholm, June, 1880.

"British Officer" writes :—"I have noticed in the Army and Navy Gazette, from time to time, articles crying down the extravagant style of living of officers in her Majesty's Army. In a recent number I saw another article on the same subject. It appears to me that the author of it does not quite take a correct view of the case. For instance, he states that the private means required by officers is so very much larger now than was required, say 50 years ago. Surely that is accounted for by the depreciation in the value of money, a sovereign now only going about as far as 15s. went in those days. Also, he states that uniform and mufti cost less now than then. I think, if he were to ask London tailors, with whom officers are almost forced to deal, owing to the difficulty of finding a country tailor who can make uniforms fit properly (most probably from want of practice), their prices would considerably astonish him. Then again, he says, commanding officers should not allow extravagance in their messes. I think he will find, on inquiry, that most, if not all, discourage it as much as possible. It is a very difficult part for commanding officers to play, for how can they lay down a hard-and-fast law what their officers are to eat or drink, or how they are to spend their money. Surely an officer is entitled to spend his money as he likes as much as a civilian is. Therefore, he can only discourage extravagance and encourage economy by example and precept, but not by laying down any law. If Government wish to help officers, they can easily do so in a variety of ways, one of the most important of which would be by furnishing their messes and quarters, the furnishing of which costs them a very large sum annually. It would repay Government in the long run, since it would not be put to the expense of carrying so much baggage about as is now allowed and carried by regiments. Another way would be by not moving troops from one quarter to another as often as is now done, which is a fruitful source of expense to the unfortunate British officer; and were my letter not too long already I might mention many others. But I hope the above will show you that the cost of living in the Army is not altogether due to the extravagance of the British officer."

The testimonial subscribed for by the ladies of the Cape Colony was presented to Brigdr.-Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., on the 6th ult., by Lady Frere, in the presence of a number of the contributors. The testimonial was accompanied by an appropriate address from the fair donors. In handing the shield to the recipient, Lady Frere said :—"Sir Evelyn Wood, I have great pleasure in complying with the request that has been made to me by several ladies of this colony, that I should hand this shield to you on their behalf." Sir Evelyn responded in a suitable speech.

Reviews.

SOME MAGAZINES.

In the August number of Macmillan, there appears a highly important paper on "The Ironclad and Gun of the Future." For many years this subject has served as the battle-field for mere experimentalists, as well as men possessed of undoubted scientific knowledge, and still the contention rages with all its pristine vigour. There can be no doubt that very great changes are expected in maritime warfare, and that the question now treated by Gen. Hutchinson demands prompt and serious attention. In performing his task, he avoids, as far as possible, the use of technical terms,—a course which would not be necessary if the article was only intended for those who are professionally conversant with armoured ships and gunnery. Having observed upon the successive victories won by guns over metal plates, the consequent efforts made by naval constructors to devise a form for his ship that would baffle the attack, and having set forth in detail several curious alterations that have been already made, Gen. Hutchinson invites particular attention to the radical change recently proposed by Col. Hope, V.C. His contention is that guns can be manufactured as efficient in every respect as at present, and yet be only one-fifth of the weight. Col. Hope offers the most striking evidence of his own conviction as to the soundness of this newly developed theory by offering to bear all the expenses attendant on the requisite trials, should the result show that he is wrong. To use his own words :—"I have recently submitted to the War Office and the Admiralty an offer to construct guns for the use of the Navy of three kinds. The smallest is 6½ tons, guaranteed to beat the 38-ton gun in every particular, effecting a saving of 80 per cent. in weight, 60 per cent. in money, and from 90 to 95 per cent. in time of construction, or not to be paid for. The second is a 16-ton gun guaranteed to beat the 80-ton gun in every particular, or not to be paid for. The third is a 28½-ton, guaranteed to equal an Armstrong 150-ton gun or not to be paid for. The details of Colonel Hope's invention have not become generally known, but it is evident from the little weight of the guns that they must be very short, which, in many ways, is an immense advantage. It is also supposed that when the barrel of the guns is reduced to the requisite size, there will be no rifleing, but instead thereof a small spur will be fixed in the place where the rifleing would otherwise be, this spur to nick in the projectile in such a way that when the powder charge exploded, and the pressure was brought to bear upon the shot or shell, the latter should catch against the notch, and so gain a vertical rotatory motion, which would serve all the purposes of rifling. Admitting the advantage to be gained by the shortness of the guns, Col. Hutchinson offers the following comment :—"We must, however, anxiously wish that his projectiles may not have spiral rotation. If they have, whatever may be their power against upright armour, the assertion will be persistently made that neither his guns nor the guns of any country, as long as such rotation is adhered to, will be able to cope with the coming strangely-formed Leviathans of the deep, all reason seems to show that recourse must be had to vertical rotation. The struggle of the guns will no longer be with armour fixed vertically, but with one fixed almost horizontally, which points to a contest of vertical rotation without rifling versus spiral rotation with rifling." No matter what may be the results, the proposition made by Col. Hope is of sufficient importance to call for practical trials as to the merits of his invention. There are several other articles in Macmillan deserving of attention.

The August number of the United Service Magazine contains several articles connected with military and naval affairs quite worthy of attention. The concluding chapter of "With the Irregulars in the Zulu War" brings matters to an amusing close; a "Retired Officer" furnishes an abstract of the history of "Her Majesty's 11th Regiment of Infantry." There is also a paper on "Collisions at Sea," by Lieut. Schroeder, U.S.N.; one on "War-Office Regulations," by Gen. Le Poer Trench; a rather curious article under the imposing title, "The Knell of the Ironclads," which is a description of an invention by Mr. Fleus, that will enable any one to live under water without fresh air from the surface; in fact, to become an aquatic animal which may, in progress of time, be the means of destroying the largest ironclad afloat. The article, however, in Colburn which will attract most attention is entitled, "Lieut.-Gen. Stannus, C.B., and the Horse Guards." It chiefly consists of a lengthened detail of the brilliant services of Lieut.-Gen. Stannus, and something resembling an indictment against the executive department in Pall Mall, the Horse Guards, Gen. Troup, and finally the Commander-in-Chief, for conduct in reference to that officer which amounted to harsh injustice, and resulted in destroying his prospects in life, notwithstanding the high reputation he had gained in his profession. If the reader be sufficiently curious to make himself acquainted with the particulars of the case, he had better study the article in Colburn so that he may be able to form an opinion as to whether there is any justification for the charges made.

CASSELL AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.—Nothing requiring particular notice appears in Cassell's publications for August. They all afford excellent reading.

Amusements.

Favoured by weather which, mingling sunshine with showers, equally served the interests of those who provided indoor and outdoor entertainments, the Bank Holiday last Monday proved profitable to all classes of caterers. The CRYSTAL PALACE had 40,179 visitors, but at the ALEXANDRA PALACE the total reached 107,852, the greatest number ever paying on one day to any place of public entertainment. Never, so far as the theatres are concerned, have holiday-makers in August had such an abundant supply of amusement, and the quantity of attractions offered attained a higher standard of quality than usual.

The new sensational and spectacular drama of "The World," with which DRURY LANE has commenced an autumnal season eight weeks in advance of the customary period, is an excellent piece of its kind, crowded with incidents, yet having a well-developed story that can be clearly comprehended by the remotest spectator, even if unable to catch the full significance of the dialogue. The authors, Messrs. Paul Meritt, Henry Pettitt, and Augustus Harris have succeeded in the difficult task of concocting a dramatic pudding which is nearly all plums, and which, nevertheless, affords most substantial fare. The murderous device of the arch-scoundrel Thomasson, who invented a machine worked by clockwork to explode at a particular moment, is adopted by a villainous Jew at the Cape, to obtain a heavy insurance on some worthless pebbles he has put on board ship as a freight of valuable diamonds. The audience see the vessel destroyed in this manner, witness the sufferings of a few passengers who are tossed about on a frail raft, and hear, at the refreshment tables of the Westminster Aquarium, a murder deliberately planned by a treacherous brother, who only escapes the crime of fratricide by killing the wrong man. Picturesque scenery by Messrs. Emsden and Cuthbert, associated with some striking mechanical effects, and some excellent acting by Miss Helen Barry, Miss Fanny Josephs, Miss Fanny Broughton, Mr. William Rignold, Mr. Harry Jackson, and Mr. Charles Harcourt secured the success of a drama which seems likely to have a long career. Mr. Augustus Harris, who takes a prominent part in the performance, has proved himself an excellent stage-manager.

An encouraging reception was given by a well-filled house to Mr. Dion Boucicault's new comedy, called "The Bridal Tour," produced at the HAYMARKET on Monday night. It is in brisk and brightly-written dialogue, however, rather than in the complexities of a singularly intricate plot, that audiences will take the most interest. An excellent cast secures for every character the most effective interpretation. Mrs. John Wood, as the elder of the two brides, once again delights the Haymarket auditory by a display of genuine comic acting, thoroughly natural, as well as eminently artistic. Mr. H. Beckett, who made his first appearance in London as the naval captain who becomes her husband, is an American comedian of unobtrusive drollery, whose manner recalls Mr. John S. Clarke. The more romantic couple are well played by Miss Gerard and Mr. H. B. Conway. Miss Winifred Emery and Mr. J. G. Grahame pleasantly represent the married pair who have formed a clandestine union, Mrs. Alfred Mellon gives a graphic portraiture of a starched old maid, and Mr. Howe, warmly welcomed back to his old quarters, characteristically depicts the old lawyer entrusted with all the family secrets. A charming scene of a rustic villa, with the sea in the distance, has been painted for the comedy by Mr. Walter Hann.

The COVENT GARDEN Promenade Concerts are nightly thronged, and the popularity of the form of entertainment usually supplied by the Messrs. Gatti for eight seasons in succession would appear to be increasing. The band comprises more than 100 performers, all highly-skilled instrumentalists, and who recognise in Mr. F. H. Cowen a thoroughly efficient and pleasantly undemonstrative conductor. Miss Bessie Richards, as the pianoforte soloist, Mr. Howard Reynolds, the admirable cornet-player, and such accomplished vocalists as Madame Antoinette Sterling, Miss Mary Davies, and Mr. Lloyd, give variety to the programme. The English night, set apart for Friday, is signalised by the addition to the singers of Miss Orridge, Mrs. Osgood, Mr. Frank Boyle, and Mr. Maybrick. The decorations and draperies are in excellent taste, and as usual, the stage, stalls, and pit, are levelled and thrown into one vast area with the capacious orchestra erected in the centre.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, now occupied by "Haverly's American United Mastodon Minstrels," is also nightly thronged. The songs, rendered in a highly effective manner by these vocalists, are new to this country, and the interspersed colloquies are more humorous and refined than usual. The entire representation gives a faithful portraiture of the amusements and eccentricities of negro life. The evolutions of the "Broadway Squad" are remarkable for drollery and precision, and the banjo performances are wonderfully clever. One man plays a solo with his left hand only, while swinging the instrument backwards and forwards, and the imitation of an old street-organ is singularly perfect. The company, forty-five in number, thoroughly deserved the cordial greeting received on the opening night, and the enterprise seems likely to be remunerative.

The LYCEUM will be reopened about the middle of September with an elaborate revival of "The Corsican Brothers," introducing some novel ghost effects. The summer season at the ROYALTY terminates next week.

The Shanghai correspondent of the Novoe Vremya gives the following particulars as to the strength of the Chinese forces. According to him, the Chinese Fleet, though in process of formation, has not as yet any actual existence, numbering only 5,000 sailors and 260 guns. The largest vessel is the corvette Yang-Woo, armed with 11 large guns; but it is said that she is not fit to take the sea, and that the best ships are 8 gunboats, armed with very good steel guns. His description of the Chinese Army is that it consists of two distinct sections, the first being composed of Mongols and Tartars, and the second of Chinese and other nationalities of the Empire. The Tartars are looked upon as the best support of the Government and of the reigning dynasty, and form a sort of body-guard, upon which reliance can be placed in any emergency. This part of the army is divided into eight corps, which are quartered in eight of the principal towns, together with their families, and form a sort of military colonies for the maintenance of order. The correspondent adds that, according to the best information he can procure, the Chinese army numbers 850,000 men, inclusive of the Tartar contingent, and is, therefore, much inferior in strength as well as in discipline to that of Russia. Another account, recently published in St. Petersburg, would make the Chinese fleet number two frigates, one corvette, three transports, one or two steamers, and fifty gunboats, with 6,195 men and 257 guns. The Japanese Fleet is also said to be composed of one ironclad corvette, two wooden corvettes, six sloops, two yachts, nine gunboats, one sailing schooner, in all twenty-three ships, with 1,398 men and 174 guns.

ZOEDONE.—OHNE PHOSPHOR, KEIN GEDANKE.—There has long been a desire to obtain a sparkling and agreeable beverage combining sustaining and invigorating qualities without intoxicating effects. This want is now, in every respect, supplied by

ZOEDONE, a non-alcoholic nutrient Tonic Beverage, which will be found invaluable in all cases of mental or physical strain, while its refreshing properties and pleasant flavour render it a delicious drink for daily use.

ZOEDONE is recommended by the Faculty. Dr. Simpson says:—"Zoedone contains two of the most important elements of the human organism, viz., phosphorus and iron, in a state easily assimilable, supplying exactly what is required where any extraordinary waste of tissue has been induced—a condition too common in this competitive age."

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company was formed for the purpose of acquiring the business carried on by Messrs. Kopf and Company, Agar Street, Charing Cross, and Walworth, consisting of the manufacture and sale of extracts of meat and consolidated food.

It having become necessary to obtain larger premises in a more suitable manufacturing locality, the Company have secured such premises on very advantageous terms, and as soon as the necessary machinery, now being fixed, is in working order, the Company will not only be able to execute the orders now in arrear, but to meet the requirements of the increase of the business.

The Company's products are now extensively used, not only throughout the United Kingdom, but also in India, Africa, the Colonies, &c.

Testimonials have been received from the highest quarters, including officers in command of her Majesty's Forces at the seats of war in India and Africa.

A First Prize Gold Medal was awarded to this Company at the Sydney International Exhibition of 1879 for "Extracts of Meat and Nutritious Preparations Generally."

Full Prospectuses, giving further information as to the operations and prospects of the Company, together with testimonials, &c., can be obtained at the Offices of the Company and at the Bankers.

Application for the above remaining Shares can be made by letter, addressed to the Secretary, by giving the name, address, rank or occupation, and stating the number of Shares required, accompanied by a deposit of 25s per share.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The main object of this Company is to establish a regular service of Omnibuses of the most improved construction on the best Metropolitan thoroughfares, including many important new routes.

The passenger traffic of the Metropolis has recently so much increased, that the London General Omnibus Company, Limited, now carries more passengers and pays a much higher dividend than before the Metropolitan Railways were opened or Tramways introduced. That Company pays regular dividends of 12½ per cent., besides adding many thousands annually to its large reserve fund, which now amounts to more than £100,000. Numerous omnibuses in private hands are said to be even more remunerative.

The Company will provide the most improved two and three-horse vehicles, being better lighted by day and night, having lower steps, easier seats, with wider space between them, superior ventilation, improved facilities for reaching outside seats, with an ingenious mechanical arrangement for keeping those seats always dry, wheels of the best construction, and all other important known improvements.

It is important that the demand of the public for omnibuses equally commodious, well ventilated, and cleanly, should be speedily met—a demand which the present owners of omnibuses cannot meet without an enormous sacrifice of the capital already invested in the older-fashioned rolling stock.

A quicker service of the improved vehicles for two and three horses will be established on a number of routes, among which that between the Mansion House and Charing Cross, viâ the Thames Embankment, may be instanced. This route can be extended to Victoria Station and Knightsbridge. Many other important routes through the Metropolis are at present unworked.

The following returns of passengers carried annually by a few of the Companies show the marvellous modern growth of the London passenger traffic:—

London General Omnibus Company, Limited	54,340,000
The Metropolitan Tramways	54,221,000
North London Railway	31,489,000

	Amt. paid up.	Price.	Prem. per ct.
Compagnie Générale des Omnibus de Paris	20	50	150

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—This cooling medicine has the happiest effect when the blood is overheated and a tendency to inflammatory action is set up in the system; one pill taken shortly before dinner does away with the indigestion, fulness, and flatulency—indications of a weak stomach, or disordered liver. A few Pills taken at bedtime act as alteratives and aperients; they not only relieve the bowels, but regulate every organ connected with them, overcome all acrid humours, and encourage a free supply of all the secretions essential to our well-being. Holloway's Pills thoroughly cleanse and perfectly regulate the circulation, and beget a feeling of comfort in hot climates and high temperatures, which is most desirable for preservation of health.

PROSPECTUS.

The want of comfortable accommodation in London, with living on an equality with that of a regimental mess, and at economical rates, have always been felt by Officers of the Services. This it is now intended to supply, both for temporary use, and also in the style of a residential club, so that Shareholders may retain private rooms or suites of rooms, with good attendance, and the use of general dining, drawing, club, smoking, and other rooms, while they may be either boarded at very moderate rates, or obtain their meals as required in club fashion, and at charges framed from those adopted by successful public caterers.

The Army and Navy Hotel is established for the purpose of these requirements, and is intended for the use of the public, as well as of the shareholders, priority being in all cases given to the latter.

The rooms of the hotel will be plainly yet substantially furnished, avoiding all the glitter which, while adding to the expense, does not add to the comfort of the visitor.

Baths of every description, including salt water, will be obtainable in the Hotel.

Drawing-rooms for ladies and billiard rooms will form an attractive feature in the establishment.

The reading-rooms will be supplied with the leading daily and weekly papers, and all English and the best foreign Service journals will be taken in and filed, for the convenience of shareholders.

A commodious smoking-room will be attached to the house, and particular attention will be paid to the cigars and tobacco purchased by the Company.

Shareholders will be allowed the use of the smoking, reading, and writing rooms, thus providing all the accommodation of a club, without any annual subscription.

Suitable wines, and those of the finest vintages, will be laid down, and care will be taken to lower the prices of the wine list to within a fractional difference of store prices. No charge will be made for corkage.

The cuisine will be under the superintendence of experienced French and English cooks, and whilst bachelors will find all the advantages of a mess, married officers will not miss the comforts of home.

A house dinner of six courses will be served from six to eight p.m., at a very moderate charge, in club fashion, at separate tables.

Special facilities will be afforded to the families of officers proceeding to or returning from abroad, and, if desired, their travelling arrangements can be conducted by trustworthy agents.

Arrangements will be made for a service of small omnibuses to the principal railway stations; on receipt of telegraphic notice, these would be sent to meet any train.

The furnishing to shareholders of carriages, open or closed, park hacks, &c., for the day, week, or season, will form an adjunct to the hotel.

Special rates will be introduced for servants' board and lodging.

No charge will be made for attendance; all servants of the hotel will be liberally paid, and visitors are not required to make any douceur.

A staff of commissionaires will be attached to the hotel.

A post and telegraphic office will be established in the building, and arrangements will be made by which visitors may obtain railway tickets to all parts of the world without leaving the premises.

An efficient hairdressing establishment will be conducted on the premises.

Visitors who may wish to make the hotel their home during their stay will be received at a fixed and very moderate tariff. It is intended to fix the tariff at as low a rate as is compatible with the declaration of a dividend, and it is confidently anticipated that board and lodging can be provided for about the same cost as is now charged by other hotels for rooms alone.

Suites of residential chambers, for bachelors as well as married families, will form a distinctive feature in the Hotel. These will be let at a fixed and moderate rental, or the leases sold for long or short periods.

A list of "Regimental Exchanges Wanted" will be hung in the reading-room, and all the latest telegrams also exhibited.

It is intended to open the Hotel by May 1st, 1881.

Application for shares can be made in writing to the Secretary, by giving the name, address, rank or occupation, and the number of shares applied for.

Secretary (pro tem.)—C. HINTON MOORE.

Applications for Shares should be received not later than the 10th inst. from Town, and the 11th inst. from Country.

Printed and Published for the Proprietors, at the Office, No. 16 Wellington Street, Strand, London.—SATURDAY, Aug. 7, 1880. Letters on Business and Remittances should be made to Mr. RICHARD JAMES WOOD.

MR. RICHARD JAMES WOOD,

AT THE OFFICE, 16 WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, and NOT to the EDITOR of the ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

The subscription to the paper is 7s. per quarter, or 28s. per annum, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE, inclusive of postage to any part of the United Kingdom.

To India, £1 10s. 4d. per annum; viâ Brindisi, £1 14s. 8d.

It will be in September, when the joys of the Moors have been renewed in the stubble, ere the news of Roberts's relief of Candahar, if it be left to him to do the work, is made known to us in these Isles. Somehow or other, these relief operations are becoming unpleasantly frequent. But whatever be the result of the combined movements of Phayre and Roberts—and there ought to be no doubt of its nature—we think it is not at all premature to protest against the tendency to condemn all the Generals in any way engaged in the operations in Afghanistan, for what has occurred in Candahar. We do not say that Primrose is blameless, or that Burrows was skilful, but we do maintain that nothing that is known as yet suffices to justify the adverse judgments which have been pronounced upon them. It was a just and a generous plea for absent men which Sir Garnet Wolseley addressed in his speech at Fishmongers' Hall to the feelings and sense of his countrymen. And if that be true of Primrose and Burrows, how far more strongly does the consideration apply to Sir P. Haines and to Sir D. Stewart? The Government at home and the Government of India together have the supreme control of the situation, and Generals are but their instruments. Had Burrows fallen back when the Wali's men deserted, all India would have screamed with indignation; and had Primrose marched out of Candahar to his help, and left the citadel and stores at the mercy of the disaffected, he would have been exposed to the most serious charges of rashness and indiscretion. What is pretty evident, on the face of the record of operations in Afghanistan, is that the Generals were in profound ignorance of the strength of the enemy they had to deal with, but that they had no reason to look with any apprehension at the invasion of Ayoub Khan, even if they were perfectly acquainted with his strength. There was nothing in the disproportion of numbers in cavalry, infantry, and guns on the side of the enemy, when compared with our own, to cause uneasiness or alarm, if the history of the British Army in India is to be taken as a safe guide for the present or the future. There is not a campaign from the time of Plassey, Assaye, and Argaum, to the days of Napier and Gough, and down to more recent periods, in the Mutiny, which is not full of instances in which similarly-constituted and mixed forces of Sepoys and British troops were exposed to far greater numbers than they encountered near the Helmund, and came out of the trial victorious. That being so, there may be some ground for the belief that the force under Burrows was not skilfully handled; but there is no proof of it, for there may have been good reasons for his placing the 66th in the second, instead of the first, line, and it only remains to be considered whether he was in a position in which he could have, by tactical or strategical skill, escaped defeat at the hands of Ayoub Khan. There is no fact in our possession to enable us to express an opinion on that point, and we are not aware that other critics are any wiser. Some show of anger has been visible at the alarm evinced in Primrose's first despatch, but it would have needed a good deal of sang-froid to have enabled an officer in his position to appreciate the exact value of the stories of the fugitives who came into Candahar on the terrible morning after the defeat. The acts of Primrose appear to have been collected and sensible enough, when he was called upon to take measures for the defence of the position. All the reports which have come in respecting the losses and consequent disarrangement of the Heratees must be taken with caution and reserve, and we may dismiss the suspicions that there were "Russians" in the field to the category of baseless surmises, which are favoured in such moments of depression, to account for unexpected disaster. The battery of breech-loaders may have been acquired by the Herat people without Russian intervention. But if Ayoub Khan, taking heart of grace, should really sit down before Candahar, it is not likely that he can carry the place before the influence of the relieving columns is felt by his forces. It would be, indeed, a sad proof of incapacity and demoralisation, if Candahar could not hold out against the Heratees and their field guns, given any number of Russians and the breech-loading guns, for four weeks, should it be invested. There is, we fear, less reliance to be placed on the powers of resistance of the famous fortress of Khelat-i-Ghilzie, and the public must be prepared to hear that smaller posts, such as Ehaman, have fallen; but the probability is that Ayoub Khan will make the best of his way to Herat, across the Helmund, as soon as he is seriously menaced; and in that case there arises a great problem for our Government to solve,—a problem which is not only military and economical, but political. The mere relief of Candahar without a battle, and the unopposed return of Ayoub Khan to Herat, would, if followed by the retirement of the British troops from Candahar territory, be simply a disastrous acknowledgment of Imperial defeat. Combined with the evacuation of Afghanistan down to the Passes, such a movement would be taken by all India as a confession of impotence; and it must be remembered that the British Empire in India depends on the belief of two hundred and fifty millions of people that it is the strongest Power in the world. The very demonstration of the fact that, so far as they are concerned, their doubts are ill-founded, would be attended with the most serious consequences, and would involve a fearful strain on resources now nearly exhausted, and needing above all things repose and peace. To leave Ayoub Khan at Herat in full mastery of the situation would be mischievous, if not destructive; but it may be that he would come to terms, if we were able and willing to grant them without going to Herat. The possibility that to Herat we have to go for a time is not in any way agreeable, but still it is a possibility, and no Indian Secretary can say it must not be, without incurring a responsibility from which the country would speedily absolve him, and the Government to which he belonged. So that whatever Downing Street may decree may be wiped out by the work of a day. It is not the evacuation of Afghanistan, the retention of Candahar, the punishment of Ayoub, or the establishment of Abdurrahman, that are now the questions to be settled. There is a far larger one dependent on all these.

It will be remembered by those whose interest in Naval Finance carries them back to the days of Mr. Seely's crusades against Dockyard extravagance, that there was no point in his invectives against the Admiralty upon which he laid greater stress than on the insufficiency of the accounts rendered to Parliament, and the impossibility he found of ascertaining from the published figures the actual cost of building any particular ship. One of the chief obstacles to the attainment of this information lay, as he repeatedly pointed out, in the fact that however clearly the Admiralty might state the expenditure upon the actual wages of the shipwrights and smiths employed, and the cost of the materials used, they neglected to take any account of the charges incurred in the maintenance of their ship-building establishments. This was, he argued, and argued justly, as if a contractor in estimating the cost of his work, should charge the bare expense of the ship he was building, and should exclude from his reckoning any per-centage to cover the proportion of his office expenses, his own profit, and the interest upon the capital invested in dockyard shops, plant, or machinery, and in money advanced to carry on the work. Here it was evident that Mr. Seely had hit a blot in the Dockyard system of accounts, but the remedy was not so easy to find, and inquiry only showed the difficulty of solving the problem. The rough-and-ready method of distributing the whole cost of each dockyard pro ratâ over the work executed within the year, which was advocated by some reformers, who probably had an interest in proving the greater economy of shipbuilding by contract, was clearly unsound in principle, as the cost of maintaining a private shipbuilding establishment bears no analogy to that of a Royal dockyard. The objects for which they exist, and the duties they are required to discharge, differ in many material points, and any comparison of their relative cost which ignores these differences can only be fallacious and misleading. In the private yard everything is subordinated to the profit of the owner, and the one function which it has to discharge is the building and repair of ships. On the other hand, the Royal Dockyards do not aim at obtaining a profit upon their work, and that work extends far beyond the immediate necessities of constructions and repairs. Large sums of money lie invested in storehouses, and workshops, in machinery, and in manufactured articles kept in stock ready for emergency; and the resources of the establishments must be of such an elastic character as to be readily and largely developed, if occasion for them should arise, as in the event of a war, or, as we have recently seen, of the necessity for the rapid equipment of a "fleet of observation." Much, too, is required of a Royal dockyard in providing protection and maintenance for the harbours and anchorages adjacent. Hence, it happens that at this moment the difficult problem of apportioning what are called the indirect charges incident on shipbuilding and repairs in the dockyards remains to be solved, though for some years past an attempt has been made by the Admiralty to classify these expenses, and to compare the amount incurred in respect of them at each yard. Thus it is found that there are fifty-seven detailed heads under which these charges may be shown, and these are classified broadly in two divisions,—"Indirect expenses chargeable to ships and Services," and "Indirect expenses constituting national and harbour charges." In the Dockyard expense accounts for 1878-79, these indirect expenses are shown in great detail under each dockyard, and the amounts are carefully compared with the expenditure for labour and materials upon which they are incurred. Into these details it is obviously impossible for us to enter here, but there is one feature that seems well worthy of notice, and even to demand investigation; that is, the constant and, in some cases, very rapid tendency which these indirect expenses exhibit to increase. From these tables we find that the increase in labour and salaries amounts, on the aggregate of the five yards, to no less than 39·7 and 36·4 per cent., respectively. In this respect Portsmouth is the chief offender, the increase at that yard during the seven years being 67·7 per cent. on the labour, and 52·4 on the salaries included in indirect expenses. At Chatham the increase is 39·1 and 50·2 per cent.; at Sheerness, 20 and 14·5 per cent.; at Devonport, 29·4 and 24·6 per cent.; and at Pembroke, only 7 and 18·4 per cent., respectively. But Portsmouth appears to have achieved a still further unenviable distinction; for not only does it exhibit a larger increase in the labour and salaries apportioned to indirect expenses, but it is the only yard which shows a larger per-centage of increase upon labour on indirect charges than upon the total amount expended for labour during the year. Still, comparing the years 1872 and 1878, shows that at Chatham the total expenditure on labour increased during the seven years by 47·2 per cent., as against the increase of 39·1 on labour on incidental charges; at Sheerness, the two rates of increase were respectively 32·8 and 20 per cent.; at Devonport, 67·3 and 29·4 per cent.; at Pembroke, 41·5 and 7 per cent.; while at Portsmouth, they were 63·3 and 67·7 per cent., respectively. It is important to bear in mind this large simultaneous increase in the total amount spent on labour during this period, or it would be difficult not to charge the Dockyards with wanton extravagance in their establishment expenses; as it is, it is not easy to acquit them of it, when we examine some of the items upon which this increase arises. If, as Mr. Hamilton argues in his report, and as few will deny, "these charges should afford a test of economical management," it is impossible not to agree with his conclusion that "a careful scrutiny of them should yield valuable results;" and, at a time when the House of Commons watches jealously every penny spent upon the material well-being of the Service, it is of primary importance that nothing should be frittered away in preventable and unremunerative expenses.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh will shortly proceed to rejoin the Duchess of Edinburgh and family, and will, it is expected, spend a few weeks in Germany.

Rear-Admiral Stirling will, we hear, leave Esquimault on or about October 9 for a cruise to Honolulu, Tahiti, and Talcahuano, &c., and the opportunity will be taken, on this cruise, of distributing among the ships upon the station the drafts which will go out in the Wye.

Vice-Admiral Sir Reginald Macdonald, K.C.S.I., has been granted a month's leave of absence, and proceeds to the Continent.

Lieutenant-Colonel R. W. B. Hunt, Royal Marine Light Infantry, who commanded the battalion of Royal Marines sent out to South Africa for special service in the late Zulu war, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to her Majesty the Queen, in succession to Colonel H. W. Gwyn, promoted to Major-General.

Vice-Admiral Sir John C. D. Hay, Bart., has given notice in the House of Commons that, on the Report of Supply, he will call attention to the state of the Navy, especially with reference to shipbuilding, fitting-out, and other expenditure, and will move a resolution.

We are asked by a correspondent why the name of Mr. Cadwallader Palmer is still retained on the active list of Assistant-Paymasters when he has been unemployed for over five years? Mr. Palmer holds the office of Examiner of Naval Accounts at Calcutta under the Indian Government, and we presume the Admiralty is of opinion that, although not paid out of the Navy Estimates, he may be looked upon as still serving, though not afloat.

President Grévy, at Cherbourg, is only repeating the part played by President Bonaparte when he visited the Fleet in 1850, but he is not likely to go on to a coup d'état, nor is he at all the man to arouse the enthusiasm of the French Navy, which, indeed, the late Emperor failed to get up to fever-point.

Sub-Lieutenant Edward Shortland has, we regret to hear, been compelled to go upon half-pay for a time owing to ill-health. We hope that this will not be allowed to interfere with this officer's promotion, should any sub-lieutenants be advanced while Mr. Shortland is on half-pay, as he is now within a very few of the head of his list. His seniority is December, 1875, and he gained a first-class for seamanship on passing for lieutenant.

A telegram received though Reuter's Agency from Palermo, dated August 10, says:—"The Prefect today gave a banquet here in honour of Vice-Admiral Sir F. Beauchamp Seymour, Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Squadron. Her Majesty's despatch vessel Helicon has left here."

Naval officers are beginning to complain most bitterly at the treatment they receive from the War Office, and also at the hands of the Directors of the Chatham Engineering Establishment, in regard to all questions affecting improvements in ordnance or the arming of our ships. Inventions or suggestions emanating from naval officers are invariably condemned, and systematic obstruction to the adoption of improvements of any sort emanating from naval officers, appears to be the policy which governs the decisions of the Military Departments which have anything to say regarding naval armaments. Such a state of things is most injurious to the best interests of the Services, and is dangerous to the strength and safety of the Empire, and should not be allowed to exist. The Director of Naval Ordnance should be supreme in his own department, and not dependent on the caprice of any Military chief or department.

The Naval demonstration at Cherbourg on Monday evening has proved a great success, and the entente cordiale between the representatives of the British and French Admiralties was so great that heads were said on Tuesday more to resemble forty shilling pots than those of sedate legislators.

The Junior Lords of the Admiralty made a regular flying visit to Cherbourg on Monday. They left Portsmouth that morning; entertained the President of the French Republic on board that afternoon; were entertained at a banquet in the evening; and returned to Portsmouth in time to enable a glance at the Naval attack on Fort Gillkicker to be taken, before hurrying up to St. Stephen's, to oppose certain clauses in the Hares and Rabbits Bill, which finds but little favour even among farmers.

Orders have been given for the Miranda to survey and explore the islands lying round Tristan d'Acunha on her passage to Australia, in the hope of relieving shipwrecked mariners.

It appears that with the issue of the new Admiralty Instructions, some who had been accustomed to find certain subjects dealt with under certain heads, become a little fogged at the more concise method adopted in the new edition. The index, too, was not found sufficiently full for many to whom the Admiralty Instructions is almost a closed book until some question out of the ordinary routine may crop up. To satisfy the wants of such officers, it is now intended to issue a compendious index prepared by professional index-makers, and after that there will certainly be no room for complaint we should hope.

Lieutenant Henry Ponsonby has distinguished himself by passing the required examination for master in the Mercantile Marine, and has been granted his certificate by the Board of Trade.

As the return of the combined Channel and Coastguard Squadron has been a little delayed through waiting for the Bacchante, it has been arranged that officers of Marines on board these ships who have accepted service in the India Staff Corps, shall not be required to embark for India in September, as previously arranged, but will leave England for their new duties in October.

Mr. Stephen Sheldon, engineer on the Retired List, has been selected by the Colonial authorities for service in charge of the colonial steamers at Lagos.

Orders have been given for the Sylvia, on her passage home to England, to survey the coast lying between Orange River and Walwich Bay. There is no doubt that the charts of that part are decidedly defective, but the duty of conducting this survey is a little hard on the Sylvia, and is not the most enjoyable wind-up to her commission.

A formal decision has been come to by the new British Arctic Committee, that it is advisable to surrender the idea of attempting to reach the Pole by means of a triangle of balloons fitted with drag ropes, and to use balloons only as a means of observation.

We recently called attention to the disadvantage suffered by Naval recreation-grounds in their being unable to obtain a licence for a canteen on the ground. Military recreation-grounds have no difficulty in obtaining a licence, but magistrates are unable to give the same privileges to the Navy, because when the Naval Discipline Act was framed, Naval recreation-grounds did not exist. We are glad to hear that a communication has been received at Sheerness, where a licence was refused, stating that their Lordships have the matter under consideration, and there is reason to hope that the obstruction to the granting of this necessary accompaniment to athletic sports may soon be removed.

The survey of the Sea of Marmora will be completed in the course of the present month, when the Fawn will be withdrawn from those waters, and most probably be ordered home to pay off.

The International Demonstrative Squadron is still in embryo, and it seems doubtful whether this curious egg will ever be hatched. Lord Granville has declined to commit himself to any opinion on the probabilities of such a step being taken, and undoubtedly this was the safest course to adopt when asked a question on the subject in the House of Lords. But it does seem a trifle strange that, after all that was said against the bona fide demonstration made by Admiral Sir Geoffrey Hornby's fleet, the present Government should have entertained the idea of taking part in a simple show. When the Mediterranean Fleet, under Admiral Hornby, was hurriedly dispatched to Eastern waters, and cleared for action with the intention of forcing the passage of the Dardanelles, if need be, there was something real about it. But this much talked-of Demonstrative Squadron is a mere theatrical display, to which all the Powers have been invited to contribute. It has been the topic of comment in the leading journals of the whole of Europe, and any weight which such a squadron might have carried if speedily dispatched with doubtful orders as to the steps to be taken by it, must have been counteracted by the long discussion which has followed the proposal, and the opinion expressed in some quarters that it would be a foolish and meaningless display. If Admiral Hobart Pasha carries out the idea to which we alluded last week, and brings out the Turkish fleet to meet the International one, taking the Sultan on board the flagship and flying the royal standard, the whole of the ships of the Demonstrative Squadron will have to comply with the rules of international courtesy, and there and then have to fire a Royal salute, in honour of the Sultan's standard. This would rather checkmate the grand move, and would make it appear in the eyes of the Turk that the whole of Europe had collected together a fine squadron worthy to come and pay a mark of respect to their Sultan. This would, indeed, be a demonstration, and we hope that Sir Beauchamp Seymour may be spared the possibility of being placed in so ridiculous a position.

A vacancy exists for a retired Naval officer who has not commuted, and is conversant with accounts, as storekeeper and cashier at the Cape of Good Hope Naval Hospital. The salary is £175 a year, with an official residence and a free passage from England.

The first of the 80-ton guns left Woolwich Arsenal on Wednesday in the Earl de Grey and Ripon for Portsmouth, for transhipment to the Inflexible. A few experimental rounds were fired from one of the guns at the Woolwich Arsenal proof butts last week, but no alterations have been made in any of them of an important character since the public trials at Woolwich and Shoeburyness.

The combined Channel and Reserve Squadrons were sighted off the Eddystone on Wednesday. The two squadrons then parted company, the Hercules, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, accompanied by the Valiant and Defence, proceeding into Plymouth. The Warrior proceeded direct to Portland. The Lord Warden and Penelope accompanied the Channel Squadron, which proceeded, under Vice-Admiral Hood, to the eastward. Having gone through some target practice, the Agincourt, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Somerset, having in company the Northumberland and Achilles, proceeded into Plymouth Sound, while the Minotaur, with the Lord Warden and Penelope in company, made for Spithead, where this squadron anchored yesterday morning, the Bacchante having anchored there the night before. Early on Friday morning, as the Minotaur was making for Spithead, the Hoffnung, merchant barque, collided with that vessel off St. Catherine's Point, doing little damage to the ironclad, but somewhat seriously injuring her own bows. She was at once taken in tow by the Minotaur and was brought into Spithead, from whence a tug towed her into Portsmouth Harbour yesterday afternoon.

Lord Northbrook was unable to be present at Cherbourg on Monday, and was represented by Rear-Admiral Hoskins, Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., and Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, M.P., the Secretary of the Admiralty, who returned thanks for "The British Navy," at a banquet given to the President of the Republic. The French Minister of Marine remarked that the French Navy had learned to appreciate the British Navy,—first, as enemies, but latterly, in more happy times, as allies. That a deputation representing the Lords of the British Admiralty should have gone to Cherbourg to be present at the fêtes, and thus represent her Majesty's Service, will be appreciated afloat, for too often responding for the Navy is left to some member of the Diplomatic Corps or to an officer of the sister-Service.

For a long time the idea of establishing a Naval School of Gunnery on shore has been mooted, and Eastney has been mentioned more than once as being a likely place for the Naval gunners, should the Marine gunners be amalgamated with the whole Corps of Marines, or be abolished. It is only too plain that something will have to be done before long, for the present wooden ships will not last for ever, and it has been found that to convert one of the obsolete ironclads into a gunnery ship would be too costly. It was intended to follow this course a few years ago, but when the estimates for this conversion were taken into consideration, together with the probable lasting powers of the ship, it was found that such an outlay would be almost unjustifiable. But as we have said, something must be done, for one of the gunnery-ships, the Cambridge, at Devonport, has shown unmistakable signs of being only fit for compulsory retirement on account of age. The men have had to go to the pumps twice daily to prevent her settling down on the mud in Hamoaze, for she has been taking in water at a very rapid rate. She will now have to be patched up in dock, if possible, but the old ship giving out like this while lying quietly at her moorings shows that she is coming to the end of her career, and that the Admiralty must face the question as to the provision to be made for maintaining the Naval School of Gunnery.

A general court-martial is ordered to assemble for the trial of Serjeant William Marshman, Royal Marine Light Infantry, for alleged fraudulent misconduct at Wimbledon Camp, when employed on duty at the ranges. The prosecution of this non-commissioned officer arises out of the charge which was laid by Mr. Runtze, London Rifle Brigade, and others; and if the case is proved, the man deserves punishment, of course. But what about those Volunteers who have led him into trouble? We trust that steps may be taken to ascertain their names, that they, too, may receive the punishment they so richly deserve. Messrs. Runtze and Sage have acted most honourably, but it is to be feared that there are others who have been only too ready to avail themselves of the opportunity of making good scores; and if, should their names transpire, Volunteers of all ranks will desire to see them removed from the Force.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and suite left London on Monday night for Darmstadt. The Duke of Connaught will be present at the German manœuvres this year. The Times' correspondent at Berlin says that he "will participate, as an actor in the mimic warfare, to the extent at least of the saluting-point, on leading his illustrious regiment, the Zeithen Hussars, belonging to the 6th Cavalry Brigade, and the 3rd or Brandenburg Army Corps."

We understand that an eminent financier connected with the Treasury, who is also renowned for his attainments as a "cordon bleu," has prepared a menu which is to be sent round to the various messes where the Swedish officers are to be entertained. It is as follows:—"Potage: À l'Eau Claire. Poisson: Poissons d'Avril. Relevés: Cotelettes à la Belle Étoile. Navets Suedoises en tortue. Rôts: Gigot à la Duc Humphrey. Canards Financiers. Poulets de Reuter. Timbales à la Trésorie Nationale. Vol au vent à la Château de Buckingham. Glaces à la Chelsea Waterworks. Ponche à la Johnny Walker. Sorbet à la Docteur Tanner." This will not cost much, if well done, and cannot fail to produce the most agreeable impression on the Scandinavian athletes. We believe the menu is an improvement on the plâts presented by the ancient Britons to the Vikings and their followers.

We are glad to find that a slight concession has at length been made in favour of the officers of the Veterinary Department, whose treatment lately has raised for them such universal sympathy throughout the Service. A Royal Warrant has been signed by her Majesty laying down that "in a case of distinguished service, a veterinary surgeon, if qualified, may be promoted to the rank of a first-class veterinary-surgeon without reference to seniority; and in such a case, the recommendation detailing the services for which the officer is proposed for promotion shall be published in the Gazette in which such promotion shall appear."

Lieutenant A. P. Crawley, 60th Rifles, has been appointed acting aide-de-camp to Major-General Sir G. P. Colley, K.C.M.G., Governor of Natal.

It is stated by the Russian newspapers that very shortly several thousand workmen will be discharged from the arsenal at Petrazavodsk, where 14,000 hands are usually employed in war-time. One reason of the reduction is, that the Russian Government finds that it can purchase guns of Krupp at about half the amount it costs to make them at the foundries on the shore of Lake Onega.

Her Majesty conferred the honour of knighthood on Colonel J. C. M'Neill, C.B., V.C., C.M.G., half-pay, late 107th Regiment, at Osborne on Thursday, and invested him with the insignia of a Knight Commander of St. Michael and St. George, on his return from Canada, whither he had, by her Majesty's command, accompanied Prince Leopold.

The dates of departure of the remainder of the Indian reliefs are now fixed:—The 77th Regiment will embark at Portsmouth, in the Himalaya, to-day. The 1st Battalion 23rd Fusiliers will embark in the Malabar on Monday. The 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade will embark in the Jumna on the 21st inst.

We have good news for those Militia subalterns who are aspiring to Line commissions. The number of subalterns actually required on Tuesday last to complete the establishment of the Army was 291, viz.:—Household Cavalry 3, Cavalry of the Line 29, Brigade of Guards 4, Infantry of the Line, &c., and Colonial corps 255. The new appointments gazetted on Tuesday evening were:—To Cavalry of the Line 8, and Infantry of the Line, &c., 113; total, 121. So that there still remain some 170 vacancies, which will be filled, in the most part, from the Militia.

A distinguished-service reward of £100 per annum has been conferred by the Government of India upon Colonel R. H. Bolton, Madras Staff Corps.

Valises will no longer be worn by officers of any mounted corps.

With reference to G.O. 82 of 1880, Field-Marshals and General officers in possession of tunics made in accordance with the Dress Regulations, Ed. 1874, will be allowed to wear them for a period of five years from July 1, 1880. The sash will be 2¼ in. wide, instead of three inches.

Poor Colonel Cleland died on Saturday last at Murree. His terrible wounds, the extreme pain he had suffered, and the effects of the climate were too much for him. He has died away in a far distant land, has sacrificed his life, and lost his commission money, and as far as we know, has never received even the thanks of the Authorities, or, in fact, any recognition of his gallant services. Surely he earned the C.B.—if, indeed, not a full colonelcy also—on the memorable December 11 last, when he led a portion of the 9th Lancers against an enormous number of Afghans, armed with Snider rifles, over terrible ground, which proved to be simply impracticable for cavalry. No officer in the 9th has received any sort of notice or reward for that gallant charge, though four officers and about fifty non-commissioned officers and men lost their lives. Some of the non-commissioned officers and privates have been rewarded, it is true; but it is not creditable to our Military administration that a brave soldier who did his duty splendidly and shed lustre on the whole Army by his vigorous action in a moment of great peril, and afterwards rode into Sherpur, though suffering the most intense agony, should have been allowed to go to his grave without even the satisfaction of knowing that his services had been appreciated by his Sovereign and her Ministers. Whoever was responsible for the charge of the 9th Lancers, it is admitted that Colonel Cleland was not. He and his men simply had to obey the orders they received. This they did, as only British Cavalry would,—eh, could! Is no recognition in store for them?

It will be noticed, on reference to the General Order on the subject of the medal and clasp for the South-African campaign, that there is to be but one for all the phases of the war. No medal or clasp is to be allowed apparently for those men engaged in the expedition against Secocoeni, which left Pretoria in August, 1878, and remained in the field until ordered down to the Zulu border to join Sir Evelyn Wood's force at the end of 1878 for Zululand. The force consisted of the 13th Light Infantry, part of the 80th Regiment, two guns Mountain Battery, two guns Royal Artillery, Frontier Light Horse, and natives, and was under the command of Colonel H. Rowlands, V.C., C.B. It performed several harassing marches, was engaged on one occasion, with eleven casualties. Several of the officers and men of this force will be deprived of the medal, as the General Order says,—"From September 26, 1877, to June 28, 1878, inclusive." Why not to December, 1878? It will be remembered that in August, 1878, Colonel Rowlands was ordered to take a force of 1,200 men, all told, and penetrate into the mountain fastnesses of the Makatees, to subjugate Secocoeni. It was found necessary to hold one valley of the Leolu Mountains, by detaching 600 men to garrison certain forts while Colonel Rowlands, with the remaining half of his force, cleared a road through the jungle and penetrated to beyond Secocoeni's staadt. After three months of constant fighting and bivouacking, Colonel Rowlands satisfied himself, by a reconnaissance in force up to Secocoeni's staadt, that his column of 600 men was inadequate to storm this formidable mountain stronghold. He had, therefore, to withdraw, leaving garrisons in fortified posts in the valleys to harass the enemy. The country was thus held from December, 1878, to September, 1879, and when Sir Garnet Wolseley arrived he had at his disposal all the mule transport used in the Zulu war, and the best rifles and equipment; while Colonel Rowlands' force had only ox transport, and the Volunteers were armed with indifferent rifles of some ten different patterns. Possessing these advantages, as well as making use of the roads which had been frayed, and the forts which had been constructed during the campaign of 1878, and yet Sir Garnet Wolseley found it expedient to collect a force of 13,000 men, in order to effectually storm Secocoeni's stronghold. It is a grievance to those who formed part of Colonel Rowlands' force, and partook of the dangers and hardships of the campaign, that because it was undertaken without a disaster, by an inadequate force, that therefore their services are not recognised by the grant of a clasp. The 1-13th Light Infantry was engaged from August, 1878. In December, this regiment marched across the Transvaal to the Zulu border, and it took part in every principal action of the Zulu campaign. Thus the officers and men of the 13th will wear the South-African medal with one clasp only, after thirteen months' active service in the field; while other more favoured recipients will have the same medal and one clasp for only a few days in the field, and many of these may never have seen a single shot fired.

THE WIMBLEDON COURT-MARTIAL.

The general court-martial upon Serjt. Wm. Marshman, 34th Company, Royal Marine Light Infantry, on charges of fraudulent conduct in connection with the marking at the late Wimbledon Meeting, and of contemplated frauds at previous meetings, was opened at Forton Barracks, Gosport, yesterday. Col. R. W. Bland Hunt, R.M.L.I., aide-de-camp to the Queen, presided, and the court was made up of officers of the Line, Royal Marines, and Marine Artillery. Major G. F. Blake, barrister-at-law, officiated as Deputy-Judge-Advocate. The prosecution was entrusted to Major A. H. Ozzard, R.M.L.I., assisted by the counsel to the Admiralty, Mr. A. S. Hill, Q.C., M.P., instructed by the Solicitor to the Treasury, and Mr. E. J. Harvey, Admiralty law agent. The prisoner is defended by Lieut. Edge, R.M.L.I., as his friend, together with Mr. G. H. King and Mr. T. A. Bramsdon, solicitors. Mr. R. W. Ford, solicitor, watched the case on behalf of the National Rifle Association, who are likewise represented by Col. Sir Henry Fletcher, member of council. Amongst others in attendance are Major Thompson, D.A.A.G., the executive officer at the Wimbledon meeting, and Mr. Humphrys, of Cambridge. All the witnesses, of which there are 28 for the prosecution and seven for the defence, are in attendance in full uniform. For the assistance of the Court the model of the targets exhibited at Wimbledon has been sent down and fixed. The full charges against the prisoner are as follows:—

First Charge.—An offence of a fraudulent nature, under Section 18 of the Army Discipline and Regulation Act, Sub-section 5, in that he, the prisoner, on or about July 13, 1878, whilst travelling on the railway between Putney and London, with intent to defraud, proposed to Serjt. John Sage, of the 1st Tower Hamlets Rifle Volunteers, that said the Serjt. John Sage should meet him, the prisoner, early the next year, so that he, the prisoner, might arrange matters for him, the said Serjt. John Sage to win prizes, saying to him, the said Serjt. John Sage, that he, the prisoner, had given plenty of people prizes, and he could have arranged for him, the said Serjt. John Sage and his friends, if the prisoner had known it earlier.

Second Charge.—An offence of a fraudulent nature, under Section 18 of the Army Discipline and Regulation Act, Sub-section 5, in that he, the prisoner, on or about July 19, 1879, in or about the camp at Wimbledon, with an intent to defraud, proposed to the said Serjeant John Sage, that he, the said Serjeant John Sage, should see him, the prisoner, the next year, Saturday or Sunday the latest, in order that he, the prisoner, might arrange for him, the said Serjeant John Sage, telling him, the said Serjeant John Sage, that he, the prisoner, had managed it for the Cheshire team to win the China Cup that day.

Third Charge.—An offence of a fraudulent nature under Section 18 of the Army Discipline and Regulation Act, Sub-section 5, in that the prisoner, on or about July 17, 1879, in or about the camp at Wimbledon, with intent to defraud, proposed to the said Serjt. John Sage that he should enter for the Olympic Prize, telling him that he (the prisoner had arranged with some serjeant, by giving him a sovereign), to put him (the prisoner) in the butts instead of at the firing-point.

Fourth Charge.—An offence of a fraudulent nature under Section 18 of the Army Discipline and Regulation Act, Sub-section 5, in that the prisoner, between the Saturday and July 23, 1880, in or about the Camp at Wimbledon, with the intent to defraud, arranged and agreed with the said Serjt. John Sage that he, the prisoner, should give to a friend of the said Serjt. John Sage, when shooting for the Olympic Prize, as many points as would be necessary to win it, and that in consideration thereof he, the prisoner, was to have £20; the said friend of the said Serjt. John Sage, being one Pte. James Runtz, of the London Rifle Brigade, was to have £20, the said John Sage the remainder of the prize for himself, and that he, the said Serjt. John Sage, was to tell his friends to be sure and fire first and go through.

Fifth Charge.—An offence of a fraudulent nature under Section 18 of the Army Discipline and Regulation Act, Sub-section 5, in that he, prisoner, while acting in charge of No. 14 target, on July 23, 1880, at the camp at Wimbledon, signalled, or caused to be signalled, a false report of the hits on the target, with intent to defraud.

Sixth Charge.—An offence of a fraudulent nature, under Section 18 of the Army Discipline and Regulation Act, Sub-section 5, in that he, the prisoner, on or about July 13, 1880, in or about the camp at Wimbledon, with intent to defraud, said to Francis Duddy, a private in the 3rd Hants Rifle Volunteers, "What target do you fire at, and at what time do you fire?" and when informed by the said Francis Duddy that he shot at No. 18 target, replied, "I shall be at that target, and if you make 91 or so I shall see you again."

The Court consisted of 16 members.

The Judge-Advocate having read the orders convening the Court and the charges in full, the prisoner pleaded Not Guilty to the whole of the charges.

Major Ozzard, in opening the case for the prosecution, explained the position. The prisoner and 650 non-commissioned officers and men were at Wimbledon. These men had to mark at the 119 targets, of which plans and models were put in. He then detailed the precautions taken to prevent any collusion. After entering into various particulars, the gallant major spoke, in conclusion, of the importance of the inquiry from a national point of view, and hoped its results would not only bring to justice any other men who acted in the same manner, but also those who bid them to do so.

The various documents and plans put in were admitted, and the working of the model target and duties of the men explained.

The first witness was Serjt. Sage, 1st Tower Hamlets Rifle Volunteers, who entered into various details of his conversation with the prisoner about the prizes and arrangements made between them during 1878 and 1879.

The Court was then closed for deliberation, and on reopening, the President stated they had come to the conclusion to take all evidence leading up to conversations with the prisoner that might be material to the case.

The Court then adjourned till 10 o'clock this morning.

The Standard states that "a number of Staff officers who served in the Zulu expedition have applied to the Horse Guards for permission to proceed to India to join the field force in Afghanistan, but it has been decided that it is not expedient to entertain their proposal, unless their regiments are serving in India, in which case they are allowed to join them."

Cols. R. G. Lewis and R. C. Babington, Madras S.C., are about to retire on pensions of £456 5s., Col. Lewis receiving the capitalised value of a special annuity, viz., £5,243, and Col. Babington an extra annuity of £593 18s.

Major H. B. Hanna, Bengal S.C., has been appointed an assistant-quartermaster-general on the Bengal Establishment from June 22, vice Lieut.-Col. W. S. A. Lockhart, whose period of Staff service has expired.

Col. H. N. Miller, Bombay S.C., is about to retire from the Service on an ordinary pension of £456 5s. and annuity of £668 12s.

OUR POSITION IN AFGHANISTAN.

"A Staff Officer" writes:—"Having but recently returned from the Bombay Presidency, and after a long service in India, my remarks may be acceptable on one or two points, which I shall refer to, and particularly so since Lord Dorchester's question in the House of Lords may give rise to some misunderstanding. I shall take, first and foremost, the selection of General Burrows for a brigade, and although I admit his experience in warfare was but limited, yet his talents are indisputable, and his worth as a quartermaster-general inestimable. His command of the 13th Regiment N.I. was one of the most popular, and its position while under his command was the surest guarantee of his ability,—no effort, no labour, and no hardship could ever be any detriment to him in any campaign, for his energies and his whole heart are in his work. Now, if General Burrows was given a brigade, and that brigade forwarded by adverse circumstances into a questionable position by other orders, can the man in command of such an undertaking be blamed for fighting to the bitter end, and, as we are already informed, with terrible loss to his adversaries? Lord Morley and Lord Northbrook very properly commented upon Lord Dorchester's speech. It is correct, as Lord Northbrook stated, that General Roberts was taken to his present position from that of Quartermaster-General of the Bengal Army; and, as I happen to be well acquainted with both General Burrows and General Roberts, I should say they are men of equal talents, and well worthy of every confidence. I conclude this paragraph by this one remark,—Afghans, in a battle where they are at all strong, advance regardless of death, fanaticism carrying them on and on, regardless of the horrors before them. The exertions of a small band of heroic men may be successful as regards the terrible slaughter they inflict—ah! even until the fatigue of bloodshed is the consequence—yet no scientific movement of the battle on the part of Generals, no amount of carnage, checks their onward progress, until once a rout or discomfit arises. Now, I pass on to another question, and that is the state of the Bombay Army; and I must express my surprise at the remarks (uncharitable) on the part of officers of the Bengal Army. I can assure you that, as regards drill and discipline, the Bombay Army is unsurpassed, and this remark I heard made to Lord Napier of Magdala, with whom was his military secretary, and I believe it was not denied. Dress the Bombay soldier in the dress of the frontier regiments, instead of the tunic and half-boots, à la Grenadier Guards, and you will admit the accuracy of my remarks. I have seen Bombay regiments marching and manœuvring with British troops, and to be honest, I have seen everything worthy of good soldiers. This question of dress—the question of drill and accuracy of firing—had no stronger advocate than Sir Charles Staveley, and his loss to Bombay has been very much felt. Sir Henry Havelock will do well, before putting the question in the House of Commons on the subject of 'the command of native troops by British officers,' to consult or obtain an opinion from Sir Charles Staveley, who took every opportunity to personally inspect and investigate this point. No Chief of Bombay ever took more pains with his command (either before or since), for he on more than two occasions traversed the whole Presidency and manœuvred every brigade. In March of 1879, you had an article in which you spoke of the advantages Bombay could afford in the campaign against the Afghans, and how well prepared Sir Charles Staveley was at that time, with a force that could have been at the mouth of the Bolan Pass ere a reply had been received from Shere Ali. If Bombay had been called upon then, what a different aspect would have been given to affairs! Sir Charles, through his able Adjutant-General, had a magnificent force of 20,000 men, all ready; could have been mobilised in a week, and dispatched by scores of steamers then in harbour, and could have arrived well up the Indus to Sukkur or Jacobabad, in six days from its departure. But no, this offer of assistance by Sir Charles Staveley was not entertained until last March, when the Generals had left the country, and when the idea of campaigning had nearly died out, and it was thought an occupying force was all that was necessary. I shall not stop to discuss the formation of General Burrows's brigade, beyond alluding to the fact that it was composed only of one horse battery and a weak infantry regiment—British, no British cavalry, although the 17th Lancers applied to be sent to the Candahar column, and the 3rd Hussars also."

We have been favoured by the Intelligence Branch of the Quartermaster-General's Department of the Horse Guards with three maps, showing, first, the city of Candahar and its immediate neighbourhood; secondly, the country between Candahar and the Helmund; and, thirdly, the fort of Khelat-i-Ghilzai and its vicinity within a radius of two thousand yards, the latter on the scale of six inches to the mile.

The following is the official account of the fort of Khelat-i-Ghilzai, and it may relieve us of any fear that Col. Tanner will not be able to hold his own until he is relieved by Sir F. Roberts towards the end of the month, when his force will be an appreciable addition to the strength of the remarkably fine column now moving from Cabul:—"Khelat-i-Ghilzai is a fort standing on the right bank of the Tarnak river on an isolated plateau, having a command to the south of 5,773 feet above the surrounding country. The ramparts have been scarped to a great height out of the face of the hill, and rivetted with bricks made of kneaded straw and mud, built up in layers and allowed to dry in the sun. A substantial parapet surmounts the rampart, and is carried all round the works, embracing the whole plateau, the slopes of which form the glacis, and are in places exceedingly steep. At six or eight feet from the foot of the rampart the hill has been scarped perpendicular for a height of about eight feet. Near the western face is a mass of conglomerate, some 80 or 100 feet high, forming a natural cavalier, upon which a gun, en barbette, ranges over the works below. From this rock two copious springs flow, affording an abundant supply of excellent water for the garrison of the fort. There are two gateways; the main one is on the south side. The approach to it is steep, and is well flanked by the works on the left; the other gate is on the north side, it has no flanking defences, and the approach to it is comparatively easy, for the large masses of conglomerate which are scattered about would afford good cover from which to keep down any fire which might be opened on a party approaching the gate. Within the fort and between the two gates is the bazaar, containing at present some 30 shops. The quarters of the garrison are ranged round the ramparts; the magazine is near the south-west corner. There are two extensive granaries, and a residence for the Governor. There is no town at Khelat-i-Ghilzai, but there are several small walled villages not far from the fort on the north-west. The military importance of Khelat-i-Ghilzai as an advanced post on the road from Candahar to Ghuznee and Cabul is very clear, and the position of the place within the territory of the powerful Ghilzai tribe renders its possession highly valuable in a political sense, for the future course of operations in Afghanistan must depend much upon the attitude of the tribe. In 1841 the fort of Khelat-i-Ghilzai was occupied by a British detachment, 950 strong, under the command of Capt. J. Halkett Craigie, and withstood a siege on the part of the Ghilzais from Dec. 9, 1841, to April 20, 1842. On the last day the besiegers, numbering from 5,500 to 7,000 men, delivered an assault, which was bravely repelled and defeated by the garrison, who inflicted a loss of over 400 upon the enemy, and caused the siege to be raised. In the war of 1878-79 the fort was occupied by British troops, and again in October, 1879, by a force under Brigdr.-Gen. Hughes, from Candahar, by which it is still held (January, 1880). Subsequent to which date Gen. Hughes, with a portion of this force, returned to Candahar, leaving a garrison under Col. Tanner. This garrison was again modified, as under, on Gen. Stewart's advance on Cabul in April, 1880. Garrison in August, 1880:—C Baty. 2nd Brig. R.A., two guns; 3rd Scind Horse, detachment; 66th Foot, two companies; 29th Bombay N.I., about 1,100 of all ranks. The Candahar plan is singularly complete. It shows every street in the city, and most of the courts.

In the House of Lords on Tuesday, Lord Dorchester inquired by whose nomination or authority the appointment of Brigdr.-Gen. Burrows was made to command a brigade of the British forces before Candahar, and what were the antecedents of that officer's professional career to justify his being nominated to a responsible command in the presence of an enemy. The noble lord added that from all he could hear Gen. Burrows had not had any military experience save what he had acquired in the orderly-room and on the Bombay Staff. The Duke of Somerset suggested as unjust and ungenerous an attack upon Gen. Burrows; and Lord Ellenborough, having commanded the 5th Regt., expressed his opinion that the force under Gen. Burrows was inadequate to the work it had to do. The Earl of Morley also denounced Lord Dorchester's question as unfair and ungenerous, and added that the War Office had no desire to prevent inquiry of the most searching character into the late disaster, but that they deprecated as most ungenerous the condemnation of an officer before the facts of the case were fully known. Lord Dorchester intimated that he had not brought any charge against Gen. Burrows. The Earl of Morley declined to go into the question of the qualification of Gen. Burrows, and said that the only reply he could give to the inquiry of the noble lord was that that officer was appointed by the Governor of Bombay, upon the nomination of the General Commanding-in-Chief in that Presidency. After a few further observations from Lord Dorchester, and some remarks from Lord Northbrook, the subject dropped.

In the House of Commons on the same day, Sir W. Palliser having inquired whether the Government would consider the question of leaving a detachment in charge of the Sherpur camp until the result of Gen. Roberts's expedition was known, Lord Hartington replied that he had already informed the House that the Government did not think it advisable to interfere with the discretion of competent military authorities in India and Afghanistan. The Sherpur base could not, he said, be held with less than 6,000 men of all arms. Ministers did not see the use of leaving such a force there when the rest of the army had retired on Gandamak. On receiving this reply, Sir W. Palliser moved the adjournment of the House, with the view of protesting against the contemplated evacuation of Cabul and the march of Gen. Roberts to Candahar without an adequate base of operations. Such a proceeding, he contended, would be contrary to the most elementary rules of warfare, and this opinion he gave on the authority of men of such acknowledged capacity as Sir Garnet Wolseley, Sir Evelyn Wood, and Gen. Buller. It was understood that Gen. Roberts had only 8,000 men and twelve field guns with him, whilst he had to march 300 miles and to pass two fortresses—Ghuznee and Khelat-i-Ghilzai—to meet an Afghan army of 20,000 men and thirty-five guns. He insisted, therefore, that it would be in the highest degree injudicious to expose so small a force to sallies from those citadels without having a base to act upon; and he implored the Government not to incur the responsibility of losing an army (for he believed it possible that every man of them might be destroyed), or to do an act which might shake to the foundation the entire fabric of our empire in India. He recommended that a British force should be kept, at all events for a few weeks longer, on the Cabul side of the passes, for he mistrusted the Afghans, and feared their rising at the first opportunity that presented itself. Sir W. Barttelot also strongly urged the desirability of not allowing the force under Gen. Roberts to be exposed to the danger pointed out by the preceding speaker. Lord Hartington accepted, on the part of the Government, the whole responsibility of what was to be done; and, denying with some warmth that the British force was to be retired from Cabul on political and not military grounds, intimated that it was at the suggestion of Sir Donald Stewart himself, made two months ago, that the decision had been arrived at. Sir G. Campbell expressed his entire approval of the course proposed to be taken by the Government, and taunted Sir W. Palliser with being influenced by an "unpatriotic anxiety" for the fate of the Army. Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett commented on the danger likely to arise from cutting away the basis of an army, and Sir S. Northcote administered a rebuke to Sir G. Campbell for ascribing unpatriotic feelings to Sir W. Palliser. His hon. and gallant friend had been anxious to know whether the retirement from Cabul was on account of political or military considerations; but as her Majesty's Government had assumed full responsibility for what had been done, he did not think it would be wise at the present moment to challenge their decision. The conversation then dropped, and the motion for the adjournment was withdrawn.

In the House of Lords on Thursday, Lord Strathnairn moved for a number of returns showing the ages, length of service, &c., of non-commissioned officers and men proceeding to India, and the report of the General commanding the brigade marching a few years since from Aldershot to Windsor, when a partial collapse took place on the high road, owing to tender age and physical debility. The Earl of Morley submitted to their lordships whether, as a matter of public policy, it would be wise to give the full details asked for. At the same time, he might say that, as regarded the regiments in question, there was no reason whatever, as far as the condition of the troops was concerned, to conceal anything from the House or the country. The second question assumed that a partial collapse took place, and then asked for a report of the General commanding, in order to ascertain whether the statement was accurate. The circumstances occurred three years ago, and it was hardly fair to bring up a small matter such as that was, after such a length of time. He would take this opportunity of asking the noble and gallant lord to fix a day for bringing forward the motion which had so long stood on the paper respecting the conduct of the war in South Africa. The Duke of Cambridge thought it would be very inconvenient to give the information asked for in the shape of a return. The regiments in question were in a very efficient condition. Lord Chelmsford appealed to the noble and gallant lord to fix a day for bringing on the motion which stood in his name as to the war in South Africa, and the Court of Inquiry into the disaster at Isandula. Earl Granville reminded the noble and gallant lord that in his previous speech he had commented on the military skill and knowledge of the officers engaged in South Africa, and he therefore thought the motion should be brought forward at the earliest possible period. Ultimately, next Thursday was fixed for the motion, and the present one for papers was withdrawn.

In the House of Commons, the same evening, Sir Henry Havelock-Allan asked the Secretary of State for India, "Whether, in view of the recent grave disaster to our troops near Candahar, which is stated to be mainly attributable to the Native troops having been unable to hold their ground after having lost nearly the whole of their British officers, and in view of the opinion held by many competent authorities that a system which leaves Native Indian regiments with only six or seven British officers is not calculated to make such troops efficient for modern war, or in the presence of breech-loading arms, he will cause a searching inquiry to be made into the causes of that disaster, and especially as to whether the experience of the late campaign in Afghanistan is favourable to the retention of a system which is liable to leave Native troops, at critical moments, entirely deprived of the example and leading of British officers." The Marquis of Hartington, in replying, said he was certainly of opinion that a searching inquiry ought to be made into the causes of the reverse sustained by our Army in the neighbourhood of Candahar, and he had no doubt such an inquiry would be instituted by the Government of India. He was also of opinion that at the close of the war it would be extremely desirable to ascertain whether any improvements were necessary in the organisation of the Native Army. Sir G. Campbell inquired whether any details had been received to justify the statement in the question that the disaster was "mainly attributable to the native troops having been unable to hold their ground, after having lost nearly the whole of their British officers." The Marquis of Hartington replied that as the telegraphic despatches had been necessarily very brief, the details yet received were extremely incomplete. Replying to a further question from Sir H. D. Wolff, the noble lord said, so far as he was aware, the orders for the advance of Gen. Burrows were given by the Viceroy in Council, after communication with Gen. Stewart, who had lately commanded at Candahar, and was perfectly aware of all the circumstances attending the advance of Ayoub Khan. He had no knowledge of any subsequent orders given in consequence of the mutiny of the Wali's troops. Those troops were not acting in concert with Gen. Burrows, who was instructed to take no part in the Wali's operations on the other side of the Helmund.

The Viceroy has received the following telegram from the Queen:—"My heart bleeds for the loss of so many brave officers and men. Pray express my sympathy and anxiety for the wounded."

The Bombay correspondent of the Standard, in telegrams, give the following additional information with regard to the situation:—"Aug. 4.—The division under Gen. Roberts marches from Cabul on Sunday (Aug. 8) to the relief of Candahar. Retirement from Cabul will then follow. Aug. 6.—Gen. Ross commands the infantry, Gen.

Hugh Gough the cavalry, and Col. C. A. Johnson the Artillery. Staff—Lieut.-Col. Chapman accompanies the force as deputy-qrmr.-gen., Major Morton as assist.-adjt.-gen., Major R. Kennedy as assist.-qrmr.-gen., Major B. Combe as deputy-assist.-qrmr.-gen. The force, numbering 10,000, is encamped outside Sherpur to-day. It marches for Candahar on Sunday. Sherpur will be evacuated next week, when the whole of the remainder of the British force will move down on their way to India. The heat in the Passes is terrible, and the sacrifice of life will be probably very great. It is considered that at any rate, if evacuation be determined upon, the force should have remained at Cabul until Roberts had passed Ghuznee. The condemnation of the hurried retreat taken is universal and absolute. Small convoys are frequently attacked. A party under Lieut. Tobin gave the marauders a sharp lesson, repulsing their attack and killing ten of the Pathans. Lieut. Tobin was wounded in a hand-to-hand fight, but killed his assailant. Another detachment has sent in word to Sibi that it is surrounded. Altogether, the country around that place appears greatly disturbed. Aug. 8.—Gen. Roberts marched this morning with his force from Cabul. He is accompanied by several influential Sirdars belonging to the Ghuznee district. They will use their endeavour to pacify the tribes on the way, and to induce them to forward the march by bringing in supplies. The Ameer is now within six miles of Cabul, and he will enter the city as soon as we leave it."

The following despatches are from the correspondent of the Daily News :—"Lahore, Aug. 5.—Gen. Roberts has orders to pick up troops to 10,000, and to find and beat Ayoub. The latter will probably proceed to Ghuznee and disregard Candahar. Fighting is expected daily, and a rising of the tribes. White, of the 92nd, rejoins the Cabul force. Probably Watson advances from the Shutargardan. Cabul, Aug. 6.—The Candahar force is under canvas. The Ameer has sent 700 ponies for the transport service. The son of Musk-i-Alam accompanies us. We take the road through the Logar Valley, the force concentrating at Zirghum Shahr on the 9th."

A telegram to the Times, dated Camp Butkak, Aug. 11, says:—"Sir Donald Stewart effected the withdrawal of all the troops from Cabul to-day in admirable order and perfect tranquillity. There is no sign of disorder in any district of Northern Afghanistan. The news from Sir F. Roberts's army is favourable. The country is quiet and the people are friendly. The Ameer came to Cabul this morning on a visit to Sir Donald Stewart and Mr. Lepel Griffin before their departure for India. In this very satisfactory interview the Ameer has favourably impressed all the English officers; and he, in dignified language, expressed his gratitude to the British Government."

The Queen has approved the appointment of Sir Hercules Robinson, G.C.M.G., Governor of New Zealand, to be Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, in the place of the Right Hon. Sir Bartle Frere, Bart., G.C.B., G.C.S.I. Sir Hercules Robinson will come home before assuming the government, and it will be administered during the interval by Sir George Strahan, K.C.M.G., the Governor of Tasmania. Sir Hercules Robinson will be succeeded in the government of New Zealand by the Hon. Sir Arthur Gordon, G.C.M.G., now Governor of Fiji, who will continue to be High Commissioner for the Western Pacific.

A return has been published of the numbers killed or dead of disease or invalided in each of the three armies operating beyond the Indus in the late campaign in Afghanistan (1878-79), from the date of the advance beyond our frontier into the Khyber Pass up to the return across the Indus of the regiments ordered back at the close of the operations in the field. The numbers are given per regiment, troop, and battery, and the casualties of the three armies appear separately. The abstract at the close shows that eight European and two native officers were killed in action and two European officers died of their wounds; 14 European and 21 native officers died of disease; 62 European and 43 native officers were invalided. Total casualties among officers—Europeans, 86; natives, 66. Among the British troops 17 men were killed in action, three died of their wounds, 315 of disease, and 1,176 were invalided—total, 1,511. Among the native troops 75 were killed in action, 23 died of their wounds, 1,129 of disease, and 1,586 were invalided—total, 2,813. The grand total of casualties among men was thus 4,324; including officers too, 4,476.

There are twenty-seven officers of the Bengal Army living who have been decorated with the Victoria Cross, not including Lord William Beresford, who seems to be a Bengal officer, but not an officer of the Bengal Army. There will, says the Times of India, be some additions to the distinguished roll before long, if the officer who has lately been recommended and some others whose cases are perhaps still under consideration should be considered by the Horse Guards worthy to receive the coveted distinction. There have not been many new V.C.'s made among Bengal officers in quite recent years. One of the latest was brave Lieut. Hamilton, but in his case the honour was not gazetted until after his tragic death. The junior V.C. is Capt. R. K. Ridgeway, whose gallantry in the Naga campaign makes him a fit recipient, whatever may be said of some of those on whom decorations have been so lavishly showered of late. In the Bombay Army there are seven officers who are entitled to have "V.C." written after their names; in Madras there is, we believe, only one, but then the honours for conspicuous gallantry in the Rumpa war have yet to be bestowed.

The list of applications for shares in the London and District Omnibus Company, Limited, will close on Wednesday next, 18th inst., for London, and on Thursday, 19th, for the country.

The Heat of Summer causes the hair to become dry and fall off, which may be completely obviated by using Rowland's Macassar Oil, which for 80 years has been considered the best restorer, preserver, and beautifier of the human hair. Rowland's Odonto whitens the teeth, prevents decay, strengthens the gums, and gives a pleasing fragrance to the breath. Ask any chemist or perfumer for Rowland's articles.

The Army.

2nd Dragoon Guards. The detachment at Longford will march for Dundalk or Belturbet on Friday, next, arriving on the 23rd.

3rd Dragoon Guards. The move of the regiment from Dublin to Manchester, which was about to take place, has been countermanded. The regiment will now remain in Ireland, and proceeds from Dublin to Cork and Ballincollig, where it will arrive about the 20th inst.

6th Dragoon Guards. The paymastership has fallen vacant by the appointment of Capt. Roberts to the paymastership of the Army Service Corps.

1st (Royal) Dragoons. The regiment received orders a few days ago to proceed from Manchester and out stations to Liverpool, for embarkation for Ireland as follows:— Two troops and head-quarters on the 12th, arriving on the 13th; two troops on the 13th, arriving on the 14th; two troops on the 17th, arriving on the 18th; and two troops on the 18th, arriving on the 19th." The total strength is 25 officers, 581 non-commissioned officers and men, and 431 horses, with 60 women, and 100 children. Head-quarters and 3 troops will be quartered in Longford, 2 troops at Gort, I troop at Ballinrobe, 1 troop at Carlow, and 1 troop at Castlebar, instead of Dublin, as lately ordered. Major W. de C. Elmsall, late of the regiment, died on the 30th inst. The deceased served with the regiment in the Eastern campaign of 1854, including the battle of Balaklava (severely wounded), siege of Sebastopol (medal with two clasps, brevet of major, Knight of the Legion of Honour, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). He retired by sale of his commission shortly after his return from Turkey.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). Lieut.-Col. C. J. Campbell, commanding the Dumbarton Rifle Volunteers, died at Camis Eskan House on the 6th inst., aged 32 years. Col. Campbell joined the regiment as cornet, Aug. 22, 1868; became lieut., Aug. 3, 1870; and retired seven years ago.

4th Hussars. We learn from Ireland that Col. Montgomery Moore has arrived in Dublin, and assumed his duties as assist.-adjt. and qrmr.-gen. of the Dublin District.

6th Dragoons. The order for the removal of the troops from Leeds to Colchester has been countermanded.

9th Lancers. Lieut.-Col. R. Stewart Cleland, commanding the regiment, died at Murree on the 7th inst., from the effect of wounds received in the disastrous action of Dec. 11 last, before Cabul, when, acting under superior orders, he led a portion of his regiment against overwhelming odds. After many months of suffering, there had at one time been some ground for belief that the worst was over, but a recent operation, by which it appeared that some wadding of the uniform had been embedded in the passage made by the bullet, left his friends but little hope of his recovery. Col. Cleland entered the 7th Dragoon Guards in 1857, and joining the 9th Lancers in 1860, obtained the command in 1879. He has met a soldier's death in the prime of life, leaving his regiment in that high state of efficiency for which it has so long been distinguished. It is noteworthy that within the last ten years the deaths of three officers, who have very recently commanded the 9th Lancers, have been recorded—those of Cols. Chardin Johnson, Ivo de Vesci Fiennes, and Cleland, besides their distinguished col., Sir Hope Grant.

10th Hussars. Brevet Major Combe is filling the position of D.A.Q.M.G. of the force proceeding under Gen. Roberts's command from Cabul to Candahar.

15th Hussars. The death is announced of Capt. W. Hodgkinson, qrmr. on the Half-pay List, as having occurred on June 24. Capt. Hodgkinson served with a column in the Kandian Provinces in Ceylon during the rebellion of 1848. Served with the 37th Regt. in the Indian Mutiny campaign in 1857-59, including the capture of Jugdespore and actions of Oct. 17, 18, and 20, 1858, and subsequent pursuit (medal). He obtained his commission as ensign from the ranks Nov. 6, 1857; was promoted lieut., May 11, 1862; and was appointed qrmr., Aug. 8, 1862. He afterwards left the 37th to exchange to the 7th Hussars; was brought into the 15th Hussars, Dec. 16, 1874; and retired on half-pay, May 5, 1877. Capt. Smirke has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on urgent private affairs.

16th Lancers. The regiment, having been relieved by the 5th Dragoon Guards, has left Brighton and Hilsea for Woolwich, where it will remain throughout the winter. The Times' correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta:—"Col. Wilkinson, the Commander-in-Chief's military secretary, has been appointed to the command of the cavalry brigade of Gen. Murray's Reserve Division at Peshawur."

18th Hussars. The regiment is to occupy Manchester instead of proceeding to Leeds, &c., as had been ordered. This change is made in consequence of the decision to increase the number of Cavalry regiments in Ireland, and by countermanding the order for the removal of the 3rd Dragoon Guards to England.

19th Hussars. The regiment is to leave the Curragh next week for Dublin, where it will occupy Island Bridge Barracks.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The Standard points out that "Capt. W. M'Clintock, R.A., has been given the five years' Staff appointment as Assistant Superintendent of the Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield, in recognition of the services he has rendered as Secretary to the Committee which is sitting at the War Office to report on the question of chilled and steel projectiles. Capt. M'Clintock holds the advanced-class certificate."

It is officially notified that "Instructions for the service of siege artillery engaged in active operations, together with the details of stores to be supplied in connection therewith, have been approved, and will shortly be issued to officers and others concerned."

Capt. A. H. Maclean is acting temporarily as brigade-major at Mauritius, pending the arrival of Major J. N. Buchanan, half-pay, late 5th Dragoon Guards, who has been selected for the appointment.

Lieut. F. E. Cowper-Smith, 9th Brig., died at Sufed Sung, Afghanistan, on the 26th ult. The deceased, who was a son of the late Rev. T. F. Smith, rector of Horsington, Lincolnshire, was 19 years of age, and entered the Army, July 30, 1879.

Capt. C. E. Souper, on joining the Pay Department, has been appointed paymaster of the 1st Batn. 2nd Foot.

Brevet Col. A. C. Johnson, A Brigade R.H.A., is commanding the artillery of the column proceeding from Cabul to the relief of Candahar, Brevet Lieut.-Col. E. F. Chapman (late Bengal) acting as deputy-qrmr.-gen.

Lieut. A. Mansel has been appointed 3rd subaltern, 3rd Peshawur Mountain Battery, vice Lieut. H. J. Birch, appointed 2nd subaltern.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Capt. A. J. Bigge to be Assistant-Keeper of the Privy Purse and Assistant Private Secretary to her Majesty.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The death has been officially reported of Capt. (Local and temporary Major) J. Simpson, which occurred at Bahamas on the 19th ult. The deceased, who had been holding the appointment of Inspector of Lighthouses in the colony when his death occurred, entered the Army, July 19, 1874, and became capt., Oct. 1, 1874.

Grenadier Guards. Col. Clive becomes lieut.-col., vice Col. Sturt, retired upon half-pay; Lieut.-Col. Phillips becomes major, and Capt. Leeke capt. and lieut.-col.

1st or Royal Scots. Capt. Sanford, who lately joined the Pay Department, has been appointed Pymr. of the 1st Batn.

2nd Queen's. Capt. Collis is transferred from the 2nd to the 1st Batn., on promotion. Lieut. Pickard-Cambridge remains with the 2nd Batn.

4th King's Own. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Stokes is transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn., on promotion; Major Borrett, Capt. Taylor, and Lieut. Burke remain with the 1st Batn., on promotion. 2nd Lieut. Laing-Meason is under orders to embark to-day in the Himalaya, at Portsmouth, to join the head-quarters of the 2nd Batn. in India.

5th Fusiliers. Capt. Walker has been appointed Pymr. of the 2nd Batn., on being gazetted to the Pay Department from the 64th Foot.

6th Regiment. Brevet Major Morton, 1st Batn., is employed as assist.-adjt.-gen. of the force under Gen. Roberts, now en route from Cabul for the relief of Candahar.

8th King's. Major Senior has been transferred from the paymastership of the 1st Batn. to the Brigade Depôt at Northampton, and is succeeded by Assist.-Pymr. J. G. Hamley, Army Pay Department. Capt. Davidson, on joining the Pay Department from the 107th, has been appointed Pymr. of the 2nd Batn.

9th Regiment. Capt. J. Casey, Qrmr. on the Half-pay List, died on the 16th ult. Capt. Casey served in the Sutlej campaign of 1845-46, and was present in the battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon; severely wounded by sabre-cut in left arm (medal and two clasps). Served in the Crimean campaign from Nov. 28, 1854, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with clasp, and Turkish medal). He was appointed qrmr. Dec. 9, 1864, and retired upon half-pay with the hon. rank of capt., Oct. 11, 1876.

10th Regiment. The 1st Battalion is about to be moved from Colchester to Fort Rowner, Gosport. At the present time the number of troops in Portsmouth Garrison is barely sufficient to provide men for duty at the magazines at Marchwood and Tipnor, and as, with the departure of a strong draft of the 2nd Batn. 12th Foot to form the linked batn. in Afghanistan, the difficulty would become increased, the military authorities of Portsmouth have asked that another regiment may be quartered in the garrison.

11th Regiment. Major Watson, 1st Batn., has been posted to the depôt at Exeter for two years, vice Major Halliday, ordered to rejoin head-quarters. Capt. Weigall, who has just been appointed to the Pay Department from the 57th Foot, has been appointed to the paymastership of the 2nd Batn.

12th Regiment. Capt. Souper, who has entered the Pay Department from the Royal Artillery, has been appointed paymaster of the 1st Batn.

13th Light Infantry. Capt. Clark is transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn. on appointment, Lieut. Temple from the 2nd to the 1st Batn.

16th Regiment. Capt. Price, 1st Batn., has been appointed acting adjt. of the Brigade Depôt at Bedford.

18th Royal Irish. Lieut. Lindsell, 1st Batn., is a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, and has been appointed to do duty with the 28th Bengal N.I. on probation.

20th Regiment. Capt. Randolph, 2nd Batn., has been recommended for appointment as an adjt. in the Auxiliary Forces.

21st Fusiliers. Major Bainbridge and Capt. Dunn remain with the 2nd Batn. on promotion, Lieut. Smythe being transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn.

22nd Regiment. The 1st Batn. was to have left the Curragh yesterday, five companies and head-quarters, under command of Lieut.-Col. Watson, proceeding to Newry, and three companies, under Major Carey, to Londonderry.

23rd Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. is to embark at Portsmouth on Monday next, in H.M.S. Malabar, for conveyance to India. The Woolwich correspondent of the Times writes:—"The interesting ceremony of presenting new colours to the battalion will be performed previous to its departure by the Prince of Wales. The regiment has cherished its old colours, which it carried through the Crimea, until there is hardly a shred to fly, being loth to part with them while an officer remained on the roll who had shared their glories; but the retirement of Col. Prevost from the command, and the transfer of Qrmr. Knightley to the 2nd Batn. leaves only one officer, Major Williamson, who did duty with the regiment in the campaign of 1854-55. It was hoped that the ceremony would have taken place in the sight of the entire garrison at Woolwich, as did the presentation to the 77th a few years ago; but there are reasons of consequence for delaying the event until the arrival of the regiment at Portsmouth."

24th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Dunbar is transferred from the 2nd to the 1st Batn. on promotion, Major Paton, C.M.G., remaining with the 2nd Batn.

25th Regiment. Capt. Godfray, 2nd Batn., studying at the Staff College, has been posted to the depôt at York, in place of Brevet Major Carwithen, promoted. Lieut. Taylor, 1st Batn., a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to the 2nd Bombay N.I., on probation.

26th Cameronians. H.M.S. Euphrates sailed from Portsmouth on Saturday morning for Malta, having on board a detachment consisting of Major Hale, Capts. Winter and Jameson, Lieuts. Anton and Thuillier, 2nd Lieut. Wood, and 190 non-commissioned officers and men, with the families of the latter, consisting of 62 women and 88 children. The remainder of the regiment arrived at Portsmouth shortly after noon on Saturday, and embarked in H.M.S. Tamar. The troops consisted of two field-officers, four captains, five subalterns, three staff, seven staff-serjeants, 15 sergeants, 13 trumpeters and drummers, 26 corporals, and 414 privates. The officers of the 26th who embarked in the Tamar were Lieut.-Col. Collins, Major Trent, Brevet Major Turner; Capts. Wilson, Clarke, and Jebb; Lieuts. Cooke, G. S. Douglas, and C. C. Douglas; 2nd Lieuts. Grant and Fetherstonhaugh; Lieut. and Adjt. Railston, Pymr. (Major) Bridge, and Qrmr. Topp. An honour, as unexpected as it was highly appreciated, was paid to the regiment. About 5 p.m. a private yacht entered Portsmouth Harbour from Cowes, and a party landed at the King's Stairs in the dockyard, among whom were the Princess of Wales and the Duke of Connaught (the Prince of Wales remaining on board the yacht), who, unannounced, made their way to the Tamar and inspected the arrangements for the comfort of the troops on the voyage to Malta. Accompanied by the captain, the Royal visitors made a thorough inspection of the ship, which, having on board a quantity of stores and two torpedo boats for the Mediterranean, besides a crew for H.M.S. Condor, is a little deeper in the water than usual. The Princess of Wales and the Duke of Connaught returned to the yacht, which left for Cowes.

27th Inniskillings. When we heard from Hong Kong, Lieut. Tunnard had been appointed acting brig.-major at that station, Capt. St. Clair having proceeded on three months' leave to Pekin.

29th Regiment. Capt. Fleury has been appointed to the vacant paymastership on joining the Pay Department from the 50th Foot.

32nd Light Infantry. Major R. H. Magenis, late of the regiment, died suddenly at Abington Hall, Cambridge, on the 4th inst. The deceased entered the Army, April 10, 1849; became lieut., May, 5, 1854; capt., Feb. 25, 1855; and brevet major, July 20, 1858. He served with the 90th Light Infantry at the siege and fall of Sebastopol; commanded a party of the regiment at the taking of the rifle-pits on April 19, 1855, and was of the storming party at the assault of the Redan on Sept. 8; mentioned in despatches (medal and clasp, and 5th Class of the Medjidie). Also during the Indian campaign of 1857-58; present with Havelock's column at the actions of Sept. 21 and 23, relief and subsequent defence of Lucknow, defence of the Alumbagh under Outram, and fall of Lucknow (brevet of major, medal and clasp). On the termination of the war, he exchanged from the 90th to the 32nd, and retired by sale of his commission twenty years ago.

48th Regiment. Capt. Ellis has been appointed superintendent of the Umballa gymnasium.

49th Regiment. When we heard from Hong Kong, Capt. St. Clair, brig.-major in China, had been granted leave for 61 days to visit Pekin, Lieut. Tunnard, 27th Inniskillings, acting brig.-major during his absence.

ROYAL MARINES.

Medals for long service and good conduct have been awarded to Colour-Serjt. R. Morris, Serjts. R. Court and G. Court, and Pte. W. Powell.

Major-Gen. Pakenham, commanding the western district, inspected on Monday the Plymouth detachment of Royal Marines, under orders for service in Ireland. In addressing them, he said he had never had the pleasure of inspecting a cleaner or finer body of men. They were not to be disappointed because they had not been selected for a more congenial form of active service; the duty on which they were now ordered was just as important as that on which they had been ordered to the Cape. The detachment embarked on board the Assistance on Tuesday.

50th Queen's. Capt. Fleury, on appointment to the Pay Department, has been appointed paymaster of the 29th Foot, in India.

57th Regiment. Capt. Collins has accompanied H.R.H. the Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) to England as equerry. Capt. Weigall, on entering the Pay Department, has been appointed to the 2nd Batn. 11th Foot, in India.

60th Rifles. The 1st Batn., which only lately left Aldershot for Winchester, on the conclusion of the summer drills, returned to that station on Saturday, to replace the 52nd Light Infantry. Lieut.-Col. Ashburnham, lately promoted to the command of the 3rd Batn., from the 2nd Batn. in Afghanistan, has arrived in England from India. Capt. Holbech is transferred from the 1st to the 3rd Batn., on promotion, but will shortly be seconded, he having been appointed A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Luard in Canada.

64th Regiment. Capt. Walker, who has been gazetted to the Pay Department, has been ordered to India, to join the 2nd Batn. 5th Foot in Afghanistan, as paymaster.

66th Regiment. We regret to learn that the colours were lost in the action at Kushk-i-Nakhud. Two companies of the regiment are at Khelat-i-Ghilzai. Capt. E. P. Mayers, Army Pay Department, has been appointed paymaster.

70th Regiment. Lieut Harris obtains the company vacant by the appointment of Capt. Riddell to the Pay Department.

73rd Regiment. The Standard says:—"Her Majesty has approved of the appointment of Lieut.-Col. O'Brien, C.M.G., late Inspector-General of Police at Mauritius, as Administrator of the Government of St. Lucia, in the place of Mr. Des Vœux, appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Tobago." Col. O'Brien served for many years in the 73rd.

76th Regiment. The regiment on arrival in Ireland at the end of last week, took over quarters at the Curragh, not at Kinsale, as had been arranged.

77th Regiment. The head-quarters and the service companies embark at Portsmouth to-day in H.M.S. Himalaya, for conveyance to India, Lieut.-Col. Colquhoun goes out in command. Major Hoskins and Lieut. Norton have joined head-quarters from the depot at Hounslow, to embark with the service companies for India. A draft of 46 men, under Lieut. Norton, proceeded from the depôt to head-quarters on the 6th inst. Capt. Jervis-White has leave of absence from the 12th to the 28th inst., with permission to travel abroad.

78th Highlanders. Major Forbes has been appointed commandant of the Purandhar Sanitarium.

86th Regiment. This regiment has been placed under orders of readiness to leave England, in about six weeks' time, for Bermuda. Lieut.-Col. Adams will, most probably, take full-pay retirement shortly, after a long connection with the "County Downs," which are spoken of as being in the highest state of discipline and efficiency, under his command. So much so that they were lately recommended to the notice of the War Office as exceptionally well fitted to proceed, if necessary, on active service in Afghanistan. Lieut. Tobin, who is a probationer for the Indian Staff Corps, has greatly distinguished himself whilst serving in Afghanistan. He was in charge of a party last week which was attacked by the enemy, who received a "sharp lesson, their attack being repulsed, with the loss of ten men, Pathans." Lieut. Tobin was wounded in a hand-to-hand encounter, in which his assailant was killed.

92nd Highlanders. The Times' correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta:—"Major White, the Viceroy's Military Secretary, an officer whose gallant services at Char-Asiab will be in every one's recollection, has left Simla to rejoin his regiment, the 92nd Highlanders."

94th Regiment. Brevet Lieut-Col. Murray, C.B., succeeds to the command, vice Col. Malthus, C.B., retired upon pension, Brevet Major Browne obtaining the majority.

97th Regiment. Capt. Smith has been posted to the depôt, vice Capt. Belgrave, appointed to an adjutancy of the Auxiliary Forces.

98th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Linder and Qrmr. Shore embarked at Portsmouth on Saturday last in H.M.S. Tamar, en route to join head-quarters at Malta, and proceed with them to India.

99th Regiment. Capt. Gibaut, Army Pay Department, has been appointed paymaster.

101st Fusiliers. Capt. Allen has arrived home from Halifax, N.S., for two years' duty with the depôt at Tralee.

102nd Fusiliers. Capt. Kerr has been ordered home from Ceylon to join the depôt at Naas for two years, vice Stevens, promoted. Capt. Mills has been confirmed in his appointment as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Wilby, C.B., commanding the troops at Mauritius.

105th Light Infantry. The regiment was to have left Newry and Londonderry yesterday, and is to be quartered as follows:—Head-quarters and six companies at Mullingar, one company at Boyle, and one at Sligo.

107th Regiment. Capt. Davidson, on appointment to the Pay Department, has been appointed to the 2nd Batn. 8th, in India, as Paymaster.

Rifle Brigade. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Nicholl becomes lieut.-col., vice Col. Clark, retired upon half-pay, Brevet Major Dugdale obtaining the majority. Sir Peter George FitzGerald, of Glanleam, Valentia, and Ballinruddery, Listowel, both in the county of Kerry, commonly known as the Knight of Kerry, being the seventeenth in succession of his family who had borne that distinction, died at his residence at Valentia on Saturday last, after a lengthened and painful illness, at the age of 72. A few weeks ago her Majesty was pleased to confer a baronetcy upon him, but at that time he was unfortunately suffering from the illness which has now terminated fatally. He is succeeded by his eldest son, Capt. Maurice (now Sir Maurice) FitzGerald, who was born in 1844, and entered the Army by purchase as an ensign in the Rifle Brigade, in March, 1863, and became a captain in April, 1875. Sir Maurice FitzGerald served throughout the second phase of the Ashantee war from Dec. 1873, as aide-de-camp to Sir Archibald Alison, taking part in the battle of Amoaful, the attack and capture of Becquah, the battle of Ordahan, and the capture of Coomassie; several times mentioned in the home despatches (medal with clasp). At the present time he is equerry to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught. The Irish Times says:—"Qrmr. Richer, 3rd Batn., has passed the qualifying examination, and been noted for appointment as lieutenant. We hear that he is about to succeed to the adjutancy of the battalion, which is now vacant." The 1st Batn. will embark at Portsmouth on Saturday next in H.M.S. Jumna, for conveyance to India.

1st West India Regiment. Qrmr. T. Nicholson died in London on the 18th ult., whilst on leave from the West Coast of Africa. Qrmr. Nicholson accompanied an expedition up the Gambia against the King of Baddiboo on board H.M.S. Torch, and was present at the bombardment of the enemy's works on Swarra Cunda Creek on Feb. 16, 1861; commanded a storming party at the capture of the enemy's entrenched works. Present at the storming and capture of the fortified towns of Carawan and Saba. Served in the Ashantee war of 1873-74 (medal). He was appointed qrmr. April 22, 1871.

Pay Department. Capt. W. Briggs, stationed at Belfast, has been ordered to embark for Gibraltar for duty with the 93rd Highlanders.

Medical Department. Surg.-Major Wade and Surgs. Barker and Michael embarked at Portsmouth on Saturday in H.M.S. Tamar, for conveyance to India. We (Lancet) regret to announce the death, on the 26th ult., at Dover, of Brig.-Surg. W. R. Steuart. Mr. Steuart was gazetted an assist.-surg. in August, 1854, shortly after which he was ordered to the Crimea, where he remained till the fall of Sebastopol, receiving for his services the war medal and clasp, and the Turkish medal. He was promoted surg. on March 9, 1867; surg.-major in August, 1874; and was one of the officers selected by the Director-General for the new rank of brig.-surg. a few months ago. Mr. Steuart's death was extremely sudden, and was due to apoplexy. He leaves a widow, but no children, to lament his loss.

Chaplains' Department. Major-Gen. Higginson, C.B., and the officers of the Brigade of Guards have made a presentation to the Rev. R. C. Halpin, their chaplain for 17 years, on his resigning that position. It consists of a complimentary parting address, accompanied by a large and massive silver salver, with inscription. There is also for Miss Halpin, his daughter, a silver tea service, in recognition of her energy and skilful zeal in founding and for several years carrying on the volunteer chapel choir. To these tokens of regard and good fellowship is added the substantial gift of a purse of 100 sovereigns.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

6th Royal Lancashire. 2nd Lieut. G. Kynaston died on the 4th inst. from typhoid fever, shortly after he had completed his first training with the regiment. He was universally liked, and was also a promising young officer.

Donegal. The polling at Liverpool took place on the 6th inst., with the following result:—Col. Lord Claude J. Hamilton (C), Donegal Militia, 21,019; Mr. Plimsoll (L), 19,118; majority, 1,901.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

Denbighshire Hussars. The annual rifle competition took place on Monday, August 9, at the Denbighshire County Rifle Association at Llangollen. The competition was restricted to the seven best shots in each troop, and the shooting, which was remarkably good, resulted as follows:—Ladies' Denbighshire Hussars Prize, Corpl. Forrester (Wrexham troop) won the silver cup; Corpl. Richardson and Corpl. Roberts taking the second and third prizes respectively. In the competition for Lieut.-

Col. Naylor-Leyland's prizes, Pte. W. Williams (Ruthin troop) won the first prize; the second and third prizes being won by Serjt. J. Roberts and Pte. T. Williams. Corpl. H. D. L. White (Wrexham troop), won the first of the prizes presented by Major Barnes; Lance-Corpl. Owens and Corpl. E. Jones taking the second and third prizes respectively.

The following officers joined the School of Instruction for Auxiliary Cavalry at Aldershot on Monday:—2nd Lieut. Portman, Dorset; Lieut. Woods, Hants; Sub-Lieut. Peake, Leicestershire; 2nd Lieut. Lambert, Middlesex; 2nd Lieut. Anwyl, Montgomeryshire; Sub-Lieut. Watson, Nottinghamshire (Sherwood Rangers); 2nd Lieut. Bowen, Pembroke; 2nd Lieuts. Smyth-Piggott and Ford, North Somerset; 2nd Lieut. Wilson, Yorkshire Hussars; 2nd Lieuts. Lee and Green, 1st West York.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

20th Middlesex Rifles. A detachment, under the command of Capt. Wickenden, is ordered to proceed this day to Aldershot for eight days' duty, and will be attached to the 2nd Infantry Brigade, under Major-Gen. Cameron, C.B.

1st Newcastle Rifles. This regiment was inspected at Newcastle on Monday evening by Col. Lambert, commanding 1st Sub-District. Officers present—Major Taylor (in command), Capt. Gregson, 105th Foot (adjt.); Capts. Downing, Bentham, Wilson, Jeaffreson, and Macdonald; Lieuts. Wood and White; 2nd Lieuts. Bradley and Evans; Surg. Bell, and Qrmr. Deas. After marching past, the regiment was put through the manual and firing exercises by the adjutant, and drilled in battalion by the commanding officer and Capt. Downing, the inspecting officer complimented the battalion on the muster (483 all ranks), and on the fact of only five men being absent without leave. He expressed himself much pleased with the steadiness and general appearance of the regiment, which will take part in the forthcoming Review of Volunteers of the Northern District, at York, on the 28th inst.

The officer commanding the Woolwich District, Major-Gen. Turner, R.A., has ordered an assembly of all the Artillery and Volunteer Regiments under his authority to be held for his inspection on Saturday, August 21, on Woolwich Common. It is some years since a general parade of Volunteers took place in the district.

Two provisional battalions of Volunteers, composed entirely of members of Metropolitan regiments, went to Aldershot on Saturday, for a week's drill at Cox Hill and Rushmoor respectively. The 4th Provisional Battalion, which paraded in the afternoon at Somerset House, under command of Lieut.-Col. du Plat Taylor, was formed principally of members of the 49th Middlesex (Post Office) Corps, of whom there were 349 present, the full strength of the battalion being brought up by 139 of the 26th Middlesex (Customs and Docks) Rifles, and a few men of the Civil Service. The 5th Provisional Battalion, though larger, was of a more heterogeneous character, under command of Lieut.-Col. Farrell, 4th Kent, consisting of 133 men of his own regiment, 68 of the 2nd London, 114 of the 3rd Middlesex, 86 of the 2nd Surrey, 115 of the 6th Surrey, and 113 of the 1st Tower Hamlets. Both battalions left Waterloo by special train.

The official inspection of the 2nd (late 9th) Kent Artillery Brigade took place on Saturday at Plumstead. The only Metropolitan corps now left to be inspected is the 5th Essex Rifles, who will pass that ordeal to-day (Saturday).

BUCKINGHAM PALACE, August 9, 1880.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Capt. A. J. Bigge, Royal Artillery, to be Assistant-Keeper of the Privy Purse and Assistant Private Secretary to her Majesty.

MILITIA GAZETTE.

WAR OFFICE, Pall Mall, August 10, 1880.

INFANTRY.

The following notification is substituted for that which appeared in the Gazette of the 6th inst.:—

The (King's Own) 1st Stafford—Major W. Arden resigns his commission; also is granted the honorary rank of Lieut.-Col., and is permitted to continue to wear the uniform of the regiment on his retirement (Aug. 7, 1880).

THE SWEDISH GYMNASTS.

The members of the Stockholm Gymnastic Club, who are now making a tour of the English military gymnasia, made their first appearance in this country on Monday. The party consists of forty-one gentlemen, inclusive of the president, Lieut. Balck, of the Nerikes Regiment of Infantry; Lieut. Count von Rosen; Capt. Haasum, 2nd Foot Guards; Lieut. Nordenfelt, Vendes Horse Artillery; Lieut. Nyblaeus, Life Regiment of Hussars; Lieut. von der Burg and Lieut. Mesterton, Svea Regiment of Artillery; Lieut. Scherstén, Gottlands Regiment of Infantry; Lieut. Kantzow, Sodermanlants Regiment of Infantry; and Lieut. Berling, South Skane Regiment of Infantry. The remaining thirty-two representatives of the Swedish Club are gentlemen of various professions and students of the university. At the end of the proceedings, the Swedish officers received the warm thanks and congratulations, first of Sir Daniel Lysons, then of the Duke of Teck, and lastly of Gen. Hammersley. Lieut. Balck responded cordially, and called upon his companions to give their national cheer. On Tuesday the party visited Woolwich. The garrison gymnasium was, unfortunately, under repair, but the visitors were enabled to give a gymnastic display at the School of Arms at the Royal Military Academy. The party, to the number of 42, took luncheon at the Artillery mess. On Wednesday, the party were received by the Duke of Cambridge, and they went down to Portsmouth on Thursday, where, after a reception by Admiral Ryder and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, they joined in the Naval and Military Athletic Sports, which went off with great éclat, thanks to the energy and perseverance of Capt. Wells, R.N., and Capt. Cotton, the superintending officer of gymnastics. A most valuable addition to the day's proceedings was found in the Swedish officers and members of the Stockholm Gymnastic and Fencing Club. These gentlemen opened the day's proceedings with an aquatic performance from the Clarence Parade (Southsea) Pier, where, thanks to the kind forethought of Lieut.-Col. the Hon. Fox Powys and officers of the 69th Regiment, the regimental band was in attendance. Admiral Ryder and a large company of officers from the Fleet at Spithead and of civilians from yachts and country side were to be seen in steam-launches and row boats off the Pier, watching the diving, which was universally admitted to be of the very best description, the high diving, from a height of forty-five feet, being incomparably good. On the pier were Gen. H.S.H. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, commanding the Portsmouth District; Rear-Admiral the Hon. F. A. C. Foley, Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard; Capt. Wells, R.N., Lieut.-Col. the Hon. Fox Powys, together with most of the naval and military heads of departments and officers stationed or quartered at that port. After the diving performance, lunch was served under the marquee on the pier, to which the Scandinavian Club invited its guests. Rear-Admiral Foley proposed the health of the members of the Swedish Club, and Col. Powys then redeemed the character of Portsmouth for hospitality by inviting all the forty-four members of the Stockholm Club to dine at the mess of the gallant 69th. Lieut. Victor Balck was forced, however, to decline the kind invitation, but consented, at the earnest desire of the officers of the 69th, to visit their mess on the way to the Naval and Military recreation-ground, where the athletic sports were going on. The whole party then drove to the Cambridge Barracks, and were received with military honours. A pleasant half-hour was spent in the mess-room, and after once more thanking Lieut.-Col. Powys and his officers, Lieut. Balck and his party proceeded to the recreation-ground, and joined in the Naval and Military athletic sports, to which they proved a most welcome addition.

The Queen has approved the following appointments:—Mr. G. W. des Vœux, C.M.G., Governor of the Bahama Islands, to be Governor of Fiji; Mr. T. F. Callaghan, C.M.G., Governor of the Falkland Islands, to be Governor of the Bahama Islands; Mr. Thomas Kerr, Judge of the Assistant Court of Appeal, Barbadoes, to be Governor of the Falkland Islands.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

B.—It is "a nice derangement of epitaphs." But we do not think they really meant to say that the "atmosphere" of the Carlton Club was "impure." They probably intended to assert that the atmosphere of the "War Office" was "impure," and that the impure air there produced an astonishing effect on some of the members of the Carlton Club, whom it "tainted" with a strange disease, one symptom of which was that the unhappy victims of it ate their own words, when the War Office did not find them to its taste. Alas, poor Priscian!

A. S. S.—It was meant to be sarcastic and offensive, but it was amusing. We understand the whole case thoroughly, and know, too, whence came the feeble dart,—"telum imbelle, sine ictu."

YACOOB.—We have never heard of the work to which you refer.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1880.

THE way in which the Government has solved the problem presented to them from South Africa was, perhaps, the best that could have been devised; but it cannot be denied that there are some omissions in the catalogue raisonné, as there are in the personnel, of the officers who have been named for brevets and honours. There will be questions, for instance, respecting the claims of those who may consider themselves entitled to the South-African war medal under the terms of the Warrant, which relate to "such of her Majesty's Colonial forces organised and disciplined as combatants, whether raised by the Colonial Government or by the General officer commanding," which it will not be easy to settle without offence and heartburning, should the matter be raised at all. No one, for instance, could settle offhand that the 8,500 Swazis who were engaged in the attack on Secocoeni (or Sekukuni), would not be entitled to the medal for "operations in the Secocoeni campaign." They were certainly raised by the General officer commanding, and they wer "organised and disciplined" under their own chiefs as much as Dahl's contingent, or the Rustemburgers, or the natives who held Fort Oliphant. The word "troops" opens a large field indeed. It would not be easy to determine where many of these warriors are to wear the medal if they get it, seeing that they have nothing to affix it to but the epidermis, should the medal be worn in the usual place. The list of operations is rather suggestive. We are fond—or at least our colonists are—of assuming that our race has special gifts in dealing with natives and in making colonisation easy, but in 1877-78 and 1879 we seem to, have been busy in war-making all over South Africa and it is not too much to say that in those years we killed more Galekas, Griquas, Gaikas, and Basutos of the Zulu mountains, than the Boers, Ketchewayo, and Moirosi, or Pokani, Sandilli, and their like disposed of in the whole of their career. Some of the "operations" represented hard fighting of its kind, and most of them were associated with hard living and a good deal of marching, but the clasps generally will represent military trials and successes of different sorts of merit. Colonel Lanyon's operations against the Griqua rebels were characterised by skill and speedy success; but generally, if the actual losses in the field be taken, even the Perak expedition and the fighting on the north-east frontier in India were bloody and difficult campaigns in comparison with the cattle-lifting and kraal-burning which constituted the bulk of some of the African expeditionary exploits.

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge leaves London on Monday next for Kissingen. Before returning to England he will visit Berlin, and will, in all probability, be present at the Autumn Manœuvres of the German Army, which commence on the 8th prox. The Duke of Connaught and Sir Garnet Wolseley will also be present at these manœuvres.

The Colonial relief programme has had to be revised, in consequence of the despatch of the reinforcements to India. It had been arranged that the 26th Cameronians were to proceed to Bermuda. It has now been decided to send the 86th Regiment to that station to relieve the 2nd Battalion 19th, proceeding to Halifax, N.S.; the 97th goes, as originally proposed, to Gibraltar, to take the place of the 2nd Battalion Rifle Brigade, returning to England.

There could be no stronger argument in support of the views of those who maintain that the linked battalion system has proved injurious to the interests of the Army, than that furnished by an examination of the foreign service roster. The 86th Regiment stands at the present time far down on the list of regiments on home service, having returned to England in March, 1875, after a long tour of Colonial service, so that it has not yet put in six years in the United Kingdom. Yet it has now to proceed to the West Indies, always an unpleasant service, whilst regiments, such as 1st Battalion 22nd, 50th, 47th, 82nd, and 1st Battalion 16th, which have been over ten years at home, are left in the undisturbed enjoyment of station in the United Kingdom. The 1st Battalion 22nd and the 50th have been over eleven years at home, and none of these corps could fairly have complained had they been placed under orders for embarkation. The 86th, however, will, doubtless, consider it a great hardship to be bundled off at a few weeks' notice to the Colonies, after a very brief tour in England, when they had hoped to go to India; and it must be admitted that there would be ground for their complaints. The Quartermaster-General's Department does its utmost to work the roster in such a manner as not to inflict unnecessary discomfort or inconvenience on individuals; but it must be confessed that it has a difficult duty to perform, and we feel convinced that Sir Garnet Wolseley and the members of his Staff would be the first to allow that the linked battalion-arrangement has resulted in much personal hardship.

A propos of the subject of foreign reliefs, we cannot help thinking that it would be advisable to stretch a point and send the 50th to Bermuda. The regiment, after spending a period of eleven years and three months on home service, could scarcely consider itself unfairly treated, were it required to proceed abroad. Its link, the 97th, would, as at present arranged, move to Gibraltar, from which station it would in the ordinary course be brought home after a year or so more of foreign service. Had the old roster not been disarranged, the 50th would have left home two or three years ago. It seems, then, almost absurd to allow the regiment to continue at home, whilst corps with only half its service are being dispatched to India and the Colonies at short notice.

The 1st Battalion 23rd Fusiliers and 77th Regiment must consider themselves fortunate in being selected for a tour in India. Both regiments last returned from that country—the former in November, 1869, the latter in May, 1870. The 98th, too, last returned home from India—in 1867. These corps should by rights have gone to the Colonies, but the linked battalion system has upset everything.

After the departure of the 86th Regiment for Bermuda, the regiments standing first for foreign service will be the 31st, 47th, 49th, 50th, 52nd, 75th, 84th, 95th, and 96th. It would be advisable for the corps in question to be prepared for any unexpected orders which it may be necessary to issue.

The Duke of Cambridge said on Friday, in the House of Lords, that the regiments which have embarked for India were efficient. We regret that H.R.H. should have thus indirectly supported a system which no one knows as well as himself is utterly rotten. No doubt the regiments were up to their full strength, and were duly armed and clothed, and fairly drilled. But that is not everything. We should like to know how many strangers—for the men of a linked, or even a second battalion, are strangers—were brought into each regiment, and what proportion were under twenty years of age and one year's service. To call the scratch packs which, under the name of regiments, are now sent on active service, efficient, is an abuse of terms. Lord Morley was particularly disingenuous in his reply to the request of Lord Strathnairn for returns of the composition of the regiments sent to India. He talked of its being unadvisable to establish a precedent by giving those returns, but he knows, or ought to know, that returns of the composition of the regiments sent to South Africa were published. The fact is, our Army is in such an unsatisfactory state, that the supporters of Cardwellism shrink from letting it be known, and, consequently, refuse either to give the special returns asked for by Lord Strathnairn, or to publish the Report of Lord Airey's Committee. As Lord Strathnairn pointed out, it is idle to pretend either that Mr. Childers has not mastered the Report in question, or that foreign Powers would become dangerously familiar with our military weakness. If Mr. Childers cannot master a report in four months, he is unfit for his position; while as to foreigners, they know quite as much as we can tell them about the youth and physical incapacity of our recruits. With, however, the brute force of a Radical majority at their back, the Government can do as they please, and as it is apparently their pleasure to complete the work of mischief begun by Lord Cardwell, there is nothing to stop them.

In our last number, it was mentioned that about thirty or forty Swedish officers and gentlemen were coming over here to visit the Military Gymnasia, and "to show their muscle" at Aldershot and various military centres; and there was, in the same paper, a very interesting letter from a Swedish officer on the system of teaching in Sweden, which has, under Ling and others, applied organised tuition with the best results to the development of physical strength and its general concomitant, health and energy. It might have been expected that on such an occasion as this visit, the Government would have given some sum in aid of the expenses to which the officers who must entertain our Swedish friends at their messes must be subjected; but we are sorry to learn that the Authorities have refused to do anything of the kind, and that the Generals and the messes will be left to bear the costs and charges of their inevitable hospitality out of their own pockets, unless the War Office changes its rather unworthy and parsimonious policy in the matter.

Count Karolyi, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador to the Court of St. James, has left Ems for his chamois preserves near Salzburg. His Excellency had the Black Mount from Lord Dudley last year, but it would seem as if he preferred chamois-shooting to deer-stalking.

If there is anything which tends more certainly to the ultimate destruction of a State that rests on conquest than even the gradual acquisition of strength by the conquered, and its development and use in hostility to the conqueror, it is the insolence which for ever reminds the conquered, people of their prostrate condition and of their fate, acting as an incessant spur to every passion which can animate human beings to throw off the yoke of aliens, no matter what benefits and immunities it may bring with it. There is one defect, nearly fatal, in the character of the English as masters. The best of them are free from it altogether; the Englishmen who founded an Imperial State were opposed to any indulgence in it. When the Colonial or the Indian Press yields to the influence of the "snobbery" which insists on the degradation of "natives" and "niggers" as the badge of ascendancy, it is sapping the buttresses of our citadels. "Parcere subjectis, debellare superbos," was the policy of Imperial Rome. It was only when she gratified her passions, by the spectacle of a Caractacus in chains, and by the cruelties which to the conscious loss of strength gave some the semblance of security in present possession, that she excited animosities which rendered her rule impossible. Happily for us, the unofficial language of our people and the tone of our executive Press are for the most part unheard and unknown, where they could sting to madness and fill every heart with hatred, if it were otherwise, and if the taunts, insults, and sarcasms which are so recklessly indulged in were driven home to the minds of those exposed to them. Commander Bruce has recently taught a writer who, in his anxiety to trample on "greasy savages," insulted the Navy, that he could not escape with impunity; but there is no means of enforcing decency of tone on those who, in more civilised parts of the world, pour out their insolence on "niggers" generally, from Cetewayo to Abdurrahman or Yakoob Khan.

The money which Abdurrahman gets to consolidate his power will look very like tribute and hush-money to the Afghans. The £40,000 should certainly not come from the miserable taxpayers of India, for it is paid for an entirely Imperial purpose.

Colonel Sir Owen Lanyon was sworn in as Administrator of the Transvaal on June 5 at Pretoria. In his address to the first Legislative Assembly of the Transvaal, his Excellency said that "the province is utterly destitute of those public institutions which are essential in a civilised community. There is not a civil hospital within its confines; no provision exists for medical assistance in the out-districts; the gaols, as a rule, would be a shame to any community; the only asylums for lunatics are the gaols; the public buildings, if, indeed, they can be regarded as such, are wholly inadequate for the objects required of them; there are no public works of any sort, the rivers being unbridged, and the roads mere tracks formed by ox-waggons; police supervision is wanting,"—a picture not overdrawn and dark enough.

Major G. G. Blaxland, late Lieutenant and Adjutant, 99th Regiment, who was last year appointed Major-Commandant of the 2nd Queensland Volunteer Infantry, has received the appointment of command of the Local Forces in the colony of Queensland, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, with Lieutenant (Local Major) R. A. Moore, Tipperary Artillery Militia, as his Staff officer, and Captain C. C. M'Callum (late Lieutenant, 23rd Fusiliers), as his Infantry Brigade-Major.

Lieutenant-Colonel E. F. Angelo, Captain on the Retired List, late of the Royal Scots, has been appointed to succeed Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel W. H. St. Hill, 19th Regiment, as Commandant and Inspecting Field-officer of the Local Forces in Tasmania, and took up his appointment from May 19.

We are able to confirm the announcement that General Sir John Michel's period of service as Commander of the Forces in Ireland, which expired on August 1, has been extended to October 1 next.

Lieutenant D. C. Dean-Pitt, R.A., who was lately on the staff of Sir Richard Temple, Bart., at Bombay, as aide-de-camp, and who has earned a reputation for himself by the attention he has devoted to the all-important question of transport, has been selected for a vacancy in the Royal Horse Artillery, and has left England for Candahar to join E Battery B Brigade, to which he has been posted.

Sir Henry Havelock-Allan is the mouthpiece of most thoughtful soldiers who have served in India, in questioning the excellence of a system which gives only six or seven British officers, and these mounted, to a regiment of native infantry. In the Bombay Army especially, this organisation is most objectionable, for the Bombay native officers, having risen by seniority, are, as a rule, far too old for their positions. The regular system had its advantages, and so had the irregular system; but the present system combines the evils of both.

We are glad to find that Sir Alexander Gordon has drawn attention to the anomaly of two classes of infantry both fighting in the same manner, but one free from, the other encumbered with, colours. It would cost us a pang to see colours abolished, but we have arrived at the conviction that they are inconsistent with modern modes of fighting. At all events, a beginning might be made by suppressing the Queen's colour.

We alluded a few weeks ago to the appointment of the inventor of a range-finder to act as secretary to a committee formed for considering the best form of instrument of this kind, with the view to its introduction into the Service. The peculiarity of such an appointment, to use no stronger term, could not be overlooked, and the surprise which was felt at the selection of this officer for such a post was far greater than when it became known that his invention had been adopted by the War Office. But how is the appointment to be reconciled with the Treasury Minute, dated November 29, 1871, dealing with the question of officers interested in patents or inventions being employed upon committees of inquiry or otherwise, to judge of plans, inventions, &c., which may be for the advantage of the public service. It is there laid down that "no officer should be called upon to judge, nor to give an opinion, where his own interest may come into collision with that of any other person." Who then, was responsible for the appointment of Captain Watkin as secretary to the range-finder committee?

We are enabled to give an unqualified denial to the report, now being widely circulated, that it is the intention of the Government to despatch Lieutenant-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, G.C.B., to India, to assume command of the troops in Afghanistan.

Bacchante, Capt. the Right Hon. Lord Charles Scott, anchored at Spithead on Thursday evening, and exchanged salutes with the Duke of Wellington on Friday.

Cleopatra. Capt. Francis Durrant, who has been appointed to the command of this ship, vice Sir Lambton Loraine, whose appointment has been cancelled, entered the Navy in 1851, and served as mate in the Spitfire, Lieut.-Com. W. Chapman, on the West Coast of Africa, from Nov. 1857 until promoted to lieut., May 19, 1859. As lieut. he served in the Excellent, at Portsmouth, from Dec. 1859 until Aug. 1860, when he was appointed to the Centurion, attached to the Channel Squadron, and remained until the close of 1861. On March 13, 1862, he joined the Magicienne, Capt. the Prince of Leiningen, fitting at Devonport for the Mediterranean, and in Dec. 1864 removed into the Cambridge, at Devonport, where he remained until appointed, April 2, 1867, to the Minotaur, attached to the Channel Squadron. He served in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert from Oct. 1867 until promoted to commander, Sept. 2, 1869; was second-captain in the Minotaur from April, 1870, until June, 1873; and commanded the Eagle, at Liverpool, from July 1873 until appointed, May 28, 1874, to the command of the Royal yacht Osborne, which he commanded until posted, May 15, 1876. From Aug. 1877 till Feb. 1879 he was flag-captain to Vice-Admiral Charles F. Hillyar, C.B., in the Audacious, at China, and subsequently studied at the Greenwich Royal Naval College, where, on Oct. 2, 1879, he was appointed captain of the establishment.

Helicon. Lieut. W. L. Morrison, who has been appointed to the command of this vessel, in succession to Com. Sir B. W. Walker, served as additional sub-lieut. in the Lord Clyde, Capt. Roderick Dew, C.B., in the Mediterranean, from Oct. 22, 1867, until Jan. 5, 1868, when he was transferred to the Lord Warden, Capts. W. R. Rolland and T. Brandreth; and subsequently served under the flag of Admiral Sir Alexander Milne in the same ship, until transferred, July 1, 1870, to the Hercules, Capt. Lord Gilford, with the Channel Squadron, and remained until the close of 1871. He afterwards served in the Doris, Capts. W. H. Edye and the Hon. E. R. Fremantle, C.B., C.M.G., with the Detached Squadron from Oct. 16, 1872, until the spring of 1875, and was employed in the Minotaur, Capts. Lord Walter J. Kerr and H. W. Rawson, under the flags of Vice-Admiral F. B. P. Seymour and Rear-Admiral the Right Hon. Lord John Hay, C.B., with the Channel Squadron, from Aug. 6, 1875, until Jan. 9, 1878, since which time he has served in the Falcon, Com. B. F. Clark, in the Mediterranean.

Hercules, Capt. Townsend, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, having in company the Valiant and Defence, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Wednesday evening from Vigo. The Warrior, Penelope, and Lord Warden parted company off the Eddystone with the Channel Squadron. After completing with coals, the vessels of the Reserve Squadron will leave for their stations.

Himalaya, Capt. Harry W. Brent, left Portsmouth last Saturday, after disembarking her passengers, for Devonport, for repairs. Having embarked the 1st Batn. Rifle Brigade, she is expected to sail this day for India.

Hornet, Com. J. S. Eaton, after being detained at Malta to make good defects in her machinery, continued her passage home from China to pay off, on Thursday, Aug. 5. She may be expected at Devonport in about a fortnight.

Kingfisher. Com. Reginald Heber Thornton, who will shortly commission this ship, which made a satisfactory trial of her engines and machinery last week, served as sub-lieutenant in the Highflyer, Capt. T. M. S. Pasley, in the East Indies, from Dec. 1864 until promoted to lieutenant, March 29, 1866. He subsequently served in the Liverpool, Capt. J. Seacombe, on particular service, from Nov. 16, 1866, until Sept. 28, 1867, when he was appointed additional of the Excellent, Capt. A. W. A. Hood, and in April 1869 was appointed junior staff officer, and remained until 1870. He was afterwards employed in the Zealous, Capt. F. A. Hume, under the flag of Rear-Admiral Arthur Farquhar, in the Pacific, from July 13, 1870, until paid off, in April, 1873; again as additional of the Excellent from June, 1873, until November following, when he was transferred to the Cambridge, and remained until promoted to commander, Nov. 1, 1876. He has been second-captain in the Indus, Capt. C. T. Curme, under the flags of Admiral-Superintendents G. O. Willes, C.B., and C. W. Hope, at Devonport, since July, 1877.

Lord Warden, Capt. the Hon. E. R. Fremantle, anchored at Spithead on Friday morning, in company with the Minotaur, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Hood, C.B.

Malabar, Capt. John G. F. Grant. The 23rd Regt. will arrive at Portsmouth on Monday next for embarkation, en route to India. Prior to embarkation, new colours will be presented to the regiment on the dockyard jetty, and the Princess of Wales has graciously undertaken to perform the ceremony. On Friday the Malabar made a trial of her engines, proceeding out of harbour for the purpose.

Minotaur, Capt. Harry H. Rawson, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Hood, Commander-in-Chief of the Channel Squadron, consisting of the Agincourt (flagship of Rear-Admiral Waddilove), Northumberland, and Achilles, together with the Lord Warden and Penelope, parted company with the Reserve Squadron on Wednesday, and, after target practice, proceeded to Devonport and Portsmouth.

Miranda, Capt. the Hon. E. S. Dawson. In reply to a letter from the Secretary of Lloyd's, drawing attention to the telegram received at the India Office from the Viceroy of India, to the effect that on June 19 a large fire was seen burning on an inaccessible island 23 miles S.W. of Tristan d'Acunha, and suggesting that a clue may thereby be afforded to the fate of the crew of the missing ship Knowsley Hall, or of the British ship Hamlet, which sailed from New York, Jan. 30, for Galle, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty state that her Majesty's sloop Miranda will shortly proceed from England to Australia, viâ the Cape of Good Hope, and that orders will be given to her to touch at Tristan d'Acunha, and to search the inaccessible island. Their Lordships also draw attention to the fact that from a published report of Capt. East, commanding her Majesty's ship Comus, in a similar case, at Amsterdam Island, a fire, which was supposed to have been lighted by a shipwrecked crew, was traced to a party of fishermen curing their fish.

Newcastle, Capt. Edward Kelly, anchored at Spithead on Friday morning, in company with the Minotaur, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Hood, C.B.

Orontes, Capt. R. G. Kinahan, arrived at Gibraltar on Aug. 11, and landed the 41st Regt. in the course of the day. She sailed on Aug. 12 with the 24th Regt. for India.

NAVAL ATTACK ON PORTSMOUTH.

On Tuesday last Fort Gillkicker was attacked from the sea by a Naval force commanded by Capt. Hopkins, of the Excellent. The Prince and Princess of Wales on board the Osborne, Rear-Admiral Hoskins, Mr. Brassey, M.P., Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, secretary of the Admiralty, and Capt. J. E. Erskine, R.N., private secretary to Lord Northbrook, on board the Enchantress, and Admiral Ryder, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, on board the Fire Queen, witnessed the performance from Spithead, where the Glatton, supposed to represent the van of an enemy's fleet, was stationed, to cover the attack of the gun and torpedo-boats on the fort. The coup d'œil, as witnessed either from Spithead or from the shore, but more especially from Southsea Pier, was remarkably pretty, for the day being exceedingly fine, the whole of the water was dotted with white canvas and many-coloured bunting, which, at one moment hidden by the smoke from the guns, at the next would stand out in bold relief above the blue water, as a puff of wind would clear away the smoke, and allow the full force of the sun's rays to pour down upon the scene from the midst of an unclouded sky.

The object of the day's proceedings was primarily to ascertain the best means of forcing a channel blocked by submarine mines and obstructions, and defended by artillery and infantry fire. This channel was the same which had formed the scene of the two previous experiments of a similar nature. But it will be remembered that, owing to the serious and fatal illness of Dr. Domville, the late Inspector-General of Haslar Hospital, no heavy ordnance could be used in the night attack made on Oct. 16 last year, and one of the most important objects of the attack—namely, the determination as to the effect of smoke upon the electric light—could not be computed, or even approximately ascertained. It was, therefore, determined to repeat the experiment on the first favourable opportunity, and on Tuesday last the contest between the land and sea forces raged along the coast, extending from Fort Gillkicker, at the sea end of Haslar Wall, to Blockhouse Point, at the entrance to Portsmouth Harbour. Around this coast-line, stretching out in crescent shape from point to point, ran a line of guard-boats, flying blue ensigns, within which lay the mined ground, over which spectators were previously warned by Admiral Ryder not to pass in boats, sailing-yachts, or steamers, as any encroachment of this defended water would be dangerous to life.

The attacking force consisted of the Glatton, which represented the leading ironclad of a squadron, and carried two 25-ton guns and a brace of 20-pounder torpedo guns; four gunboats—the Medway, Spey, Vesuvius, and Manly—two of which carried their usual armament of three 64-pounders, the others being unarmed except for the purpose of destroying mines; 12 torpedo-boats and steam-launches, besides several rowing boats. At the time the action began, it was supposed that the hostile force had silenced the heavy guns in Fort Gillkicker, and the advanced batteries on the imaginary shore, and that the Glatton had taken up a position at the head of a channel 120 yards wide, which had been cleared by the attack in previous countermining operations, and was in the act of despatching her attacking flotilla to remove the remaining obstruction, and force the passage to the town and dockyard. In this extremity, the only heavy artillery which remained for the defence were the guns in Fort Monckton, consisting of four muzzle-loading rifled 64-pounders, two small-bore 8-in. guns, and one breech-loading rifled 7-in. gun; the other available means at the command of the shore party being the O field battery of the 3rd Brigade Royal Artillery, under the orders of Col. Hope-Johnstone, a company of Royal Engineer Submarine Miners, and a battalion of infantry, represented by three companies of the 1st Batn. 24th Foot, under the command of Capt. Tongue. The defending forces were under the command of Col. Schaw, R.E., while the electric and mining operations for the protection of Fort Monckton and the channel were under the superintendence of Capt. Ramsay, R.E., commanding the submarine miners. The attack was conducted by Capt. Hopkins, of the Excellent, assisted by Capt. Gordon and the officers of the Vernon. The chief umpires, Col. Graham, R.E., V.C., and Capt. Bosanquet, R.N., took up their position with the defenders on the western bastion of Fort Monckton, while the assistant-umpires, Com. Beaumont, R.N., and Lieut.-Col. Ritchie, R.A., were placed with the enemy on board the Glatton. Sub-umpires, in pairs, from the Navy and Army, were also stationed at each gun ashore and afloat, in the test-room inside the fort, at the various firing positions, on board of each vessel engaged, and with the infantry on the flanks and curtain. To carry out these duties, 11 officers of experience were drawn from the Royal Artillery, 10 from the Royal Marine Artillery, 15 from the Royal Engineers, two from the 2nd Batn. 12th Foot, two from the 69th Foot, and one from the 108th Foot, the same number of naval officers being taken from the harbour squadron. It was really upon the promptness and alacrity of the sub-umpires that the practical value of the operations depended. They were prohibited from taking part in any way on the side of the attack or the defence, either by giving advice or expressing an opinion, during the progress of the engagement. Their duty consisted in recording, in tabular forms supplied for the purpose, the facts that came under their observation, and in ruling the several guns, boats, and men out of action, as soon as they became disqualified. The disqualifications were very stringent, but pressed more than usually severely upon the gunners in the fort. On the previous occasion, six imaginary hits sufficed to put a gunboat, and three a torpedo launch, out of action; and it was agreed that if a row-boat came within the electric ray for one moment, whereby it became exposed to a musketry fire from a distance not exceeding 300 yards, it was to be ruled out of the fight. On Tuesday, however, eight hits from large guns, or 16 from field guns, were required to disable a gunboat or first-class torpedo-boat, six hits from any gun being held sufficient to put all other craft out of action. In like manner, four hits from an ironclad or a gunboat were understood to practically destroy a field-gun. Even supposing, therefore, that almost every shot proved a hit, the swift torpedo-boats and pinnaces had an excellent chance of damaging the obstructions and connections before they could be ruled out of action. The effect of the infantry fire upon the attacking flotilla, always a difficult matter to determine in mimic warfare, and of the fire of the attack upon the infantry of the defence, was left to be determined by the umpires at the close of the operations. Explosions of blowing charges within 30 ft. of any vessel or boat were considered as disabling her. These charges, which were assumed for the purpose of the operations to represent ground and buoyant mines—mechanical, electro-contact, and observation—and to spread corresponding destruction around, were not to exceed 2 lb. of powder, when placed 24 ft. or more under water; but if in shallower water, they were not to exceed 4 oz., and in no case were they to lie on the surface. It was also ruled that in case a boat succeeded in attaching a charge to any obstruction, she might claim immunity from being disabled, on the supposition that the charge, if fitted with a Bickford fuze, would explode, whether, after fixing it, the boat were captured or not. Having once, however, claimed immunity, she could take no further part in the attack, and she was, moreover, prohibited from replacing the charge, in the event of its missing fire. In order, however, to minimise the danger, it was agreed that before firing a charge an attacking boat should be required to hoist a red flag, as a signal that all operations were to temporarily cease, and that all craft were to retire for purposes of safety to a distance of 300 yards, until after the charge had exploded or a missfire had been proved. For it need scarcely be said that obstructions in the shape of booms and chains could not be broken through by make-believe detonations, but that it was necessary to remove them by practicable charges of powder and gun-cotton. When a countermining boat, again, was signalled out of action, she was ordered to ship all her mines and sheer out of danger from their explosion before anchoring, and the sub-umpires on board were requested to carefully note whether any electro-contact mines were exploded by her when moving away. All vessels except "creeping" boats employed in the attack were distinguished by alphabetical flags, while the field-guns were distinguished by numeral flags; and the sub-umpires were instructed that hits to be effective should be directed at the hull, and not at the flag, of the boat or vessel, and were to rule accordingly. Each hit was communicated at once to the chief umpires, who could alone rule boats out of action from the shore, and to the assistant-umpires on the Glatton, who alone could declare guard-boats and field-guns to be disabled.

At 9 a.m. the attacking squadron was seen huddled together around the Glatton, as the haze rose and drifted slowly to the westward. The first gun was fired at 9.23 a.m. by the fort, as the land party observed the enemy coming into action, an admirable description of which we quote from the Times of Wednesday as follows:—

"As on the occasion of the night attack, the efforts of the enemy were mainly directed to encompass the destruction of the formidable boom, which not only blocked the passage of the whole channel to be cleared, but served to protect the electric connections between the shore batteries and the nests of sunken mines. This obstruction formed the object of as obstinate a struggle between the rival combatants as the famous bridge in Shakespeare between the French and English. There were, indeed, some very excellent services rendered at the 'boom,' and none the less so because the obstacle proved a very different thing from the one used at the previous conflict. On that occasion the boom consisted of an arrangement of spars joined together in a way thought to be effective, and placed at right angles to the fort. As a matter of fact, however, the only difficulty experienced by the enemy was in approaching it, as it was commanded by the heavy ordnance and infantry from the shore. But the moment the Bluejackets succeeded in attaching to it a charge of gun-cotton, it was easily shivered, and the Vesuvius and the Bloodhound steamed through the fissure. Yesterday, on the contrary, the boom was constructed after the manner of a gridiron, a number of balks of timber being placed parallel to each other and to the face of the fort, and with the ends consequently pointing in the direction of the attack. For the purpose of keeping the balks at a proper distance of 6 ft. apart and securing them, and at the same time opposing obstructions to the passage of small craft through the interstices, three rows of chains were placed across them at regular intervals, thus forming the meshes of a rigid net, the whole being kept in position by mooring-anchors placed fore and aft. It will thus be seen that the fracture of a chain, or even the destruction of one or more of the balks, would not open a passage for ironclads, but that the reticulations would have to be fatally injured in many places before the boom would cease to be operative. And when it is stated that the obstruction was so placed as to be under a concentrated fire from the defenders' guns, the hazardous nature of the enterprise will be self-evident. Both in front and in rear of the boom the passage was further impeded by nets floated by means of cork, the object being to foul the screws of the steam craft, while in the rear of all a substantial spar was placed across the channel, the whole area being at the same time covered with sunken mines. The character of the defence was well preserved, but still not so completely as to prevent the other side from gaining a wrinkle. Both the timber and the chains were obtained by requisition from the dockyard, and with so many balks for the first part of the puzzle and so many shackles of chain-cable for the second, it was no difficult matter for the Navy to arrive at a pretty accurate idea of the obstacles to be surmounted. At all events, the Manly and the whole of the torpedo-boats, launches, and pinnaces had their cutwaters specially protected, and as the protection took the shape of a spar descending obliquely to below the keel, it was admirably adapted for enabling the vessels to run over chains and floating débris. Simultaneously with the despatch of the creeping craft the Glatton engaged the guns of the fort, and thus served to distract the attention of the defenders from the proceedings of the small fry. But nothing can excuse the wretched service of the four field guns on the right of the fort. These guns were placed in masked embrasures, concealed from the enemy by furze, and had they been well served it would have been impossible for the creeping craft to have reached the boom without being disabled. As it was, however, of the three first which attempted to force the passage, not one was apparently affected by the artillery fire. The first launch seemed to actually leap over the obstruction and to carry its attendant dingey with it. The second was hung up high and dry in the chains, where it was subsequently succeeded by another creeper, the crews of which had to be taken out of danger by row-boats. The third boat succeeded in actually passing through the boom, but came to grief, and sunk, through the explosion of one of her own creeping charges. While this was going on, the Glatton kept up a withering fire upon the fort, the whole ship being obscured in a cloud of smoke, during which it would have been comparatively easy for a guard-boat to have assailed her in a vulnerable part. How the sub-umpires were enabled to fulfil their duties in the circumstances we know not, but when the gentle westerly breeze lifted the fog, a couple or so of row-boats had succeeded in attaching a charge of gun-cotton to the boom. The buglers blew a 'Cease fire,' and after the crews had betaken themselves to a place of safety, a majestic explosion occurred, which seemed to shatter the boom for a considerable distance of its length. This, however, was not the case, for while the balks were destroyed, the chains remained intact, and the passage continued to be disputed. And now occurred the most interesting and exciting part of the combat. The Vesuvius and Medway, with 'cow-catchers' lowered, came into action, under a tremendous fire from the defenders, with the evident intention of forcing a passage, the Medway at the same time engaging the fort with her 64-pounders. Both gunboats ran full tilt against the chains, dragging what appeared to be countermining barges after them. As no men, however, were seen on board depositing the countermines, the defenders saw through the ruse. The barges were, in fact, dummies, and the shore artillery concentrated their fire upon the gunboats. But, notwithstanding the admirable target which they presented at short range, they were allowed by the umpires to proceed, and they succeeded in breaking through the chains without being entangled in the nettings. They were afterwards followed by the Manly and Spey, the latter fighting her guns as she came along. Both passed through the obstruction in safety and without being under the necessity of striking their colours. This practically ended the engagement. Of the torpedo boats and launches belonging to the attacking party, no fewer than 11 were declared out of action by the umpires, one being destroyed by her own creeping charges, and another by a line of mines exploded from the miner. But the boom had been forced, and this was the object of the attack. It remains to be seen, however, whether a space was cleared sufficiently large for the passage of the Glatton. It is supposed that only about 500 yards had been cleared out of the 700 yards of channel, and that there were many mines still operative at the conclusion of the attack was apparent by the electrical explosion from the fort, after Capt. Gordon had hoisted the 'recall,' at half-past 10. Indeed, as there were as many dummy connections as real connections in the disputed channel, there is reason to think that the creeping craft exhausted a great part of their zeal in destroying cables, which had been sunk for the express purpose of being destroyed, and thus of misleading them. This can only be determined by subsequent examination. Each line of countermines is supposed to be effective for 60 ft., and hence a double line should clear a passage 120 ft. broad. But in order to do this it is essential that they should be deposited in the midst of the defenders' submarine mines, otherwise they would prove harmless. All that can be said at present is that the gunboats and several small craft succeeded in forcing the boom and laying their countermines; but it is still uncertain whether the Glatton and the ironclad fleet which she was supposed to represent could have passed over the supposed space without bumping an electro-contact mine, or being destroyed by observation charges.

"About half-past nine o'clock there was a night demonstration on a limited scale, the purpose being to ascertain the effect which the smoke from the discharge of artillery exercised upon the beam of the electric light. As is well known, the steam from a torpedo-launch, illumined by a strong light, appears solid and opaque, but the effect upon the light itself of moving wreaths of powder-smoke had not been practically tested in action. The engagement accordingly resolved itself into an artillery duel, the Glatton, Medway, and Spey maintaining a tremendous cannonade upon the fort, while the field battery, heavy ordnance, and infantry of the defences responded with equal vigour. Between them an abundance of smoke was produced, and as there happened to be not a breath of wind blowing at the time, the opportunity presented for observation was all that could be desired. There can be little doubt that the result was to diffuse the electric beam and to severely handicap the defence. The lamps used were Siemens's, each having the estimated illuminating power of 14,000 candles; yet notwithstanding this extraordinary energy, the smoke from the guns in their wake seemed to absorb the light to a great extent. Another effect of the diminished brilliancy appeared to be to bring out the figures of the men serving the guns and managing the lights into greater prominence. The object of the demonstration rendered the use of guard-boats unnecessary, so that except from the guns the torpedo craft had it all their own way. After the smoke had cleared off a little, it was perceived that several small craft had in the meantime succeeded in attaching blue-lights to the boom, representing imaginary charges of gun-cotton, to be followed by imaginary but irreparable injury to the obstruction. Subsequently several torpedo craft scrambled through. They were followed by the Medway, apparently through the break made by the morning attack. The Spey afterwards attempted to run the gauntlet, and the demonstration ended with her discomfiture."

THE CHERBOURG FÊTES.

A great banquet was given on Monday evening at the Hôtel de Ville, at which a large number of distinguished personages were present, and amongst others Rear-Admiral Hoskins and Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., Junior Lords of the Admiralty, Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, M.P., Secretary to the Admiralty, Admiral Ryder, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, and Capt. J. E. Erskine, R.N., private secretary to Lord Northbrook. Admiral Jauréguiberry, Minister of Marine, in the course of the evening, proposed success to the English Navy. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, Secretary of the Admiralty, in responding to the toast on behalf of the English Navy, said that a British admiral of former days, on seeing such a fine French squadron as that which was now lying off Cherbourg, would have recrossed the Channel in all haste to prepare his own ships, but all that was now changed. He added that he perceived a guarantee of peace in the similarity existing between the Governments of England and France, which, though different in form, were founded upon the same principles. M. Grévy went to the Place d'Armes, overlooking the sea, and witnessed the sham-fight, which proved a great success. At a given signal all the ships of the squadron appeared in one blaze of fire, the cannon thundered, and the sea, brilliantly illuminated by means of the electric light, presented a most unwonted and fairy-like spectacle. As far as the eye could reach were to be seen ships covered with light and fire, and then to the shore were wafted the strains of the "Marseillaise." The scene was simply suberb, and it is impossible to describe the enthusiasm of the spectators, estimated at upwards of 100,000. At the torpedo practice M. Grévy started the first torpedo, M. Léon Say the second, and M. Gambetta the third. As soon as the explosions were over a number of boats hurried to the spot, and succeeded in obtaining an immense number of dead fish. A sailor presented to M. Grévy, on board the Suffren, a superb specimen, nearly three feet in length. "My torpedo cost 3,600 f.," said M. Grévy, with a laugh, "this is indeed an expensive fish." And he dismissed the man with his fish, and a napoleon to boot. Four torpedo boats were then manœuvred. Their remarkable speed and admirable action created much interest.

CHILI AND PERU.

The Panama Star and Herald of the 15th ult. publishes a letter from its Lima correspondent, dated June 30, in which he says:—"While I was closing my letter of the 28th inst., the troops stationed at Lima were mustering in larger numbers than I had ever seen them before during the whole time I have resided in this city. Some three hours after the mail was despatched, the 'Bando' was published, and its effect on the people has been tremendous. Every man between 16 years of age and 60, excepting the clergy and the medical profession, and a few employés of the Government offices, has to present himself in uniform and to drill every day from 11 o'clock until 1. To enable the men to do this, all places of business are to be closed from 10 a.m, until 2 p.m. Those who do not comply with this order will be immediately sent to join the active army. All foreigners are invited to form themselves into corps to maintain order and protect property in the event of the city being left at any time without the usual guardians of the peace. To show the spirit which animates the people, it may not be amiss to state that the Archbishop of Lima has placed the treasure of the Church at the disposition of the Government, to be used in the service of the country." The same paper says:—"An official telegram reached Payta from Lima on the 4th inst., announcing the blowing up in Callao Bay of the Chilian transport Amazonas. The following is a translation of the despatch:—'Lima, July 4, 1880. To the authorities, Payta. Yesterday, at five o'clock in the afternoon, the enemy's transport Amazonas was blown up in Callao Bay by one of our torpedoes, and sunk immediately. (Signed), Paz Soldan.' We are without particulars as to the event, but the authenticity of the fact cannot be doubted."

The German Admiralty, according to the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung has decided that all the armoured corvettes of the German navy, the Sachsen, Baiern, Würtemberg, and Baden, shall be fitted with apparatus for discharging locomotive torpedoes below the surface of the water. The Prinz Adalbert, one of the new unarmoured spar-decked corvettes of the German fleet, and the Ariadne, a flush-decked corvette, are already provided with the apparatus; and the ironclad frigates Friedrich Karl and Kron Prinz, as well as the screw corvettes Vineta and Luise, are also to be fitted with it during the course of the present financial year. The tubes from which the torpedo is discharged are placed in the bow of the vessel, parallel to the keel and about six feet below the water-line, so that the torpedoes are discharged from the ship in a right-ahead direction. To ensure accuracy, grooves are cut in the interior of the tubes, into which projections on the torpedoes, similar to the studs on the projectiles for rifled ordnance, fit. The total sum spent in providing torpedo material will amount to about six million marks.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. NATIONAL ARTILLERY MEETING.

(From our Correspondent.)

The detachments forming the second contingent of Volunteer gunners who have elected to do duty at Shoeburyness during the week, were all under canvas early on Sunday morning.

On Sunday, there were no less than 89 detachments in camp. Of this number, Durham sent 20, and Lancashire 21; Cheshire only sends 4, and Kent 20. The other places represented were Devonshire, Edinburgh, Essex, Fife, Forfar, Gloucester, Norfolk, and East York. Altogether, when the roll was called on Sunday evening, 981 answered to their names. In the morning, there was the usual service in the men's mess-tent, at which the Rev. Mr. Browne, chaplain of the garrison, officiated. It was very largely attended not only by the Volunteers present at the church parade, but also by the officers and men of the Regular garrison. After it was over, most of the men left camp, for the purpose of enjoying a stroll to Southend, or a ramble among the many pleasant lanes which surround the camp.

On Monday morning the reveille sounded at an early hour, in order for the men to commence the practice with the 64-pounder for the prizes offered by Sir Richard Wallace, the Association, and Major Sargood, of the Royal Victoria Regiment of Artillery. The conditions were precisely the same as in the shell contest last week, viz., four rounds at a 6-ft. square target, moored out at 1,850 yards at sea, the time allowed being 10 minutes. All the detachments took part in the contest, and some excellent practice was the result, each of the prizes being awarded for three direct hits out of the four rounds under time. The 2nd detachment 2nd Kent took first prize, and Scotland's Challenge Cup and the Cinque Port's Challenge Cup for the best time, 7 min. 52 sec. Next came the 1st detachment 2nd Devonshire, from Devonport, with two minutes under time; the 9th detachment 2nd Durham, from Seaham, 9 min. 14½ sec.; the 1st detachment 1st Gloucester, 9 min. 18 sec.; and the 1st detachment 1st Norfolk (Aldeburgh), 9 min. 54 sec. Of the 89 detachments, only 31 slightly exceeded the time; eight made two direct hits, 40 one direct hit each, and one a direct and ricochet hit. Those who failed to score were in good direction, and few of the shells fell short. On the same day, the 40-pounder Armstrong contest with shot, at 1,600 and 2,000 yards, was commenced, and concluded on Tuesday. The prizes were of the value of about £90. Twenty-seven detachments exceeded the time, which was 7 min. The first prize went to the 9th detachment of the Durham corps for three direct hits, in the excellent time of 5 min. 49 sec. The 1st Forfar (Dundee) were 19 sec. over, but, with two directs and a ricochet hit, took second prize; the third fell to the 1st detachment of the 2nd Durham, for two directs in 5 min. 46 sec.; the fourth to the 2nd Lancashire (Liverpool), for two directs in 6 min. 28 sec.; and the fifth to the 1st Lanark, for 6 min. 51 sec. The Folkestone detachment, 1st Cinque Ports, made two direct hits, but were 1 sec. over time. Four detachments made one direct and one ricochet hit; 15 one direct hit each; and 6 one ricochet hit each, and 47 failed to score. As with the shell contest, however, the direction was good, and had the mark been a ship or building, the shot would, in all probability, have taken effect. It should also be mentioned that many of the detachments who fired early in the morning did so under circumstances not conducive to good practice, the haze at sea being so thick as to render the targets, upwards of a mile out, almost indistinguishable. The Royals seemed to think that the practice, taken altogether, was good, and there is little doubt it was.

Some disappointment was felt on Tuesday among the Volunteers who had been practising the B shift of the Repository contest, that the operations of the first week had again been selected. It was less difficult, and probably this may have been the explanation. Last week what was considered very good time was made by the Customs Corps, who got through the work, which has previously been described, in something less than 9 min. Nearly 30 detachments entered, as against seven of the 1st Division, the principal interest centring, as it did last year, in the second week, when they won the principal prize. The 3rd Kent (Woolwich Arsenal) detachments and Lancashire (Liverpool) men finished on Monday in what was considered the somewhat marvellous time of 7 min. 48 sec.; but Horne's detachment of the late 10th Kent evidently intended equal, if not better work, and, to the admiration of the Royals who were present, completed the shift without a single hitch in about six seconds less time. Of course, they again take first prize for 7 min. 41½ sec., the second goes to the 1st and 2nd detachments 8th Lancashire, for 7 min. 48 sec.; and the third to the same regiment, for 8 min. 47½ sec. Altogether there were 21 competing detachments in the Repository. The next best times to those given above being the 2nd Durham (Seaham), 8 min. 50 sec., and the 2nd Kent, 8 min. 55 sec.

On Wednesday, the last 40-pounder Armstrong contest, with shot, was disposed of in the morning, and the 10-inch gun competition for the Corporation of London and City Companies' Challenge Cup in the afternoon. The practice in the former was hardly so good as on the previous day, the first prize of £45 going to the 1st detachment 2nd Durham, for 15 points, but in the excellent time of 4 min. 26 sec.; the second prize of £20 to the 7th detachment of the same regiment for a like score, in 5 min. 24 sec.; the third prize of £16 16s. to the 3rd detachment 1st Gloucester for 15 points, in 5 min. 34 sec.; and the fourth prize of £10 to the 5th detachment 3rd Kent for 12 points, in 5 min. 28 sec. The 4th detachment 3rd Essex gained a certificate for 12 points made under the time. There were in addition a 12 by the 6th detachment of the latter regiment; eight detachments made one direct and one ricochet hit; 17 detachments one direct hit each, and 15 detachments one ricochet hit each, and 43 did not score. Of the 89 detachments only 20 failed—and by a few seconds—to get through the work in the 7 min. The selected detachments for the 10-inch gun were 18 in number, each, as last week, firing three rounds of shot at 1,200 yards. The three prizes were taken with the highest possible scores, whereas last week two 30's came in for prizes. Better time was, however, made at the first competition. In both weeks of last year, all the prizes were won with the highest possible. The Corporation of London and City Companies' handsome cup now goes to the 3rd Kent, 7 min. 34 sec.; the second prize, of £19, to the 1st Edinburgh, for 7 min. 17 sec.; and the third to the 2nd Devon, for 7 min. 34 sec. After the shot and shell contests with the Armstrong and Palliser were finished, the aggregate scores for her Majesty the Queen's Prize were made up, and it was found that the 9th detachment 2nd Durham and the 1st detachment Midlothian tied, with 39 points each, which is exactly the same score made by the 4th East York (Hull) men last August. The Durham detachment are now the winners, their aggregate time in both contests (20 min. 21½ sec.) being better than than that of the Scotch corps, who take the Secretary of State for War's Prize. Lord Waveney's Challenge Prize (a loading mortar), with £10 added, goes to the 2nd Middlesex, for 36; the fourth to the 4th East York (Hull), for 30; and the fifth to the 2nd Durham, 1st detachment, for 27.

Probably on no previous occasion has so much interest centred in the performance of the 10-inch rifled muzzle-loading gun—nominal weight, 18 tons—as on Thursday, when the Royal Artillery detachments competed for the prizes given by the Association, which are a silver cup, value £10, and £5 in money to the No. 1, and £1 15s. to each gunner of the first winning detachment; and a silver cup, value £5, with £1 in money to the No. 1, and 15s. to each gunner of the second winning detachment. The projectile was the Palliser shot, with gas-check, the weight as fired being 410lbs., and the charge 70lbs. of pebble-powder. Wedge wads were used for every round, as usual. The ranges were 1,200 and 1,400 yards, alternate shots at each, three being fired at the lesser and two at the greater distance. The first prize was won by the detachment of the 11th Brigade (Serjt. West, the No. 1), with the highest possible score of 60 points, or five direct hits, one of the best feats on record, the time being only 7 min. 40 sec. The second prize was awarded to the detachment of the 10th Brigade, from Cork (Corpl. Lilley, the No. 1), for three direct hits, in the still more remarkable time of 8 min. 14½ sec. Western District were third with three direct hits in 8 min. 54½ sec.; Amalgamated fourth, with 30 points; the School of Gunnery fifth, with 12 points. The Southern and South-Eastern Districts did not score. On the same day, the detachment of the 3rd Kent, which won the Repository prize on Tuesday, competed in the more difficult B Shift for the Repository badges of the Association, which they won in 7 min. 30 sec., thus beating the time of the Customs' corps last week. This makes the third time that Serjeant-Major Horne (the No. 1) has been successful. The Queen's Prize was taken by the regiment in 1875, and the Repository badges in the same and three subsequent years. The prizes were presented in the afternoon by the Marchioness of Londonderry. Colonel Hastings made a brief but soldierly address to the Volunteers, praising generally the discipline and good-conduct in camp, but remarked specially on the fact that the practice in 40-pounder and 64-pounder contests was not so good as last year. This he attributed to the desire of the Nos. 1 to finish under the time. He said there was also too much hurry and bustle in the Repository, which was alike dangerous to life and limb. The division left camp yesterday.

With the approval of her Majesty's Government, the Government of India are pleased to sanction the abolition of the standing medical boards at the ports of embarkation, in regard to officers of the Indian Services proceeding on furlough out of India, on medical certificate, who have appeared before local medical committees. 2. As furlough can be granted to the officers of the Indian Services for a longer period than to officers of the British Service, it is hereby ruled that the local board, in the case of an officer of the Indian Services, shall invariably be presided over by an administrative medical officer.

Hot Weather.—How to Invigorate the Nervous System by Natural Means. Mental Prostration.—"Having suffered much from headache and mental prostration, I was induced to try Eno's Fruit Salt, the effects of which have been most satisfactory, resulting in invigorating my entire nervous system, and removing the frequent headache to which I was subject. THE ARMY RIFLE MEETING AT ALDERSHOT.

The third annual Army Rifle Meeting at the Cæsar's Camp Ranges, Aldershot, was brought to a close on Saturday last, having lasted three days, the arrangements having been successfully carried out under the immediate superintendence of Capt. Bennett, D.A.A.G. for Musketry. Prizes to the value of £475 were competed for, and the results of the principal competitions were as follows:—The Army, 200 yards, open to rank and file of the Army and Royal Marines and seamen of the Navy: Pte. Foy, 52nd Regt., 30 points. The Serjeants, 200 yards, open to serjeants of the Army and Royal Marines, and petty officers of the Navy: Serjt.-Major Stalward, 4th Hussars, 32 points. The Officers, 200 yards, open to the Army, Navy, and Royal Marines: Lieut. Bulpett, 45th Regt., 32 points, first; Lieut. Hore, 95th Regt., 32 points, second; and Capt. Walker, 42nd Highlanders, 31 points, third. The Grand Military, 500 yards, open to all ranks of the Army, Navy, and Royal Marines and Auxiliary Forces: Lieut. Munday, Hon. Artillery Company, 34 points, first; Lieut. Bray, 108th Regt., 33 points, second; and Colour-Serjt. Fanilin, R.M.L.I., 32 points, third. The Cæsar's Camp, open to all comers, 800 yards: Lieut. Talbot, 53rd Regt., 33 points, first; Serjt. Oliver, 3rd H.R.V., 30 points, second; and Pte. Kemp, 1st B.R.V., 29 points, third. The Army, 500 yards, open to rank and file of the Army and Royal Marines, and to seamen of the Navy: Pte. Foster, 2nd Batn. Coldstream Guards, 33 points. The Regimental Trophy, open to teams of four from battalions of the Army and Royal Marines: Royal Engineers, 311 points, first; 1st Batn. Scots Guards, 311 points, second. The Cavalry Mounted Prizes, open to sections of four from the Household Cavalry and Cavalry of the Line: 4th Hussars, 85 points; 5th Dragoon Guards, 76 points, second; 11th Hussars, 71 points, third. Army v. Volunteers, 200, 500, and 600 yards: the Volunteer team defeated the Regulars. The Championship, first stage, 600 yards, second stage, 800 yards: Major Rooke, 53rd Regt., was the victor with 112 points.

OFFICERS' EXPENSES.

"A Brigade Depôt Subaltern" writes:—"I have read your article in the issue of July 17, on the expenses of officers, with much interest, and although I do not agree with the whole, there is, no doubt, much truth in it. As far as my experience goes, you over-estimate the 'necessary' expenses. For instance, subscribing to packs of hounds and regimental drags is, at any rate in the infantry regiments, very rare. Balls are not of very frequent occurrence,—as a rule not one in a year,—and when they are considered necessary, it is frequently far the cheapest way of returning hospitality, especially for married officers, who very often have no other way of doing so. There is, however, one small item of expense that officers at a depôt, I do think, might well be spared, and that is supplying themselves, on joining it from foreign service, with a blue helmet. An officer joining the depôt does so nominally for two years, but practically that time is often much curtailed, possibly not as many months. Why, then, should they not continue to wear their white helmet, or else at all times a forage cap, and so avoid the necessity of carrying two sorts of head-dress about the world with them?"

A new company, the House Sanitary Appliances and Inspection Company (Limited), is projected. The names of Dr. Carpenter, Mr. Ernest Hart, and Mr. Bailey Denton are so intimately identified with all the recent improvements in sanitary science, that any undertaking to which their names are attached, as they are to this, must necessarily receive support and enlist sympathy. The company would seem to be destined to supply a long-felt want.

LONDON and DISTRICT OMNIBUS COMPANY, Limited. Registered under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1879. Capital, £200,000, in 20,000 Shares of £10 each.

The main object of this Company is to establish a regular service of omnibuses of the most improved construction on the best Metropolitan thoroughfares, including many important new routes.

It is not intended purposely to compete for the traffic of other omnibuses, but to supply an acknowledged great public want of an improved class of vehicles, and to provide for the ever-increasing requirements of the immense London passenger traffic.

The passenger traffic of the Metropolis has recently so much increased that the London General Omnibus Company, Limited, now carries more passengers and pays a much higher dividend than before the Metropolitan Railways were opened or Tramways introduced. That Company pays regular dividends of 12½ per cent. Numerous omnibuses in private hands are said to be even more remunerative.

LONDON and DISTRICT OMNIBUS COMPANY, Limited.—The Subscription List of this Company will close on Wednesday next, the 18th inst., for London, and on Thursday next, the 19th inst., for the Country. Prospectuses can be had on application to

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—LIVER, LUNGS, AND KIDNEYS.—A large number of internal maladies arise from obstructions over the removal of which these celebrated Pills exercise the most perfect control. A course of them is strongly recommended as a remedy for almost all chronic affections—as liver complaint, congestion of the lungs, torpidity of the kidneys, and other functional disorders, which cause much present suffering, and if neglected lay the foundation of innumerable diseases. Holloway's Pills are especially adapted for the young and delicate; their gentle and purifying action places them above all other medicines. In indigestion, nervous affections, gout, and rheumatism, these Pills have raised for themselves a universal fame. They expel all impurities from the blood, and thus restore cheerfulness and vigour.

The Michaelmas Term commences on September 9. Particulars, as to cadetships, exhibitions, scholarships, prizes, medals, terms, successes of former pupils, &c., may be obtained of the Secretary.

By order of the Council.
ALFRED EAMES, Secretary.
Royal Naval School, New Cross, S.E.,
August, 1880.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL L. GRIFFITHS, late Royal Artillery, for many years Instructor at Sandhurst, afterwards Garrison Instructor at Devonport, Editor of the eleventh edition of "The Artillerists' Manual and British Soldier's Compendium," wishes his former Pupils and Friends to know that he has joined the Establishment of the Rev. G. FAITHFULL, for instruction of his Militia Officers (of whom there are generally thirty at Storrington), in Fortification, Military Topography, Military Law, and Tactics, so as to enable them to compete successfully for Army Commissions under the recent Regulations. After this year no Commissions can be obtained except by successful competition in these subjects, which require at least one year's study, so that officers intending to compete in 1881 should at once apply to Lieutenant-Colonel L. GRIFFITHS, Storrington, Sussex, for admission to these classes for instruction.

ZOEDONE. — OHNE PHOSPHOR,

KEIN GEDANKE.—There has long been a desire to obtain a sparkling and agreeable beverage combining sustaining and invigorating qualities without intoxicating effects. This want is now, in every respect, supplied by

ZOEDONE, a non-alcoholic nutrient Tonic Beverage, which will be found invaluable in all cases of mental or physical strain, while its refreshing properties and pleasant flavour render it a delicious drink for daily use.

ZOEDONE is recommended by the Faculty. Dr. Simpson says:—"Zoedone contains two of the most important elements of the human organism, viz., phosphorus and iron, in a state easily assimilable, supplying exactly what is required where any extraordinary waste of tissue has been induced—a condition too common in this competitive age."

SIR DONALD STEWART'S despatches on the operations near Ghazni, which have now been published, contain the usual amount of indiscriminate and universal laudation. We happen to have before us a description of the action at Ahmad Khel, by an officer of calmness and judgment who was present, and from this and other sources of information we will narrate briefly our own version of the affair. When the enemy were first "observed in position, three miles in advance," the leading brigades were drawn up and moved forward in the following order:—One troop 19th Bengal Lancers, 3rd Goorkhas, 2nd Sikhs, 59th Regiment, 19th Bengal Lancers, 2nd Punjab Cavalry. On nearing the enemy, the infantry were ordered to "form for attack," marksmen were ordered to the front, the brigade was commanded to lie down, and the guns were moved forward and opened fire. Meanwhile, the enemy, while retaining their hold of the road in our immediate front, were gradually making their way round to their right, concealed by the ridges which intervened between them and us, and eventually turned our left. At this point, a squadron of the 19th Bengal Lancers reinforced the left in time to meet the attack of the enemy's cavalry, which "poured down two ravines forming a V, struck the Bengal Lancers before they could charge" (official despatch), "sent them to the right-about at the best pace they could go, and pursued them right into the centre of our position" (private account). Our force had then assumed the form of a semicircle, with a gap in the centre. Simultaneously with the cavalry attack on our left, the enemy's foot rushed forward on our front and flanks, down the road, and through the gap which now lay between one regiment and the guns. The whole of the reserve, consisting of the 19th P.N.I. and two companies of Sappers, were then advanced to the fighting line, half reinforcing the left and half the centre, and a company of the 60th Rifles and a company of the 25th N.I., which were doing duty as the General's escort, were ordered forward to the support of the guns. Here one regiment, which it is needless to name, gave way, and "retired without orders, and being on the right of the infantry line, and passing the word, were the cause of the whole brigade retiring." The two companies directed to support the guns "simply bolted, when they saw the enemy coming." "For a few minutes it was touch-and-go, a regular scramble, and everybody seemed to lose their heads." The restoration of order was commenced by what must be considered a mere fluke. The commanding officer of the 2nd Sikhs happened to be in a hollow, whence he could not see what was going on. Seeing his own men retire, he was at a loss for the cause, and halted them, and then they fronted and remained on a ridge, pouring in their fire on the enemy at 50 yards. The retreat was thus checked, and the enemy's advanced stemmed. After subsequent vain endeavours to break through our line of fire, the enemy hastily retreated, leaving an enormous amount of dead and dying behind them, and the action was over. Such was the conduct of troops which can scarcely be said to "have been beyond praise." It appears to us that some of it should not have been beyond censure. An examination of the tactics pursued will not, moreover, lead to satisfactory results. It must be remembered that the enemy possessed no artillery whatever, and with the exception, perhaps, of a few old firelocks, nothing in the form of a rifle. Indeed, no mention is made of firearms, and probably the bare blade was their sole weapon. Against such an enemy, then, formidable only in numbers, our small force was stretched out in extended order, weakening our own line without any compensating advantage, and enabling the enemy to make better use of their numbers by affording them a larger front to attack. The ancient phalanx would have served better. In our front line we had 700 cavalry, and the enemy's horse were calculated at about 1,000. Seven hundred native Indian cavalry, well horsed, well armed, well disciplined, and under the leadership of Englishmen, ought to be more than a match for a thousand Afghans, and yet a small portion of our cavalry was detached and subjected to the onslaught of the entire Afghan cavalry. It is difficult to understand what the three troops of the 19th Bengal Lancers were doing when they were attacked. However furiously the Afghans may have rushed down the "V-shaped" ravine, they must have occupied some moments of time in covering the ground, and those moments should have availed for some action on the part of the Lancers. If they could not charge, they might have retired. As it was, they apparently did the only thing they should not have done, stood still. They were broken, compelled to retreat, and a mingled horde of Afghans and Lancers was hurled against our line. Had the Lancers retreated at first, the Afghans would have been met by the fire of our infantry and artillery, which would probably have disconcerted them sufficiently to enable even three troops of the Lancers to do good work amongst them. As it was, the enemy's cavalry was safe from our fire, and the Lancers fell at their hands. Taking into consideration the configuration of the ground, a series of ridges rising one above the other from the level plain above the river, and running obliquely to our direct line of advance, it might have been foreseen that the enemy would take all the advantage they could of the cover afforded by the ridges, and that they would thus perforce be brought upon our left flank. With this premise, we think the right tactics would have been to have advanced our infantry in échelon from the right, ready to seize and line the first ridge on approaching contact with the enemy, the Horse Artillery on the right front playing on the enemy during the advance, the field battery in rear of the échelon, and the cavalry, with the exception of scouts and an escort for the horse battery, to be kept in hand together, to reconnoitre the enemy in force and draw them on, or to remain in reserve, as circumstances might determine. With the infantry in line and the horse battery on the right, our whole front would not have been more than 500 yards in length, and the cavalry could have acted with facility on either flank. These tactics would have resulted in an angular formation, but that, under the circumstances, would not have been a drawback.

The telegraph wires have barely ceased vibrating from flashing us the news of the Iron Duke having run ashore on an unknown reef, lying in a portion of the unsurveyed world, than they are again set in motion to inform us of the Wolverene having met with a similar accident among the South Sea Islands. The Hydrographer of the Navy must surely feel that these facts serve to prove how inadequate is the work done by his Department; but should they be insufficient to awaken him to a true sense of the enormous responsibility that rests upon his shoulders, we take the liberty of reminding him that, in the event of any of our ships being lost through the charts supplied by the Hydrographic Department being inadequate to the requirements of the Navy, no excuse, however apparently perfect, will exonerate him from blame, or from that censure the public will be sure to pass upon him, not so much for not having done the work himself as for having prevented others from doing it, or advocating it being done, as proved by his recent conduct to Staff Commander Hull and Lieutenant Temple, whose only sin lay in their zeal to save the Hydrographic Department of the Admiralty from ridicule, and British ships from wreck, or danger of wreck. We fear, however, that words of warning are wasted on Captain Evans, no matter in how kindly a spirit they may be spoken or penned. In the Hydrographic Department of the Admiralty, we have, truly, a mutual admiration society of the first water; and, however pleased navigating officers may have been at the outset to see one of their own class raised to the dignity of Hydrographer, there are few of that class left who will not readily admit that the change from the Executive to their own line has worked anything but well, and that the Department has greatly deteriorated since Vice-Admiral Sir George Richards, C.B., retired from the Admiralty. But if things have fared so badly under the direction of Captain Evans, a navigating officer, how would they prosper under a civilian officer like Mr. Blakeney? Nevertheless, strange to say, it is this officer who is already named as the most likely to succeed the present Hydrographer, to the exclusion of Captain Sir George Nares, K.C.B., and other Executive officers, who have done good service to the maritime world at large by their indefatigable energy, perseverance, and zeal in surveying unknown coasts and waters, at times even at the risk of their lives, without any increase of pay to reward them, while men like Mr. Blakeney and Captain Evans have been comfortably settled at Whitehall, drawing large salaries and living in ease, comfort, and luxury. The only wonder to us is that Captain Evans has not long since been removed from the appointment he now holds. We do not deny that he was an able surveyor in his day, but he has most assuredly proved himself unfit to lead or direct others, though good himself when well led. It is no secret that Lord Northbrook, prior to becoming First Lord of the Admiralty, and when one of the most active members of the Royal Geographical Society, had anything but a good opinion of the work being done by the Hydrographic Department of the Admiralty. A fellow-feeling, however, makes us wondrous kind at times. Lord Northbrook is now in office. When merely acting as President of the Royal Geographical Society, he was in Opposition, not only to the Government, but to Captain Evans, the Hydrographer. Now, however, circumstances have altered cases, and that policy which could not be tolerated, and which was denounced as injuriously affecting the reputation of the country, is not only no longer condemned, but is adopted as necessary to its well-being. The heads of all the various departments are eulogised by their chief, and they, in return, praise him, and magnify his importance in the eyes of the world. But this sort of thing cannot go on for ever. There is enough sound common-sense left in the country to enable its people to discern that which is right from that which is wrong. The Hydrographic Office is maintained out of the moneys of the taxpayers to do work—good, useful work—and not merely to form itself into a mutual admiration society. The officers belonging to this branch of the Service draw extra pay, solely as remuneration for the extra work and increased ability the country expects from them; and unless good, honest work is forthcoming, we warn the Hydrographic Department that a day of reckoning is at hand. It is simply disgraceful, when all the resources at the disposal of the Hydrographer of the Navy are taken into consideration, that so many thousands of miles of this earth's seaboard and shallow waters should remain unsurveyed, and consequently dangerous alike to navigation, to commerce, to property, and to life.

Lord Northbrook has, we hear, generously contributed the sum of £10 to the fund now being formed for the purpose of raising a memorial to those lost in the ill-fated Orpheus. We hope that the Service will come forward to assist in so patriotic an object, and we may add that any donations will be gladly received by Messrs. Charles Hopkinson and Sons, bankers, 3 Regent Street, S.W., who are the treasurers to the Orpheus Memorial Fund.

During the cruise of the combined Channel and Reserve Squadrons, which has just been completed, steam tactics were gone through each day, and it is satisfactory to learn that everything passed off without hitch of any kind, and in the most creditable manner possible. We hear, however, that the signal-book was proved to be signally deficient in tactical commands at all adapted to the purposes of modern Naval warfare, and that the ingenuity of Lieutenant Winsloe, the smartest Flag-Lieutenant in the Service, was severely taxed to meet the requirements of the situation. It is, therefore, to be hoped that the Admiralty will soon cause a complete code of evolutionary signals to be drawn up.

We have received innumerable inquiries as to the raison d'être of Mr. E. J. Reed, C.B., being knighted, but can only say in reply that we surmise the honour is intended to commemorate the fact that of all men in times past or present who have ever held an official position, Mr. E. J. Reed is the man who has wasted the largest sum of money for the taxpayers of this country in experimental attempts at Naval construction, which have, as a whole, proved decided failures. The last of the Bessemer can now be seen rusting on the shore opposite Blackwall, Mr. E. J. Reed's latest failure having very wisely been broken up.

Sir William Smart, K.C.B., Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets, has, we hear, been unsuccessful in his persistent efforts to induce the Admiralty to grant him some pecuniary compensation for having been compulsorily retired and removed from his appointment as principal medical officer at Haslar on reaching the limit of age. The medical officer in charge of another hospital was retained after reaching the limit of age for active service, and it is, we believe, on this ground that Sir William Smart complains of an injustice having been done him. Their Lordships maintain that there were good grounds for the retention of the officer alluded to, it being for the benefit of the public service that he should not be removed immediately on reaching the age for retirement.

There is no idea at the Admiralty of yielding to the desire of a few majors of Marines to be relieved of captains' duties when embarked for service afloat. The question was originally raised many months ago, and the decision on the part of the Board was that unless majors when embarked were prepared to do captains' duties, the substantive rank would have to be taken away. This view is still adhered to at Whitehall.

The great difficulty found to exist in manœuvring big muzzle-loaders on board ship, and the safety and ease with which the breech-loaders are worked by foreigners, and what they say of them, would lead one to suppose that the days of muzzle-loading heavy ordnance in the Navy are drawing to a close. Indeed, muzzle-loaders would long since have been superseded had the Director of Naval Ordnance, who understands the requirements of a ship, while a military man does not, not been bound down by the decisions of the War Office.

We desire to call the attention of Mr. Swainson, Assistant-Secretary of the Admiralty, to a paragraph which has appeared in the Morning Post of Tuesday last, from which it is evident that Sir Lambton Loraine's appointment to the Cleopatra was cancelled before the document had been posted, and that it was never forwarded to that officer. If their Lordships do not know their own minds, and chop and change about in their selections of officers, the blame should not be thrown on the Press, as is the case in the paragraph referred to, which runs thus:—"We are requested to contradict the statement which has been published that Captain Sir Lambton Loraine had been appointed to her Majesty's ship Cleopatra, and that the appointment has been cancelled. Captain Sir Lambton Loraine has not received any appointment whatsoever."

A grant of £50 per annum for the next two years has, we understand, been made by the Admiralty to Mr. Charles Thomson, engineer, now on the Retired List, in consideration of injuries received by him when in the execution of his duty.

Captain William Codrington, C.B., will, at the end of the month, take over the command of the Portsmouth Steam Reserve, Captain Wells at the same time assuming the command of the Britannia.

For several years we have perseveringly advocated the abandonment of the policy of Naval construction appropriately styled in these columns the search after the "extreme limit" in size and armour, and we are glad to find that the Admirals and other superior officers of the Italian Navy, in reply to a circular of the Minister of Marine, have expressed themselves almost unanimously in favour of the construction of smaller ironclads, and that the Minister will introduce a Bill to this effect on the reopening of Parliament. We regret that this country did not take the lead in thus reverting to the only true policy of Naval construction.

From Nagasaki we learn that the French gunboat Lynx arrived there on June 13, and left for Kobe two days later. The new Russian iron cruiser Asia, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Aslambegoff, arrived from Hong Kong on the 13th, and saluted the port as she steamed up the harbour. She was towed to the dock buoy on the 17th, and was docked at high tide. The United States flagship Richmond and the German gunboat Wolf both left for Kobe on the 16th. The Russian ironclad Minin had not arrived, but was daily expected, while the Djigit and the American Ticonderoga had been there some time. The Fly was the only British man-of-war in port at the time.

Paymaster W. D. Hirtzel arrived at Malta on Saturday, August 7, by the French steamer Amérique from Naples, to take up his appointment as secretary to Rear-Admiral J. D. M'Crea.

We regret to hear that Mr. H. M. Bernard, paymaster of the Duncan, at present on leave of absence, is laid up with a severe attack of rheumatic gout, which will, unfortunately, prevent him enjoying his well-earned holiday. Mr. Bernard's term on board the Duncan expires in December, and the general opinion of all who have come in contact with this officer at Sheerness is that the Admiralty will have some difficulty in finding an officer who will be as popular and universally liked to replace him.

The hardships and injurious effects of long service in her Majesty's ships in the Red Sea and Persian Gulf was recently the subject of a leading article in these columns, and it affords us much satisfaction to learn that the evil to which we called attention is now likely to be modified. We are informed that an order has been given to the Commander-in-Chief on the East Indies station that no ships are to remain in the Red Sea, unless absolutely necessary during the summer months. One is, however, to be retained at Aden should her services be suddenly needed, while others which have been doing duty in the Red Sea are to be sent to Seychelles to recruit health. We trust that these orders may be acted up to most rigidly, but would also urge upon the Admiralty the advisability of not allowing ships to be sent on the same service, season after season. The Vulture, now homeward bound, has seen three summers in the Persian Gulf, while others have been constantly employed in the Red Sea. Until a better distribution of such trying service becomes an accomplished fact, we must expect a high death and invaliding rate, and we would suggest that an interchange of stations between ships in neighbouring parts of the globe should become more general. It would be far less monotonous and most beneficial to the health of the officers and men.

The Royal Victoria Yacht Club Regatta closed on Saturday last at Portsmouth. Two races were decided, the Asia Minor, of the Asia, winning the first prize for launches and sailing boats belonging to her Majesty's ships, and the Marquis of Exeter's Queen of Palmyra securing similar honours in the sailing match.

At Civita Vecchia on Saturday last was performed the ceremony of presenting a silk flag to the Italian ironclad Roma, whose captain, in accepting the gift from the ladies who had worked it, promised that it should always be valiantly defended.

Watchfulness over the safety of our principal naval depôt and coaling station in the Pacific, namely, Esquimault, is of such manifest importance that we always note with satisfaction any allusion in the public Press to the necessity for fortifying and strengthening this position. An able letter on this matter, by Captain Edward Palliser, has recently appeared, and we hope that the arguments there set forth have not escaped the attention of the responsible authorities. The movements of Russian cruisers in the North Pacific, in 1878, gave us some cause for a passing anxiety, seeing how far Esquimault is from support in time of need; and the fact that there were no fewer than thirteen Russian cruisers at San Francisco, while we had but two ships at our depôt and coaling station, should not be forgotten. Russia is now seeking to move the head-quarters of her Siberian Fleet further south, and even Vladivostock may be deserted for a naval station in Corea. But be that as it may, there is every reason to look to San Francisco as the base of Russian enterprise, and all will admit that that place is unpleasantly close to Esquimault in the event of hostilities arising at any future time. The proposed completion of the Canadian Pacific Railroad would do much to strengthen our position in the Pacific, as it would bring Esqumault within three weeks of England. For this reason alone, it is worth while to push on this enterprise, and thus add to the unity and strength of the British Empire.

Eight officers who have resigned their commissions in the Royal Marines for service in the Indian Staff Corps, have received orders to embark for India on Sept. 17. A further number will proceed to take up their new appointments in October.

Directions have been given for the lowest rate of full pay, as surgeons R.N., to be given to those candidates for the Naval Medical service who may be sent to the Naval Hospitals at Haslar and Plymouth. Owing to the alterations made in the arrangements for their reception at Netley by the War Office authorities, these candidates have to be sent to the Naval Hospitals.

Mr. Lewis Kirkness, who has proved so popular an officer in his capacity as secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean, has been granted two months' leave of absence by the Admiralty, as a special case, in consideration of his long and exceptional service abroad. Mr. Kirkness was appointed secretary to Admiral Sir Geoffrey Hornby, K.C.B., in January, 1877, and was retained in that post by Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., on his assuming the Mediterranean command.

The value of the services of the Valorous in her ordinary Channel service has been fully recognised at the Admiralty, since she was withdrawn for duty in connection with the distribution of relief on the Irish coast. Their Lordships have consequently directed the recall of the Valorous, as the senior officer's ship of the relief squadron, at the earliest moment at which it is possible to remove her from a duty, in the performance of which she has proved of great service.

The Magon, which was launched at Cherbourg the other day, in the presence of the President of the French Republic and the Junior Lords of the Admiralty, is an unarmoured cruiser of the second class. Ten sister-ships of this class have been either built or are now on the slips in the French dockyards. In size, they are very similar to the so-called C corvettes, of which ten have been or are being built for the English Navy, being each of about 2,250 tons' displacement, while the displacement of the Comus class of vessels is about 2,383 tons. The C corvettes, again, carry two 7-in. and twelve 64-pounder guns, while the armament of the Magon class of cruisers consists of fifteen 14-centimètre pieces; the complement of the English corvettes comprising 245 officers and men of all ratings, that of the French 202. The French vessels are intended to be fast under steam, as well as good sailers, being fitted with engines working up to 2,790 indicated horse-power, capable of driving them at a speed of fifteen knots an hour, and they show a spread of canvas of 1,302 square mètres. They are vessels of greater speed than our C corvettes, and are, therefore, more efficient cruisers.

The Euphrates Company's steamer Kalifa, going from Busrah to Bagdad, was attacked by Arabs near Ezra's Tomb on the 8th inst. Fire was kept up by the assailants for an hour, and an attempt was made to board the steamer, which failed. A quartermaster and one passenger were killed, and the master was wounded. A French steamer which went ashore near Ras Hafoon was boarded by Somalis for the purpose of plunder. When the vessel floated, they leaped overboard. The master opened fire on the pirates, killing and wounding 20 of their number.

An explosion has, we learn, taken place on board a Danish torpedo-boat at Copenhagen, by which Lieutenant Ohnstrom, who was in charge, was killed, while one of the crew was severely, and several others slightly, wounded.

The regatta and athletic sports organised by the officers of the Mediterranean Squadron at Palermo, under the patronage of the Commander-in-Chief, Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., came off with great éclat on Tuesday last. We hear that the Commander-in-Chief leaves no stone unturned in his endeavour to maintain the high prestige of the Navy, and that his efforts in this direction have met with a cordial response from all under his command.

We regret to hear that, as the Tay was steaming down the Bristol Channel on Monday night, with a company of Naval Artillery Volunteers on board, a dispute arose among some of the Volunteers, when one of them, a man named George Major, was stabbed. The Tay put into Weston-super-Mare for medical assistance, and landed the injured man, whose life was considered to be in considerable danger. An inquiry into the circumstances of the case has been ordered to be held forthwith.

The Admiralty have issued directions that the next short course of gunnery instruction on board the Excellent for captains and commanders shall commence on September 20.

Captain James E. Erskine, private secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty, will receive officers daily after twelve, noon, until further notice.

The Admiralty have decided that all Gatlings in store are to be issued only to gun-vessels of the Tay and Medway class, whose commanding officers will, on commission, be ordered to demand these weapons as part of their armament. And we understand that no further supply will be purchased, when the Gatlings in hand have been expended.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty inspect Chatham and Sheerness Dockyard this day, Vice-Admiral Sir Reginald J. Macdonald, K.C.S.I., returning from his leave of absence on the Continent to receive and entertain their Lordships, who will, as usual, inspect the Duncan, flagship at the Nore.

Corea, or the Forbidden Land, is attracting much attention at this moment, as both Russia and America are straining every nerve to supplant each other in therein securing a footing. It is reported that the United States are about to submit a proposed treaty through Commodore Schufeldt, and that if it is not accepted the United States fleet on the China station will be summoned. In 1878 we gave an account of Commodore Schufeldt's mission of establishing trade depôts for American commerce in a cruise he was then ordered to undertake round the world. On this subject, the London and China Telegraph remarks:—"So far the Coreans have resisted all overtures, and only wish to be left alone; but that is no reason why peaceable attempts should not be made to break through their objections. The gains are well worth the trial, and success in arranging a treaty would be amply repaid. The country is particularly fertile, according to all accounts, and is capable of producing almost anything; while its mineral wealth is immense, not being equalled on the whole Asiatic Continent. These great advantages are worth trying for; but at present nothing but diplomatic means ought to be used. If properly conducted, they should not fail. It is at least worth an effort, and we hope that that effort will be made. We shall await with interest further news."

Lieutenant Victor Balck and the officers and gentlemen belonging to the Stockholm Gymnastic and Fencing Club brought their stay in this country to a close on Saturday last, with a performance at the Crystal Palace, this being the sole assault-at-arms and exhibition of gymnastic feats given by our Swedish visitors in London. As they were naturally most careful to avoid doing anything that could bear even the semblance of mercenary showmanship, and desiring that their appearance at the Crystal Palace should not be misconstrued, we have been requested to state that Saturday's performance was given mainly for the benefit of English schoolmasters and tutors. These were well represented on Saturday at Sydenham, and numbers of these gentlemen, ever foremost in this country in the encouragement of manly sports and pastimes, eagerly pressed round Lieutenant Balck, after the performance, to thank him and his gallant comrades for having brought many a useful hint to their notice. A dinner was afterwards given by the chairman and directors of the Crystal Palace to their Swedish guests. On Tuesday the whole party left by the Baron Osy for Antwerp, en route for Brussels, to compete at the great gymnastic tournament which forms part of the programme of the National Jubilee Fêtes now in progress. Lieutenant Balck and his party was accompanied as far as Gravesend by Mr. Thorsten de Nordenfelt and his brother, Lieutenant Oke de Nordenfelt, to whose exertions the success which attended the stay of their compatriots in England was mainly due. This fact was fully acknowledged by Lieutenant Balck and the members of the Stockholm Club, in the toasts that were given and in the speeches that were made as the vessel steamed down the Thames. Finally, Mr. de Nordenfelt and his brother were chaired by their compatriots in true Swedish fashion, the athletes, taking these gentlemen separately, supported them on their arms, and tossed them some ten feet into the air, once, twice, thrice, and yet once again, to the national "hurrah! hurrah! hurrah!" A process somewhat trying to the livers of those thus honoured.

We hear that Colonel R. J. Hughes, half-pay, late 63rd Regiment, who has been for some time in command of a brigade in Afghanistan, is on return to India to take up a five years' command in Bengal, in recognition of his services, his name having been brought prominently to the notice of the Commander-in-Chief in India on account of the great zeal and ability he has shown.

Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Alexander, late 93rd Highlanders, will probably obtain an early vacancy in the Royal Body Guard. Colonel Gordon possesses strong claims on the score of field-service, having been employed in the Crimea, during the Mutiny campaign in India, and also throughout the operations on the north-western frontier of India in 1863.

Lieutenant-Colonel C. R. Shervinton, who has been for some time past Assistant-Commissary-General-in-Charge at Hong Kong, is en route to England, in view of retirement. Colonel Shervinton entered the Control Department on its formation in 1870, as assistant-controller, on losing his appointment as brigade-major of the disbanded Military Train, and acted subsequently as assistant to Colonel Evelegh, C.B., the Staff officer at Head-quarters of the Army Service Corps, until ordered to China as Principal Commissariat officer. All seem to be agreed in thinking that Colonel Shervinton has been most cruelly treated in being retired from the Service whilst yet he is capable of doing much good and useful work in his own particular sphere, which is more in the direction of organising transport than superintending the issue of tea and sugar.

We are glad to learn that Major-General E. N. Boldero, who recently met with a serious accident by a fall from his horse, whilst proceeding to an inspection in his capacity as officer commanding the Taunton Brigade Depôt, is now making satisfactory progress towards recovery, though some time must elapse before he is thoroughly restored to health.

The inhabitants of Aldershot are raising a fund for the purpose of presenting a testimonial to a most worthy Staff officer, Major Trout, who has carried out the duties of provost-marshal at the station since the first establishment of the camp, and, as we lately stated, is now retiring on pension. Major Trout's popularity is so great that a large sum will doubtless be subscribed, and certainly no man better deserves to have his services recognised, seeing it has been his constant study to promote the interests of the community at large. Already over £100 has been promised.

A divisional command on the Madras Establishment becomes vacant on the 1st proximo, when Major-General A. K. Gore, Madras Staff Corps, completes his five years' service on the Staff of the Army.

Colonel J. Davis, half-pay, late 20th Regiment, who lost his command lately under the Warrant which deposed the Purchase colonels, is named for a Staff appointment, for which the high character his battalion always bore would seem to give him a special claim.

A vacancy is about to occur amongst the Lieutenant-Instructors at the School of Musketry, Hythe, by the promotion of Lieutenant W. J. Browne, 36th Regiment, to a company. Lieutenant Browne joined the Hythe Staff as recently as December last.

We receive from Canada the following particulars of the result of the recent competition for entrance to the Royal Military College, at Toronto. The following have passed:—F. W. White, Montreal; J. W. Laidlaw, Toronto; F. L. Crawford, Montreal; W. G. Warner, Montreal; A. Davidson, Montreal; E. O. Smith, Montreal; W. F. van Buskirk, St. Thomas, O.; W. W. Worthington, London; K. B. Cameron, Toronto; G. E. Sanders, Clinton; C. Cartwright, Kingston; A. L. W. Ridout, Ottawa; W. Graham, Ottawa; W. H. Phillipps, Ottawa; W. van Iffland, Quebec; J. Hearn, Quebec; F. W. Abbott, Halifax; A. P. Bremner, Halifax; H. C. Carey, Victoria; F. Drayner, Toronto.

It certainly is hard on the 35th Regiment that an officer like Captain E. B. St. John, who was brought in from outside, and has never done a day's regimental duty, should be restored to the establishment, and stop the run of promotion. Captain St. John has been for more than six years aide-de-camp to the Governor of a Colony, and there seems no prospect of his ever assuming command of his company in the 35th, and yet he has been placed on the establishment of duty-officers to the exclusion of the senior subaltern, who has to carry out his duties without drawing the higher pay or receiving the rank which should accompany those duties. Such anomalies as this Mr. Childers would do well to seek to remove. They are not uncommon in our Service, and they result in much heart-burning and discontent.

Owing to the reduction in the number of lieutenant-colonels in the Royal Artillery, and the consequent absorption of vacancies in that rank, there is a prospect of serious stagnation in the promotion of the lower ranks of the regiment, unless the five years' rule for lieutenant-colonels is strictly carried out. The senior major on the Royal Artillery General List has 26 years' service, the 37th 25 years, and the 93rd 24 years' service. The senior captain has 20½ years' service, and the 30th 20 years, and the 99th will complete 19 years' service in December next. The average rate of promotion has been as follows, viz.:—Major to lieutenant-colonel, about 15 steps a year for the last six years; captain to major, about 20 steps a year for the last nine years. Even these averages are not likely to be maintained without the help of the five years' rule, as there have been augmentation steps during the last few years; also steps by placing lieutenant-colonels commanding Auxiliary Artillery on the Supernumerary List. The latter, however, are now being absorbed.

As many regiments are still undergoing their annual course of musketry training, it would be well if district inspectors of musketry would look to the practice of the different corps under their supervision, as it often happens that when a regiment makes a high figure of merit, other regiments, who shoot in strict accordance with the regulations, begin to doubt this good shooting; consequently, where any particular company shows a very high figure of merit, it is absolutely necessary that the district inspector of musketry should know personally whether it is obtained by what is termed fair shooting, or not. If this was done, and the district inspector of musketry added his certificate to the figure of merit of shooting of each regiment in the Army, to say that this figure of merit had, after his careful personal supervision, been obtained by a strict adherence to the regulations, it would have the effect of making bad shooting regiments feel confidence in the good shooting of those regiments who appear at the head of the list when the figure of merit of shooting of the different corps is published.

Seven batteries of Garrison Artillery at Malta complete their seventh year of service in that island next October. No Infantry regiment is ever allowed by the medical authorities to remain so long.

The following General Order has been promulgated:—"A course of instruction according to the accompanying synopsis (see Appendix), in the duties of pioneers, will be gone through by the cavalry at all stations at home where practicable. Classes will be formed from those men who have followed some trade, or who are considered most likely to profit by this instruction. The instruction will be carried out regimentally under an officer and non-commissioned officer, who have received certificates from the School of Military Engineering at Chatham. Every subaltern officer will be put through a course. The men attending the classes will be struck off guards and all regimental duties, but the time occupied in the course of instruction must not exceed the number of days specified in the synopsis, even though the weather be unfavourable. General officers commanding in the United Kingdom will arrange for the formation of classes at the most convenient periods. Officers and non-commissioned officers who have received certificates from the School of Military Engineering at Chatham will be periodically inspected by the commanding Royal Engineer, with a view to ascertain that the knowledge obtained at that establishment has not been lost. The usefulness of cavalry pioneers having been fully proved, it is scarcely necessary to impress upon commanding officers the necessity for every exertion being made to have always a body of men competent to act in this capacity."

The Committee of the Afghan War Fund, consisting of the Earl of Lytton, Lord Napier of Magdala, Generals Sir Henry Norman, Sir Samuel Browne, Sir Michael Biddulph, Sir Charles Keyes, and Sir Richard Pollock, have issued a strong appeal for aid, to provide for the wants of the widows and orphans of all those who have fallen, or may yet fall, in the Afghan war. Contributions should be sent to Messrs. Cox and Co., Craig's Court, S.W.; and all communications addressed to Captain James Gildea (late honorary secretary Zulu War Fund), 20 Stafford Terrace, Kensington, W.

Arrangements have been made for Sir Bartle Frere to return to England in the Union Steamship Company's Royal mail packet, leaving Cape Town on September 14.

Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Fox Powys and the officers of the 69th Regiment forwarded a formal invitation to Lieutenant Victor Balck and the Swedish officers and gentlemen (forty-five in all) accompanying that officer, to dine at the Cambridge Barracks, Portsmouth, on Friday last. The invitation could not, however, be accepted, but the card of invitation was carefully preserved, and is highly prized by our Swedish visitors, who have expressed their determination to have it framed and hung in a post of honour in the Stockholm Club.

A series of very interesting experiments, conducted under the supervision of the Select Committee on Ordnance, have just been brought to a close at Shoeburyness, the object being to prove whether an armour-plated vessel could be materially injured by rifle projectiles if her side only could be struck at angles of from 30 deg. to 60 deg. For this purpose a 12-in. wrought-iron glance target was erected on the marshes, representing the section of a ship's side, and placed at angles varying from 30 deg. to 60 deg. The weapon used was a 9-in. or twelve-ton gun, with a charge of 75 lb. of P 2 powder, and a projectile weighing 263 lb. Although several forms of headed shell were used at only ninety-five yards' range, none succeeded in getting through the plate, thus showing that ships must be at right angles with a battery in order for guns to obtain the maximum power of penetration, and that at angles of 30 deg. to 60 deg. an ordinary armour-plated ship can resist the penetration of shot. At the same range, the 38-ton gun, with a powder charge of 160lb. and a Palliser shell weighing 800 lb., was tried against a wrought-iron section of a ship's turret 22 in. in thickness. The muzzle velocity was 1,700 ft. per second, and the result was that the section broke up into three pieces. The projectile did not penetrate, but completely crushed one-fourth of the turret. The result is one which completely destroys the old idea that although a turret might get starred it would not break up. Altogether four rounds were fired from this gun, and in three the same results were obtained. In the fourth round the projectile was defective, or no doubt the gun would have again come out triumphant.

In the House of Commons, on Friday week, Captain Home asked a question of the Secretary of State for War as to the present position of Ridingmasters, which appears to have been but little understood; and it is curious to observe that even the War-Office officials do not understand the effect of their own Warrants, though in the present instance the case is a little involved, it is true. No fault is found with the Warrant, but certain older ridingmasters could not take advantage of it, because a ridingmaster's sole object in being recommended for a combatant officer's commission is that he may get an adjutancy. No commanding officer would select a man over a certain age or service for this post. Hence, the effect is that the older men see those whom they have trained going over their heads, and actually retiring after less service with higher pensions.

In all references in Parliament to the question of officers dying on service being permitted to leave their Purchase money to relations, one great point has apparently been overlooked, viz., that formerly an officer who died on service conferred a direct money benefit on his successor. As no one could tell who might survive, it was fair on all sides; but now the death of a whole regiment would not add to the value of any officer's commission. The State alone gains. It is not, therefore, a fact, as stated the other night in the House, that officers are in the same position on this head as before the abolition of Purchase. The simplest and fairest plan to put an end for ever to such inequalities, and settle all such questions, is now, even at the eleventh hour, to pay to all officers who hold what were saleable commissions a sum of money down, though it be only half the regulation value of commissions, up to the rank of captain, especially as officers above that rank were fairly compensated by the Retirement Warrant, except as regards the boy-service clause.

It is to be regretted that the practice of placing Militia regiments "under canvas" during their annual training is not more universally adopted. Whatever may be the advantages reaped by a few local public-house proprietors and lodging-house keepers, under the generally observed system of billeting in towns, the immense disadvantages accruing to the healthiness and prestige of the corps concerned cannot be too strongly deprecated. It can hardly be a matter of opinion that discipline is more easily maintained in a regiment under canvas at a mile or two's distance from the temptations of a town, than in the same regiment if scattered throughout the "slums" of that very town. And in addition to this, the opportunities that are afforded to Militiamen under canvas for learning the duties that they would be compelled to exercise during active service in the camp, render such a mode of procedure during training in the highest degree valuable. It has been argued that the men do not like camp life, and that obliging them to serve under canvas, instead of "chumming" amongst their friends in the town where they assemble, would have the effect of breaking up the regiments or reducing their strength very materially. Now, the very converse of this has proved to be the case where the experiment has been tried. This year, after four successive trainings under canvas, the 1st Staffordshire Militia assembled 1,800 strong; whilst the 3rd Staffordshire, after six or seven successive trainings under similar circumstances, mustered some 1,200 or 1,300 men. Both these regiments encamp upon Whittington Heath, near Lichfield, and their bronzed, healthy, and smart appearance towards the close of training excited general admiration,—in point of fact, offered a marked contrast to other regiments recruited from the same localities, which are a terror and a nuisance to the towns in which they are billetted. It must be remembered that the 3rd Staffordshire are "Pottery boys" and the 1st Staffordshire "Brummagem roughs," hence the system which can convert them into the smart, soldier-like, healthy-looking lads they are, cannot be too highly commended.

It would appear that at the present moment the Royal Regiment of Artillery is 19 subalterns short of its fixed establishment. This is the more to be regretted when at important fortresses like Malta and Gibraltar, four batteries of garrison artillery, from various causes, have each but two officers present, a battery at Gibraltar but one, while another at Malta has actually no officers at all. The Authorities, who take such good care to keep the many snug berths of the depôt batteries at home overflowing with officers, for whom it is notorious sufficient work cannot be found, might surely arrange that vacancies abroad should be first thought of, and the Artillery at valuable stations efficiently commanded, which may, at least, do something to correct that slackness of discipline of which we hear bad accounts.

The reorganisation of the Turkish Army is almost completed. As far as can be seen from the details hitherto published of the labours of the Commission appointed for that purpose, the military forces of the Turkish Empire will consist of thirty divisions. Each division, again, will be composed of sixteen battalions of infantry, two regiments of cavalry, half a battalion of artillery, and a battalion of rifles. The divisions will be formed of the troops at present under arms. In case of war, the gaps in the number of battalions will be filled by the reserve battalions. Two divisions will form an army corps. The Imperial Guard will be the first corps.

The Russian Minister of War has raised the number of officers' baggage waggons attached to the Sapper battalions from four to five, counting one for the commander of the battalion and one for each of the four companies.

If page 11 of the Royal Warrant is turned to, and paragraph 22 read carefully, it will be found to be provided that an officer may obtain promotion to full colonel, "(f) by brevet, &c. (1.) In any military appointment, except in command of a company." A captain commanding a company is debarred from promotion to brevet colonel then, but captains with brevet rank as lieutenant-colonels, acting as staff officers of pensioners, are not denied promotion. Now, considering that the latter officers are only half-pay captains who voluntarily accepted half-pay, and probably received sums of money from the senior subalterns of their regiment for so doing, the injustice of the arrangement must be apparent which allows of their qualifying for promotion, and then retiring after thirty years as major-generals on £420 per annum; whereas, officers serving with regiments who have become lieutenant-colonels for distinguished service in the field are denied promotion, and can retire on no larger sum than £259,—in case of a reduced officer only £200. We feel sure that it could never have been intended to make such a difference between the two classes of officers.

The following extract from a short letter on Corea, from Mr. K. Skalkovsky, a well-known Russian political writer, at present acting as the agent for the Russian Minister of Ways of Communication and special correspondent of the Novoe Vremya in China, will not be uninteresting, for, coming as it does from a Russian official, it possesses great significance:—"Russia has a frontier contiguous with Corea. Our Ussourski region, including Vladivostock, needs corn, meat, and other products grown in Corea, and, in spite of restrictions, thousands of Coreans may be found at work in our territory. Were the frontier broken down, they would crowd in in large numbers. The Japanese have established a growing shipping trade with Corea, and, were encouragement given, a similar trade could be developed between Corea and the Amoor. This year a Russian agent was despatched to Ondjoij, a town nearest our frontier, to conclude a treaty with the Coreans. It is not known what success he had in inducing the Coreans to throw open their country to Russia, but the present would be a favourable time to send our Pacific fleet thither to effect a demonstration. The Coreans would hardly refuse any request backed up by an imposing array of ironclads. The opening up of Corea would be still more advantageous if we secured for ourselves the exclusive right to establish a factory at Lazareff Bay, which never freezes over, and is of great importance to Russia. The opening-up of Corea by our fleet would constitute a service wholly within Russia's right, and would be a proper recompense for the expense Russia has incurred in sending out ships and troops to the Pacific. With a firm grip upon Corean waters, there is little doubt China would adopt a different tone to that she holds to-day."

We trust before the new Estimates appear the War Office will fully consider the question of the Schools of Instruction now maintained for the benefit of officers of the Militia and Volunteers. The present arrangement, by which the commandant, adjutant, and subordinate staff are being continually changed, is open, in our opinion, to serious objection, and as the schools are now a permanent institution, the appointments in connection with them ought, like those of the Yeomanry School, to be of a permanent character, and held for the usual term of five years.

In our Army there are, unfortunately, no appointments open now to retired officers. Formerly, paymasterships and adjutancies of Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers offered opportunities by which the services of specially meritorious officers could be acknowledged by the State. Instances are continually cropping up in which men who have performed valuable services in one way or another call for some reward. Such a man as Captain Podmore Clark, of the Hereford Militia, for instance, well merits some sort of recognition. After leaving the 62nd Regiment, in which he served as a subaltern, this officer joined the Militia, and has since devoted his whole leisure and a large sum of money to devising means for simplifying the study of drill. In this he has been successful. Yet for all his labours, he can look for nothing more substantial than the thanks of those in office. Surely in such cases means could be found for marking in some appreciable form the indebtedness of the country to the inventor.

REGIMENTAL COLOURS.—No. 1.

The glorious death-struggle by which Lieutenants Melville and Coghill saved one of the colours of the 1st Battalion 24th Regiment, and the annihilation of H.M.'s 66th, and a Bombay Native regiment, are the latest evidences of the veneration with which British regiments regard their colours, and of the devotion which our officers and soldiers will show in preserving them from capture or desecration. The chief reason for this veneration and attachment is, doubtless, that these colours bear, in nearly every regiment, some names, from one to a score, from a long roll of victories gained in every clime, commencing with the capture and subsequent defence of "Arcot," by Clive, in 1751, and ending with "Ashantee." This roll will soon, we hope, have, by an alphabetical coincidence, the additions of "Zululand" and "Afghanistan 1879 or 1880." Nearly 140 names, including several borne only by Sepoy regiments, commemorate wars, campaigns, battles, sieges, and minor actions, differing vastly in their duration and results, in the losses sustained by our own troops and those inflicted on the enemy. The word "Peninsula" is borne by no less than 20 Cavalry and 64 Infantry regiments, which took part in the mighty contest that lasted through seven long years. Some of these regiments bear the names of many battles, from Roleia in 1808 to Toulouse in 1814; while others served for comparatively short periods in that eventful war, and bear few names, or none, beside the word "Peninsula." Many names are those of important battles of which we often read, while others record engagements which are little known except to the student of military history. Thirty-three are borne each by a single regiment, some in memory of actions regarding which history is almost silent, fought at places no longer to be traced on maps or found in gazetteers. How many can tell where "Moro" was, or is, or when it was taken? Who knows anything about "Cutchee," "Kahun," "Mandora," "Marabout," "Ternate," or even "Villiers-en-Couche?" Again, what can be more vague than the word "Hindoostan," borne by some regiments, unless it be the word "India" borne by others?

There are some omissions from this roll of glory for which it seems difficult to account. The battle of Sabugal, in April, 1811, was called by Wellington "one of the most glorious actions British troops were ever engaged in," yet no regiment bears the name in its list of Peninsular victories. The battle near Quebec, in September, 1759, was a decisive victory, resulting in the complete conquest of Canada. The ascent from the river to the Heights of Abraham would have been an arduous enterprise, even if there were no enemy to be encountered, and the French may well be excused for not anticipating an attack from that quarter. Both sides fought bravely, and sustained heavy losses, including the commanders of both armies. Wellington's first victory of Assaye was followed and completed by the equally important but unrecorded battle of Argaum. The taking of San Fiorenzo, Bastia, and Calvi, with the consequent cession of the whole island of Corsica in 1794, were daring feats of arms, and would not have been attempted but for the burning zeal and indomitable energy of Nelson. But the list of such omissions is tedious.

It would surely be better if the year were added after the name of each battle, to distinguish the event. Amboyna, Ternate, Banda, Copenhagen, and the Cape of Good Hope were taken twice; Pondicherry three times; Martinique, Guadaloupe, and St. Lucia so often, that it seems as if we restored them in order to recapture them whenever we wanted employment for our soldiers and sailors. Some of these captures were effected only after overcoming stubborn resistance and suffering heavy loss; but the same places were taken at other times so easily that their capture scarcely merits commemoration. Unless the year be added to the name, who can tell which of these captures is signified?

Our regiments have an older history than those of any other country, because, while the Continental armies have been repeatedly broken up and reorganised, most of our regiments have an unbroken line of descent, extending with more than half of them to a hundred and twenty years, and with some, beyond two centuries, Why should not the earlier victories of these old regiments be emblazoned? Though "Arcot" is the oldest name on any of our colours, the Royal Marines bear on their appointments the word "Gibraltar," in memory of its capture in 1704. The 18th Royal Irish, in token of their services at the siege of Namur, under William III., bears a motto in very questionable Latin, which they would surely be glad to exchange for "Namur, 1695." The military authorities have, within the last few years, shown a wise liberality in granting to several regiments the honour of bearing names to which they have proved themselves fairly entitled; in some cases even allowing new regiments to succeed to the honours earned by former regiments which bore the same numbers, but were reduced after the war with France. If this liberality were extended so far as to consider the claims of many regiments to names now borne by a few, or only by one; if many glorious actions and sieges now omitted were included in the roll, and if the list were extended back to Marlborough's great victories, what would be the result? Without adding a single action which was not a decided victory, or a siege which was not arduous and successful, the list of names borne on the colours and appointments of our Army might be increased to two hundred, at least. We should no longer have, as now, an old Infantry regiment bearing nothing on its colour but its county title; and the banners of our older regiments, and especially those of the Guards, would be richly adorned with names of victories.

LORD STRATHNAIRN'S MOTION.

Lord Strathnairn, in the House of Lords on Thursday, in calling attention to the military operations against the Zulus, said he would have performed this task long ago only that he had been unwilling to do anything that might appear like an attempt to mar the general joy that was felt at the final success of those operations. He intended to cast no reflection on the officers and soldiers who had served in Zululand, because he regarded them as the victims of an experimental and unmilitary organisation framed by a Secretary of State for War. He condemned the short-service system as incurably faulty, holding that it led to fraudulent enlistments, and to our getting recruits who were so young that they were not able to march and carry their knapsacks. He was of opinion that nothing offered such an inducement to good men to enter and remain in the Army as a pension, such as was given under the long-service system. The despatch of the Secretary of State for War informing Lord Chelmsford that her Majesty's Government would send 1,000 Marines to reinforce the troops under his command, and that no more young battalions would be sent to South Africa, was in itself a proof of the collapse of the short-service system. The very young men who had been sent out there previously had been unable to do the duty required. All the conditions of the art of war had to be set aside when commanders had to work out such an organisation as that which we had adopted. In conclusion, the noble and gallant lord moved for certain returns relating to the Army Reserve. Lord Chelmsford admitted that the noble and gallant lord strictly adhered to his statement that he intended to make no attack on him or any other officer; but no one, looking at the notice which the noble and gallant lord had put on the paper so long ago, could have supposed anything else than an attack was to be made on him as the officer commanding in Zululand. Even while his military reputation was still in the balance, the noble and gallant lord gave notice that he would call attention to the lamentable ignorance and neglect of the first and elementary rules of military strategy displayed in the operations against the Zulus. In these circumstances, Lord Chelmsford asked the indulgence of the House while he stated the facts relating to the disaster at Isandhlwana, and then entered on a detailed account of the orders given and the events which occurred immediately preceding and during the action at that place. He contended that all the facts showed that the day was not lost through an inefficient garrison, or because the position was an unfit one for the troops who were to defend it, but because the strict orders that had been given to defend it were departed from. Lord Morley pointed out to Lord Straithnairn that the information which he moved for might be found in documents presented to Parliament in ordinary course, but said that if the noble and gallant lord persevered with his motion there would be no opposition on the part of the Government. During the recess the report of Lord Airey's Committee would be carefully considered by the Secretary for War; but it would be premature at this moment to make any statement as to any steps which might hereafter be taken as a result of that report. He disputed Lord Strathnairn's conclusions as to the recruits and as to the Army Reserve, but declined at present to pass any decided opinion on such a complex machine as our Army organisation. Lord Ellenborough expressed his opinion that what was wanted was an enlargement of the present organisation in the direction of the long-service system, so as to secure a pension to the soldier. He held that Lord Chelmsford's narrative showed that the fault of what occurred at Isandhlwana rested on Col. Durnford, who was a member of one of the much-vaunted scientific corps. Lord Chelmsford wished distinctly to say that he had cast no reflection on the Royal Engineers. The motion in an amended form was agreed to.

THE AFGHAN WAR RELIEF FUND.

SIR,—I am requested by the Committee, consisting of the Earl Lytton, Lord Napier of Magdala, Gens. Sir Henry Norman, Sir Samuel Browne, Sir Michael Biddulph, Sir Charles Keyes, and Sir Richard Pollock, to ask for your support, in their endeavour to raise a fund for the relief of the widows and orphans of all those who have fallen, or may yet fall, in the Afghan war. Although yet without authentic details of the exact loss at the battle of Kushk-i-Nakhud, there will probably be no fewer to provide for from this affair alone than from the disaster at Isandhlwana, to say nothing of those for whom, up to the present time, no provision whatever has been made since the first outbreak of the war in 1878. It is also, alas! now too generally well known that there are no funds in the hands of either the Patriotic Commissioners or the Government available for the relief of the widows and orphans of our soldiers and sailors, and the Committee, therefore, earnestly and with confidence appeal to the whole nation to enable them to supply this want for those so left destitute during the above war. Subscriptions should be sent to Messrs. Cox and Co., Craig's Court, S.W., and I shall be glad on behalf of the Committee to receive any communications, or offers of help to specially provide for any of the orphans, which may be addressed to me.—I am, &c., JAMES GILDEA, Capt.,

20 Stafford Terrace, Kensington, W., Aug. 17, 1880.

OUR POSITION IN AFGHANISTAN.

Quetta, Saturday.—Ten fugitives from the battle of Kushk-i-Nakhud have arrived at Chaman. We have not heard as yet how they escaped and managed to make their way through a hostile country. It is probable that they are Pathans belonging to one of the native regiments. These, on discarding their uniforms, might pass as natives. We learn by telegraph that these men state that in the battle of the 27th the three regiments of infantry were formed in line. The 30th Bombay Native Infantry formed the centre, the 66th were on the right, and the 1st Bombay Native Infantry on the left. The action began at ten o'clock in the morning with a heavy artillery fire, the enemy's guns being very numerous. Suddenly upon the extreme left appeared a great force of Afghan cavalry and Ghazis, who charged furiously upon the flank of the 1st Bombay Regt. The flank company was annihilated, and the line doubled up. In complete disorder the regiment fell back upon the 30th Native Infantry, pressed by the Afghan cavalry and the Ghazis, and the 30th also fell into confusion. The enemy, pressing furiously on, the two broken regiments were thrust back upon the 66th, whose formation was completely broken up by this rush of fugitives, mingled with whom were the Afghan cavalry and Ghazis. After that all was disorder, and the survivors only describe a melée, in which each man fought for himself. They consider that the Afghans must have lost more heavily than we did. The attitude of the greater part of the Beloochi tribes is excellent. They are very indignant at the conduct of the Marris. The Khan of Khelat has received offers from several of the tribes to attack the Marris, to punish them for their raid upon us and to recover the plunder taken by them. The Khan has transmitted the offer to Col. Sandeman, and has offered to place himself at the head of the tribes against the marauders. The news of the hostility of the other Beloochi tribes has reached the Marris, and has evidently caused great alarm among them, as their Chief Sirdar has sent in a messenger to Col. Sandeman to beg that he might be allowed to have an interview with him. There is, therefore, every reason to hope that we may have no further trouble with this tribe, and that we may be free from the constant harassment to which our communications have hitherto been exposed. It is probable, too, although this is a matter of very minor importance, that a portion of the treasure carried off by the Marris may be restored. Native reports are so unanimous as to the presence of three European officers with Ayoub's army, that there can be little doubt as to the truth of this statement. They are reported to live apart from the rest, and have tents near the treasure and rifled guns, which are strongly guarded. It is uncertain whether these personages are Russians or European officers belonging to the Persian army. The Persians are said to sympathise strongly with Ayoub, who was long a resident in their country, and it is reported that a strong Persian force is gathered near the Beloochi frontier. Emissaries of Ayoub Khan are busily at work endeavouring to induce the tribes in the neighbourhood of the Khojak Pass to rise; but the line between Quetta and Chaman has been thoroughly secured, and is perfectly safe. Gen. Phayre's Staff have been working hard, night and day, to prepare for the advance, and everything is now ready for the troops as soon as they arrive. It is reported by the natives that Ayoub is preparing ladders, in order to make an attack by escalade upon Candahar.

Quetta, Sunday.—A messenger has arrived with a letter from Candahar dated the 11th inst. All is well in the city. The defences are now completed, and the various buildings outside the walls which would afford a cover for an attacking force have been demolished. Ayoub was, at the time of the despatch of the letter, three miles from the city. The enemy have begun to throw up siege works, but these are at present altogether insignificant, and create amusement rather than uneasiness. These attempts at earthworks are made, not by the troops, but by the country people who have been pressed into the service. The works point to the fact that Ayoub's attack will be made in the direction of the Shikarpore gate. His artillery throw shells occasionally from very long ranges into this city, but so far no intention of an attack has been manifested. Ayoub has with him 37 guns, of which six are 12-pounder Armstrongs. He has from 4,000 to 5,000 regular infantry, 2,000 cavalry, and 5,000 Ghazis. The Heratee regiments are said to have deserted in consequence of their dissension with the Cabulee troops. Provisions, with the exception of fresh meat and forage, are abundant in the city. The wounded officers at Candahar are all doing well. The following is the revised list of killed and missing. It will be seen that the loss of the 66th is considerably less than was at first reported:—Royal Horse Artillery, 18; Sappers, 23; 66th, 282; the Grenadiers (1st Bombay Native Infantry), 365; Jacob's Rifles (the 30th Bombay Native Infantry), 250; the Scind Horse, 10; the 3rd Bombay Cavalry, 20—total, 968. News had been received at Candahar from Khelat-i-Ghilzai up to the 4th. All well there. Messenger reported all quiet on the road until near Candahar. Our own news direct from Khelat-i-Ghilzai is later than this. The news of Roberts's intended advance from Cabul had already reached Candahar when letter left. The commanding officer of the post on the Khojak reports that the country people say that heavy firing in the direction of Candahar was heard on the night of the 12th. They also say that a force despatched by Ayoub was marching from Candahar towards Chaman. These, however, may be mere rumours.

Quetta, Wednesday.—The last body of troops belonging to the relieving column has now left Sibi for the front. The heat is still terrible, and the troops continue to suffer greatly, many being temporarily disabled. The Battery of Royal Horse Artillery has arrived here. They lost sixteen horses from the effect of the sun during their march up the Bolan. The Belooche Khan continues to afford us very valuable assistance in carriage and the collection of supplies. Sandeman's influence is paramount among the chiefs. It is an immense advantage that at a juncture like the present the British representative should be personally popular with the natives. Were the general population hostile to us, the result would be disastrous, as we should have to hold the whole of our long line of communication in force, instead of our rear being as now secure as far as the plains of India. Hitherto, the tribes along this route have always been restless, and it is greatly to the credit of the military and political officers here that so great a change of feeling among the native population has taken place—a change due entirely to their firmness and good management. Gen. Phayre starts for the Khojak on the 20th inst. He takes with him two rifled twenty-five pounders to dominate the enemy's Armstrong guns."

Aug. 18, 1880.—Griffin telegraphs, Gundamak, 18th.—Trustworthy correspondents report situation at Cabul generally satisfactory, though some slight disturbances in city. Musk-i-Alam is using all influence on behalf of Ameer. General feeling said to be not at all unfriendly to English, except among lowest of city population. No gathering in direction of Ghuzni. Improbable Roberts will have any fighting north of Khelat-i-Ghilzai.

Simla, Aug. 19.—"Rumours have reached here that Ayoub Khan's force has made an attack on the south side of Candahar, at the Shikarpur Gate. A cannonade is kept up from morning to evening on three sides of the city. The British loss is trifling."

Sir H. D. Wolff asked the Secretary of State for India on Thursday, in the House of Commons, whether two regiments of Gen. Phayre's force had already arrived at Candahar. The Marquis of Hartington: I believe the fact is that the head-quarters and a wing of one of the native regiments only have arrived at Candahar. There were others on the march when the defeat of Gen. Burrows took place. It was not found possible afterwards to order their advance in the direction of Candahar, unless they were strong enough to resist any attack that might be made upon them.

THE ALDERSHOT DIVISION.

The troops at the Camp, including the two provisional battalions of Volunteers which are doing duty there for a week, went through an interesting sham fight on Fox Hills on Wednesday. They were divided into attacking and defending forces of about equal strength. The former, which was commanded by Major-Gen. Spurgin, C.B., C.S.I., represented a southern force, defending the Camp, and was composed of one regiment of cavalry, three batteries of artillery, four battalions of infantry, and one battalion of Volunteers. This force marched from Camp about 9 a.m., and proceeded to the Guards' camping-ground at Ash. The attacking or northern force was under the command of Major-Gen. Peyton, and consisted of one regiment of cavalry, four batteries of artillery, five battalions of infantry, and a battalion of Rifle Volunteers. The northern troops, which were in drill order, so that they could be easily distinguished from their opponents, left the Camp about 8 o'clock, and marched to Pirbright. They were supposed to be advancing from Bisley against Aldershot. Shortly after 10 o'clock both forces had taken up their respective positions, the infantry being furnished with 20 rounds of blank ammunition per man. Gen. Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., attended by the officers of the head-quarters and his personal staff, rode on the ground about 10.30, when the field operations commenced. Gen. Spurgin pushed his cavalry and horse artillery rapidly in the direction of Crown Prince Wood, whilst his field batteries of artillery and infantry advanced to positions commanding Normandy Common, with strong outposts of infantry at Crown Prince Wood and Clump. Gen. Peyton commenced to advance from Pirbright about 10.30 in order to attack his opponent. With a small portion of his force he made a feint movement in the direction of Crown Prince Clump, whilst he moved his main body to the right of the wood, and gained the heights after about half an hour's fighting. About 12 o'clock, when Gen. Peyton appeared to have the best of the fight, the umpire-in-chief, Sir Daniel Lysons, ordered the "cease fire" to be sounded. A march-past of the whole of the troops brought the proceedings to a conclusion, the volunteers—more particularly those forming the six provisional battalions, under Lieut.-Col. Ommaney's command—acquitting themselves most admirably. Notwithstanding that the men had had a long march from camp and had advanced by a succession of rushes in skirmishing order for nearly a mile and a half over most difficult country, they went by with an elastic step, which drew forth the commendation of all spectators.

THE REGIMENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

"South Africa" writes:—"The official list of the Indian reliefs for 1880-81 is published in your issue of May 29, lately received out here. I gather from it that the brigade or linked-battalion system is still intended to be carried out, as the battalions ordered out are those whose links are already at home, or are shortly expected. Similarly the battalions ordered home are those whose links are already on foreign service, or those likely to go out shortly. If this is the principle worked on, why is it that the five regiments ordered out here after Isandhlwana were selected, most of them, years before their turn? Many British officers now serving in the dreary and uncongenial Transvaal would like to know,—where beer is 5s a bottle and butter is 5s a pound, and almost everything else is at a proportionately high price, where leave to England is difficult to get, and too expensive for any but the richest to think of. These five regiments, having served throughout the war, are now likely to remain in South Africa no one knows how long, and will after that probably be taken for a further term of foreign service. The linked battalion of my regiment will not be home for some years, yet we are condemned to serve abroad, also in direct opposition to the system the authorities profess to work upon. I hope the country will benefit by the blunders which were made in the selection of regiments for the Zulu war, and that the War Secretary will see fit to have at least one division composed of regiments whose links are coming home, always ready at Aldershot, either for active or foreign service."

The Army.

1st King's Dragoon Guards. We regret to see in the late Transvaal papers that twelve men of the detachment stationed at Eupatoria had been arrested on a charge of theft of property at Government House. Sir Owen Lanyon must be exceedingly distressed at such an occurrence, in the circumstances which render the good name and conduct of the troops in his district matters of great moment. It seems to us as if the general warrant on which the men were arrested was rather an objectionable procedure, if, indeed, it be not legally unjustifiable.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Capt. Wardrop reverts to regimental duty from the 1st prox., from the staff of Gen. Sir J. Michel, commanding in Ireland. Lieut. Yatman obtains his troop shortly, vice Capt. Lucas, appointed to the adjutancy of the Derbyshire Yeomanry Cavalry. The first division left Dublin on Wednesday for Cork, the second division following on Thursday.

5th Dragoon Guards. The regiment carries away with it from Aldershot a most excellent reputation, and the "Green Horse" are spoken of on all hands as the flower of the Heavies. Capt. Hemming, lately brought in from the 4th Hussars, has joined from the Staff in India, and is understood to have made up his mind to continue with the regiment. It was at one time thought that he would effect an exchange to India.

1st (Royal) Dragoons. The regiment has arrived in Ireland from Manchester, &c. Head-quarters and one squadron, under command of Lieut.-Col. Graham, landed at Dublin on the 13th inst. The regiment takes over Longford and out-stations. 2nd Lieut. Porter is about to retire from the Service.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). The regiment has returned to Dublin from the Curragh, and has resumed its former quarters in the Royal Barracks.

3rd Hussars. Lieut. Rant is seeking an exchange to a regiment in India. The arrangements by which he would have joined the King's Dragoon Guards have, however, fallen through.

4th Hussars. A troop is vacant by the appointment of Capt. Warde to the West Kent Yeomanry as adjt., and will be filled next month. It is hoped that the step may be given to the senior subaltern, Lieut. Pearson, who has been five and a half years in the service, has passed the qualifying examination, and has already seen two officers brought in over his head, whilst an officer of less service has obtained his troop in the 5th Dragoon Guards.

6th Dragoons. The will (dated June 26, 1880) of Major-Gen. R. Crawley, formerly commanding the regiment, late of No. 9 York Terrace, Regent's Park, who died on the 2nd ult., was proved on the 29th ult. by F. Waller, Q.C., the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £7,000.

9th Lancers. A correspondent writes:—"Allow me to thank you for your touching reference, in your last issue, to the death of poor Col. Cleland. All the officers of the 9th and the friends of the deceased will appreciate your remarks very much. Doubtless the authorities will say now, if Col. Cleland had lived he would have been awarded the C.B. Little consolation this to his broken-hearted mother and all his friends! If the poor fellow had been rewarded for his gallantry (there was plenty of time, for he was wounded on Dec. 11 last), it might have in some way acted as a salve, and encouraged him to bear up against his great sufferings."

14th Hussars. Lieut. English shortly reverts to his regiment from the Staff of the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, in Madras.

15th Hussars. The return of the regiment from India this year will depend, we understand, on the state of affairs in Afghanistan; but, if possible, it will embark for England in February or March next.

16th Lancers. Capt. Chadwick is seconded from the 16th inst., on appointment to the adjutancy of the Suffolk Yeomanry.

17th Lancers. The Times of India learns that "Lord Beaumont is about to present a very beautiful testimonial to the officers in commemoration of the celebrated charge of the regiment at the battle of Ulundi. The testimonial is in silver, and represents one of the men of the regiment—spear in hand—charging a naked Zulu warrior, who is about to hurl an assegai at the man."

18th Hussars. The most flattering accounts are furnished as to the state of the regiment, and the greatest credit is due to Lieut.-Col. Phillips for the improvements he has introduced, the 18th being able now to hold their own against any regiment in the Service, thanks to Col. Phillips's careful handling and unremitting zeal.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

A correspondent writes:—"I beg a small space in the columns of your paper to lay before its readers a few facts connected with the promotion of the officers of the old Royal Artillery, which will, I think, show the existence of a real grievance. After the Mutiny, the Indian Artillery was amalgamated with the Royal Artillery, but the officers were left on their own lists for promotion. This has resulted in the old Royal Artillery officers being rapidly superseded by those on the Indian lists, said to be in the same regiment! One hundred and fourteen majors have been thus superseded, and the hardship becomes harder almost every Gazette that is published. Major A, of the old Royal Artillery, is serving at a station where Major B, of the Madras Artillery, also commands a battery. The date of the first commission of the former is April, 1854, of the latter, June, 1857; one more than 26 years ago, the other more than three years later. Major B. is gazetted to his lieutenant-colonelcy, and thus suddenly goes over Major A.'s head as well as the heads of 100 others, and perhaps falls into command at the station where he had been serving junior to Major A. At any rate, he would be sure, sooner or later, to command those to whom by service he is junior. This wholesale supersession of officers, by those in the same regiment, cannot but be very galling. The worst of it is that the officers of the old Royal Artillery have no prospect of anything better, as the Royal Warrant provides that no colonels or lieutenant-colonels promoted to the latter rank before Oct. 1, 1877, can be retired under the five years' rule. There are thus 39 colonels and 54 lieutenant-colonels whom, virtually, nothing can move. And, supposing no casualties to occur for some time, the promotion of the majors depends entirely on the removal of a few periodically from amongst the 28 junior lieutenant-colonels as they complete five years in that rank, and even this little dribble will not commence till Oct. 1882, or more than two years hence. It appears altogether unfair that promotion should be thus stopped by officers at the top of the list, whilst their juniors are being compulsorily retired. All entered a seniority corps under the same rules with identical hopes. Why should a number of the oldest and longest service have the privilege of serving on, untouched by Royal Warrants, to the actual prejudice of equally good and younger men? Let each have his turn; it would not be breaking faith with the seniors any more than with the juniors. If one has to go to make room for those below him, the rule should be made applicable for all, without distinction. In this way the old Royal Artillery officers might be put on nearly an equal footing, as regards promotion, with their more fortunate Indian brethren. The existing stagnation is to be still further increased by the absorption of the lieutenant-colonels in command of auxiliary Artillery districts. It means that the next eleven vacancies in that rank will give promotion to not a single major. Perhaps, if this meets the eye of Mr. Childers, he may make it one of the many questions with which he has to deal, and give some hope of better times for the officers of the (old) Royal Artillery."

Major G. B. Hobart shortly reverts to regimental duty from the staff of the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, to whom he has acted as military secretary in Madras from Nov. 1875.

Brevet Col. B. L Gordon, C. Brig. R.H.A. (late Madras), and Lieut. J. J. Porteous, 5th Brig., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

"Income-Tax" writes:—"Your remarks in your issue of Aug. 7, anent the absurd farce of retaining such a plethora of field-officers (colonels and lieutenant-colonels) with the batteries of Artillery at Woolwich and Aldershot, are much to the point. Why the public should be called upon to pay for these extra superfluities is more than any one outside the ranks of the War Office can understand. But it is all of a par with the manner in which the regiment of Artillery is ruled from beginning to end,—interest, interest. Given that, you can arrange for a pleasant sojourn in England, and, in many cases, combined with a lucrative appointment at Woolwich, and a nice residence at Charlton. In one point particularly, there exists a vast difference between the manner in which Staff appointments are bestowed in the Artillery and the rest of the Army. In the former, once having got your foot in at Woolwich, in all human probability you remain on for the greater part of your career in an appointment, with perhaps an interval of two or three months just for decency's sake at the expiration of a five years' term; whereas in the Cavalry and Infantry of the Line, with a few exceptions, after a man has had his five years' tenure, he has to make way for another. But until the subject is taken up by Parliament, without reference to politics, so this rotten state of affairs will continue, and the British taxpayer will have to suffer."

Capt. and Adjt. Disney, 3rd Brig., at Newbridge, has been appointed to the A Brig. R.H.A., and ordered to hold himself in readiness to embark for India to join the G Baty.

Lord Elcho asked the Secretary of State for War on Tuesday what had been and what was proposed to be done as regards certain retired officers of the late Indian Ordnance Corps, whose petitions for inquiry into their claims against the Army Purchase Commission had lately been presented to Parliament. Mr. Childers said:—"In reply to my noble friend, I have to state that the retired officers to whom he refers have made no representations to the War Office, and until I read the question I had no knowledge of the grievance complained of. I have communicated with the Commissioners, and I am bound to say that I see no valid ground for disturbing their award. There is no appeal from it, except by passing a fresh Act of Parliament. But if my noble friend will call on Sir Edward Lugard, who is the Chief Commissioner, he will, with much pleasure, explain to him the exact foundation of the award. I, as Secretary of State, have no authority in the matter whatever." Lord Elcho stated that a petition on that subject had been presented to the House. Mr. Childers replied that it was a most inconvenient practice for officers having grievances to present petitions relating to them to that House, instead of to the Department. If they applied in the first instance to the Department, and were dissatisfied with the answers they received, they could then have recourse to Parliament.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Indian Daily News has the following:—"Lord Hartington had scarcely taken his seat at the India Office when he found himself at variance with the India Council. We believe we are not far wrong in saying that the dispute had a great deal to do with the desire of Lord Hartington to strengthen the new Viceroy's hand as much as possible. It so happens that Lord Ripon and Sir A. Clarke are old friends, and that both Lord Ripon and Lord Hartington desire to avail themselves of Sir A. Clarke's experience and sound judgment. The India Council, however, as stated in the Home Press, were bent upon effecting the Stracheyian economy of saving the salary of the Minister for Public Works, and though Lord Hartington endeavoured to show them that the present, at all events, is not the time for weakening the Cabinet of the Viceroy, they were obdurate, and the result is that Sir A. Clarke has completed his term of service and gone home. That a man so safe should again return to India, will be the wish of all those who know how much vigour and safety are now required in the Indian administration. It may strengthen Lord Hartington's hands to know that his proposal exactly meets the wishes of the Indian public. The Pioneer remarks that it is much to be regretted that circumstances have not so fallen out as to provide for his (Sir A. Clarke's) further stay in this country."

Coldstream Guards. Lieut.-Col. Crichton is expected to return to regimental duty after Oct. 1, from the Staff of Gen. Sir John Michel, in Ireland, on whose Staff he has been employed since May, 1878, as Military Secretary. Col. Crichton, being seconded, will be brought in to fill the next vacancy in his rank.

1st, or Royal Scots. Capt. Morison, 2nd Batn., has been appointed station staff officer at Nowshera. The 2nd Batn. will most probably return to England this winter, as previously arranged.

3rd Buffs. Capt. Kane, 1st Batn., has been selected for the adjutancy of the 49th Middlesex R.V.

4th King's Own. Regimental Order, 2nd Batn., Belgaum, June 22, 1880.—Col. Bray, C.B., having arrived at the termination of his five years of regimental command this day, is obliged to bid farewell to the 2nd King's Own Royal Regiment. Col. Bray has served fifteen years in the two battalions of the regiment, from major to colonel. As a soldier of the King's Own, he has always been imbued with that high esprit de corps which should exist in every well-ordered and good regiment in every Royal Army which upholds the honour and stability of a great Royal House and Empire. It is the duty of every officer to foster and encourage this military, loyal, and martial spirit. Col. Bray has done so to the utmost of his power. Esprit de corps, love of regiment, loyalty to the Crown, to which the soldiers of the King's Own are ever bound, confidence, and reliance in each other, the result of discipline, mutual respect and regard between the officers and soldiers, will carry this regiment through the hour of trial, of privation and death, and give courage and strength to perform great deeds on the field of war. In no regiment in her Majesty's Army has there ever been greater love of regiment than in the King's Own, the result of over 200 years of high training and warlike deeds in all parts of the world. For over 200 years this great military clan or tribe has carried the Lion of England and upheld the honour of Great Britain. That the King's Own may ever continue to maintain their discipline, high character, and tone, is the parting prayer of their old colonel, who after serving 41 years in the English Army, even now yields with jealous reluctance the command of the 2nd King's Own. To the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers, who have served with him Col. Bray tenders his best thanks, for the high bearing of the officers, and the fine regimental spirit of the men, which has enabled him for five years to exercise the command of the regiment with satisfaction and pleasure to himself, and he trusts, with the approbation of his superiors.

5th Fusiliers. Major-Gen. Roberts, lately commanding the 1st Batn., has vacated his brigade command in Afghanistan on promotion, and proceeded to England.

6th Regiment. The 1st Batn. will return to England this year, if arrangements can be made for its relief at Aden. The present difficulty in Afghanistan may, however, prevent the original order being carried out.

7th Fusiliers. Capt. Daly will be seconded from the 10th prox., on accepting the adjutancy of the 4th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers.

9th Regiment. The Irish Times says:—"All the brigade depôts in Ireland have received orders to use exertions to get recruits for the 1st Batn. 9th Regt., stationed in Limerick."

11th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Watson, 2nd Batn., a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to do duty with the 20th Bombay N.I., on probation.

16th Regiment. Capt. Whittuck, 1st Batn., will be seconded, with effect from the 1st prox., and appointed to the adjutancy of the Bedford Militia.

20th Regiment. Capt. Randolph, 2nd Batn., has been noted for appointment as adjt. of the 7th Royal Lancashire Militia.

21st Fusiliers. We are enabled to furnish some interesting particulars of the trip of Sir George Douglas to Zululand. The melancholy object of Sir George's visit was to erect memorial stones over the graves of his son (Lieut. Scott-Douglas) and the lance-corporal of the 17th Lancers who fell with him in the Zulu war, and to otherwise mark their last resting-places. After leaving here, Sir George's party, consisting of three soldiers—kindly lent by Gen. Clifford—and native servants, proceeded, viâ Stanger, to the Lower Tugela. Visiting St. Paul's, the party reached Kwamagwasa, where Lieut. Douglas and his solitary escort fell. The graves of both were found to be in good order, and well protected by the embankment thrown up by Lieut.-Col. Thynne, Coldstream Guards. Here Sir George remained nine days, performing the labours he had voyaged so far to accomplish. Round the two graves a space of twelve feet square was enclosed by a stone wall three feet high, and round this again another large enclosure was made, by means of a V-shaped ditch. The whole of the ground inside this was carefully trenched, and sown with snowdrop, aconite, and other seeds. On the grave of the youthful Irish corporal were planted seeds of the shamrock, sent with Sir George by the mother of the lad. In the outer enclosure, Sir George planted four weeping willows and four funeral cypresses; and the Rev. Mr. Robertson has kindly undertaken to plant the top of the embankment with our Saviour's Thorn. On the two graves were placed recumbent crosses. The one placed over the late Lieut. Scott-Douglas is of grey Aberdeen granite, and the other was obtained in Durban. After the work at the little graveyard was completed, the Rev. Mr. Robertson held a service one Sunday, when a large number of natives attended.

22ND REGIMENT. Capt. Matterson will be seconded from the 10th prox., on appointment as adjutant of the 26th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers. Capt. Gleig has completed his period of service as D.A.A.G. for Musketry on the Bengal Establishment from the 10th inst. Lieut. Gordon-Cumming, 2nd Batn., a probationer for the Indian S.C., has reverted to duty with the 2nd Batn., from the 22nd Bengal N.I. Head-quarters and five companies, 1st Batn., left the Curragh by rail on Saturday last for Newry. Three companies proceeded to Londonderry.

23RD FUSILIERS. The 1st Batn., under command of Col. Elgee, embarked at Portsmouth on Monday in H.M.S. Malabar for conveyance to India. Previous to the embarkation, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales presented it with new colours. The parade-state showed 25 officers and 880 rank and file. The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Princess of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, &c., arrived about 12.30, and was received by the usual salute. The usual religious service having been performed, the newly-consecrated colours were handed to his Royal Highness by Majors Tilly and Wilkinson, the Prince of Wales handing the Queen's colour to Lieut. Carey, and the regimental colour to Lieut. Evans. The colours having been saluted, the Prince of Wales addressed the regiment as follows:—"Colonel Elgee, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, I consider it a very great privilege to have been asked to present your regiment with new colours on the eve of your departure for India. It occurs to me, in performing this gratifying ceremony, that the colours I now hand you are to replace those which were given you 31 years ago by my lamented father, —colours which, during three campaigns, your regiment has carried with honour and success. You will in a few years celebrate the two-hundredth anniversary of your formation. During that long period your regiment has served in nearly every quarter of the globe, seeing as much real service, perhaps, as any regiment in the Army. Within the limits of the present century, I easily recall to mind Egypt, the Peninsula, and Waterloo, while coming down to more modern times, we have the Crimea, India, and Ashantee. I know the distinguished character of the regiment, and I feel sure that those now in its ranks will seek to emulate what has been done in the past, and therefore I feel certain that its good name will continue to be maintained as pre-eminent as it is now. On the eve of your departure for India, nobody can wish you more heartily than I do 'God-speed!' and I feel sure that whatever service you may be called upon to perform, it will be carried out in a way to bring fresh credit for that courage and steadfastness for which the name of the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers has ever been so justly celebrated." Col. Elgee, in response, said:—"We are exceedingly obliged to your Royal Highness for presenting to us our new colours. As the name of our regiment implies, we are connected with the Principality of Wales, and I need hardly say that the part which your Royal Highness has taken on the present occasion will be handed down to future generations, while such of us as are honoured by taking part will receive an impression that will endure for the remainder of our lives. In the name of the regiment, I take upon myself to say that wherever these colours may be, whether in presence of an enemy or in the performance of duty of a more peaceful kind, maybe, we shall always do our utmost to maintain the high reputation it has won. On the eve of embarkation for foreign service, we offer our earnest wishes for the health, long life, and happiness of her Majesty, of your Royal Highness, the Princess of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family." Returning to the saluting-point, the Royal party took up their position, while the battalion, wheeling into open column, marched past in splendid style, carrying the new colours. Wheeling again into line on their old ground, the officers were called to the front, and had the honour of presentation to the Prince of Wales. Up to this time the sky had been overcast, but now the sun burst through, giving a brilliant termination to the ceremony, as the battalion advanced in review order, with band playing and colours flying, finishing up with a royal salute. The Royal party, amid the usual honours from the troops keeping the ground, then drove to the Osborne and re-embarked, while the 23rd made for the dockyard, and marched on board the Malabar, which quitted the harbour in the evening. Their Royal Highnesses entertained a numerous party at luncheon, amongst whom were the following officers of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers:—Gen. Crutchley, col. of the regiment, Gen. Sir Daniel Lysons, Col. Elgee, Majors Tilly and Wilkinson, and other naval and military officers. At 5 p.m. their Royal Highnesses, with the three young Princesses, visited the Malabar, and thoroughly inspected the ship. By the desire of the Princess, the regimental goat was paraded for her and the young Princesses' inspection. H.R.H. the Princess Beatrice came on board at 5.30, and the Royal party then bade adieu to the regiment, and the Malabar steamed out of port amid ringing cheers, closely followed by the Royal yacht, which parted company shortly after on its way to Osborne. Capt. Norman, with the colour-serjeants from the depôt, were on the ground to take charge of the old colours and escort them to Wrexham, it having been intended to deposit them in Wrexham Church; but, at the request of the Prince of Wales, they will be deposited at Marlborough House. During the afternoon they were received on board the Royal yacht for conveyance to Osborne, for the Queen's inspection. The following officers (past and present) were on the ground:—Gen. Crutchley (colonel of the regiment), Gen. Sir Daniel Lysons; Col. Prevost (who commanded the 1st Batn. from Sept. 3, 1870, till placed on half-pay, on June 21, 1880), Col. O'Connor, V.C. (commanding 2nd Batn.); Lieut. Col. Shadwell; Major Roe; Capts. Holroyd, Bradshaw, Norman Stringer, Boddam-Whetham Griffith; Lieuts. Leighton and Knight. Officers in 1st Batn. who served in the Crimean war:—Col. Elgee, Major Jas. Williamson, and Capt. A. Taylor. Officers in 2nd Batn.:—Col. O'Connor, V.C., Lieut.-Col. James de Vic Tupper, and Qrmr. E. Knightley. A correspondent writes:—"I venture to send you a few particulars of the departure of the 1st Batn. 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, who left Woolwich on Monday last for India, en route for the front. The fall-in sounded at 5.30 a.m., and at 6.30 a.m. the battalion left the Cambridge Barracks, headed by the 16th Lancers and Royal Artillery bands; the departure being effected in a most orderly manner. On arrival at Portsmouth, in special trains, the battalion marched to the recreation-ground, where they bade farewell to the old colours, surrounded with so many glorious memories, and received new ones at the hands of the Prince of Wales, whereon are emblazoned the records of their past achievements. Thence they marched off to the dockyard, being greeted with much enthusiasm, and were soon on board the Malabar. The appearance of the battalion at Woolwich and on parade at Portsmouth was all that could be desired. They were ten hours under arms, in heavy marching order, and as fine a specimen of a battalion as could be seen under the short-service system. As an eye-witness of the whole proceedings from first to last, I have sent you these few details, some of which may interest your many readers." It is arranged that Lady Ripon shall leave England to join the Governor-General at Simla by the steamer of Oct. 27. Capt. and Lady Clough-Taylor accompany her ladyship to India.

24TH REGIMENT. New colours was presented by Gen. Lord Napier of Magdala, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., to the 2nd Batn., under command of Lieut.-Col. Degacher, C.B., at Gibraltar on the 6th inst., to replace those that was lost on January 22, 1879, on the occasion of the capture of the British camp at Isandhlwana by the Zulus. At 6 o'clock p.m., the battalion, in review order, was drawn up on the Alameda, facing west, in line at open order, under command of Lieut.-Col. Degacher, C.B., the following officers being present:—Capts. Harvey and Williams, Brevet Major Bromhead, V.C., Capts. Banister and Halliday, Lieut. and Adjt. Trower; Lieuts. Dolben, Smyly, and Worlledge; 2nd Lieuts. Armitage, Kelly, Neave, and Burnett, and Qrmr. Tigar. At the appointed time, Lord Napier of Magdala rode on to the ground, which was kept by detachments from each regiment and corps in garrison. His lordship took up his position by the saluting-flag, close by which was his Excellency's carriage, in which were seated Lady Napier of Magdala, and Mrs. Degacher. The usual prayer having been offered up, his Excellency dismounted and approached the colours, which had been uncased and were handed to him successively by Capts. Harvey and Williams, the two next senior officers present after Col. Degacher. Lieut. Smyly and 2nd Lieut. Neave then knelt in front of Lord Napier, and received from his hands the Queen's and the regimental colours respectively, after which his Excellency addressed Col. Degacher in the following terms:—"Col. Degacher, officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the 24th Warwickshire Regiment. The Queen of England has commanded me to give you these new colours, to replace those which her Majesty knows very well were not lost through any default of the battalion, but in consequence of having been placed in the camp at Isandhlwana, when you went to the front, on an expedition under the General commanding. Your battalion represents in this garrison the ancient 24th Regiment, of which it is an essential part. It was raised nearly 200 years ago, and bears on its banners the honourable records of service in nearly every quarter of the globe, the colours having been unfurled in America, Egypt, Africa, Spain, Portugal, and India. It took part in the capture of the Colony at the Cape of Good Hope, in the land where your regiment has so recently won imperishable renown. The 2nd Batn. of the 24th was first raised in 1804, took the field in 1809, and bears on its colours the memorable names of 'Talavera,' 'Fuentes d'Onor,' 'Salamanca,' 'Vittoria,' 'Pyrenees,' 'Nivelle,' 'Orthes,' 'Peninsular.' In the long peace which followed these campaigns, the strength of the Army was reduced and the 2nd Batn. was disbanded; but it returned to its colours in 1858, served in India from 1861 to 1872, and in 1878 was ordered to South Africa, where, under the able command of Lieut.-Col. Degacher, it took an important share in bringing to a successful conclusion the arduous campaign against the Kaffirs. The duty was carried out in a very difficult country, abounding in dense thickets, with rocky and precipitous mountains and ravines, and often under an inclement sky. It was fortunate for you to have had such a training, fortitude, and endurance, in personal independence and self-reliance; and to have gained the warm commendation bestowed on you by your commanding General, who said then and also on a later occasion 'your conduct was admirable,' 'no troops could have been steadier or more collected,' 'your conduct could not be surpassed.' You received also the thanks of the Colony for which you did such valuable services. Scarcely was this duty ended when in July, 1878, you entered on the Zulu campaign, in which your regiment gave such a noble example of duty and courage. At Isandhlwana your comrades, overwhelmed by countless numbers, with ammunition exhausted, without succour, fell in the ranks in which they had fought, dauntless to the last, and surrounded by the enemy's slain. Their Queen's colour was saved by the devotion of Lieuts. Melvill and Coghill, but at the sacrifice of their own lives. Five officers and 173 non-commissioned officers and men of your Batn. fell in defence of the camp. Who can ever forget the heroic history of Rorke's Drift? The prompt resolution of the gallant Bromhead, fully appreciating the importance of the post, and determining to defend it to the last; the skill and courage of the engineer, Lieut. Chard, and the noble conduct of the garrison! What words can convey sufficient praise for Private Joseph Williams, who defended the entrance to the hospital while his comrades were removing the sick and gave his life to save theirs. Never were Victoria Crosses won better than those with which her Majesty decorated Major Bromhead, Corpl. William Allen, and Ptes. John Williams, William Hook, Frederick Hitch, Robert Jones, and William Jones. Thirteen times has the Victoria Cross been won by the 2nd Batn. of the 24th Regt. since 1867. The history of your regiment is one of which you may well be proud: it is a noble heritage. Col. Degacher, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, by desire of the Queen I consign to you these colours, which you are to consider as coming from her Most Gracious Majesty's own hands. They are entrusted to you with her Majesty's confidence that you will guard them, and the honour of your regiment, your country, and your Queen, with the same courage, fidelity, and loyalty that has ever animated the 2-24th Regt." The following reply was then made by Lieut.-Col. Degacher on the part of the regiment:—"Your Excellency,—In the name of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 2nd Batn. 24th Regt., I beg to thank you for the kind words you have spoken to us this day: words all the more gratifying, coming, as they do, from an officer who—if I may be permitted to say so—has such a long roll of brilliant services rendered to his country as your Excellency. We have one favour to ask of you, Sir, that you will convey to her Gracious Majesty the assurance of our devotion and of our gratitude for the great honour she has conferred on us this day through you; and also, as we may very soon have to carry these colours into fight, that we will do our best, one and all, to emulate the constancy, the devotion to duty, and the courage of our 178 comrades who, but the other day fell fighting at the foot of Isandhlwana Hill." Brevet Major Much, 1st Batn., has been selected for the adjutancy of the Royal South Wales Militia, in succession to Capt. Farquhar, who has resigned the appointment, and reverted to regimental duty.

41ST REGIMENT. Head-quarters and the service companie arrived at Gibraltar last week in H.M.S. Orontes, and wers at once disembarked in relief of the 2nd Batn. 24th Rege

43RD LIGHT INFANTRY. Capt. Nicholl completes his five years as adjutant of the 2nd Glamorganshire R.V. on the 1st prox.

47TH REGIMENT. Lieut.-Col. FitzRoy completes his five years in command of the regiment on the 1st inst., when he will be placed upon half-pay. Capt. Biscoe is seconded, with effect from the 12th inst., on appointment to the adjutancy of the Fifeshire R.V.

ROYAL MARINES.

The battalion of Royal Marines recently despatched to Ireland had a splendid passage from Plymouth to Queenstown, where they arrived shortly after two o'clock on Thursday afternoon. The whole party was in readiness to disembark, but it was late when they cleared out of the ship. The battalion is distributed in the forts around Cork Harbour. The head-quarters and staff and the Chatham contingent are at Kinsale. Of the Portsmouth Division one company is at Spike Island, a second is at Haulbowline and Rocky Island, and a third at Carlisle Fort. The whole of the Plymouth contingent is located at Camden Fort, in charge of Major Walsh. Letters for the last-mentioned should be addressed Camden Fort, Crosshaven, Cork Harbour.—Hampshire Telegraph.

The following detachments are awaiting embarkation at Stonehouse Barracks:—Lieut. H. C. Fraser, R.M.L.I., two privates, and a gunner, to embark on Friday, per merchant steamer, in the Hercules; and a serjeant and four gunners, R.M.A., and 13 privates, R.M.L.I., for the Defence.

Capt. G. A. E. Gore, recently promoted, in command of detachment, H.M.S. Bacchante, will be relievd by Lieut. A. C. Smyth.

Lieut. Gott, appointed to Indian S.C., will be relieved of command of detachment in H.M.S. Minotaur by Lieut. Kysh.

Capt. St. A. St. John will relieve Capt. F. V. G. Bird of command of recruiting party, Taunton, on Oct. 1 next.

Capt. Triscott, 1 serjeant, 4 gunners R.M.A., and 13 privates R.M.L.I., embarked in H.M.S. Defence on the 18th inst.

A detachment, consisting of 1 colour-serjeant, 1 serjeant, 1 bugler, 27 privates (including 5 ward-room officers' servants) R.M.L.I., and 1 captain, 5 gunners R.M.A., has been ordered to embark in H.M.S. Cleopatra, to be commissioned at Devonport on the 24th inst.

Major W. H. Wroot, 2 serjeants, 2 corporals, 1 bugler, and 58 privates (including 8 ward-room officers' servants) will embark in H.M.S. Inconstant on the 24th inst.

51ST LIGHT INFANTRY. Major Chatfield has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

52ND LIGHT INFANTRY. Capt. Boyle is seconded, with effect from the 10th inst., on appointment as adjutant of the Oxfordshire Militia. The step will go in the regiment, Lieut. Cunliffe obtaining his company.

57TH REGIMENT has moved from the Royal to Richmond Barracks, Dublin.

61ST REGIMENT. A telegram dated Malta, Aug. 19, says:—"H.M.S. Euphrates sailed hence for Bombay at six p.m. to-day. She has on board 871 officers and men of the 98th, and 248 of the 61st Regt., one artillery, and three medical officers."

64TH REGIMENT. "A Friend of the Oppressed" writes to us as follows:—"The case of Capt. Savage, who has, on his retirement from the 64th Regt., after a quarter of a century's service, been robbed of his rights by a too literal interpretation (never contemplated by the Legislature) of a clause in one of the Royal Warrants concerning retirement, is bad enough in all conscience. But I am acquainted with a case of even more flagrant injustice in the same regiment from which Capt. Savage retired. Capt. Savage, though he obtained his promotion before the abolition of Purchase, obtained it (unattached) without purchase, and as compensation for the loss of his prospects by the disbanding of his former corps (the Royal Canadian Rifles), in which he was senior subaltern, and would probably have remained so for another year or two but for the disbandment. But in the same regiment there still remains another captain of the disbanded Royal Canadian Rifles, who purchased his company in 1868, and to whom the disbandment involved the loss of prospects of very early promotion to a majority by purchase. For this officer,—Capt. Dugmore, who, I am told, purchased all his steps at the high over-regulation prices customary in the Canadian Rifles,—absolutely nothing has been done in the way of compensation, or restoration to his just rights. After two years' half-pay, he was brought into the 64th at the end of a run of promotion, and junior to captains who were subalterns when he was placed on half-pay; and was refused permission (granted to Capts. Adderley and Savage in a case involving far greater discrepancy of service) to exchange and thus to better his position, on the ground of possible hardship to certain subalterns,—the only class that appears to have any 'vested rights' left! Then for the heinons offence of happening to be on compulsory temporary half-pay on the chance date (Oct. 1, 1871), arbitrarily fixed by the Royal Warrant, he has suffered the final confiscation of the whole of his vested rights as a Purchase officer, and finds himself debarred (by the clause limiting these rights to officers who would have been entitled to over-regulation on that date) from the pension laid down for Purchase officers, from the sale of his commission as a Purchase officer, and from the option of an unattached majority on the completion of twenty years' service; and able only to retire on exactly the same terms as a captain who has obtained his company without any expenditure whatever since the abolition of Purchase. This injustice is simply the result of a slip in the wording of the Royal Warrant, which should have been corrected by the recent Warrant, allowing half-pay service (up to two years) on reduction to count, which Warrant was most certainly designed—though most clumsily and carelessly—to remove any disabilities as affecting retirement, directly or indirectly, resulting from such half-pay service. And now, this officer, after having suffered the absolute and probably final confiscation, first, of his prospects of regimental promotion, and secondly, of the whole of the money he has sunk in his commissions, is further condemned (unless the time for brevet promotions be extended) to suffer the additional confiscation of the right (for which he paid when purchasing his company) to succeed, sooner or later, to field-rank in the Army by brevet. It is worthy of no one to insist on the literal interpretation or the slavish carrying-out of paragraphs involving such gross breaches of faith, or to leave them standing when they can be so easily rectified by a supplementary clause."

66th Regiment. Capt. Murphy has resigned the adjutancy of the Royal Berkshire Militia for the purpose of embarking for India to join the remnant of the service companies in Afghanistan.

67th Regiment. Capt. White is seconded from the 26th inst., on being appointed to the adjutancy of the 2nd Hants R.V.

76th Regiment. Capt. Gore will shortly return to England from India to rejoin his regiment, from which he has been absent for the last five years on the staff of Major-Gen. A. K. Gore, commanding a Division of the Madras Army. Three companies moved to Castlebar on Saturday from the Curragh Camp. Major Pearse, Capts. Carlyon, M'Donald, and Brett, and Lieut. Were accompanied the detachment.

78th Highlanders. Capt. Stewart has been appointed as officiating D.A.Q.M.G. in Bombay, but will doubtless have resigned his appointment to accompany his regiment on service.

83rd Regiment. Brevet Major Beazley has completed his five years' staff service as assist.-adjt.-gen. of a Division of the Bombay Army.

88th Regiment. Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Dalrymple, who has been acting lately as Military Secretary to Lord Lytton, has been appointed officiating brigade-major of the Umballa Brigade, and will shortly obtain a five years' appointment on the Bengal Staff.

94th Regiment. Capt. Montague having been appointed garrison-instructor at the Cape, will be seconded from the 20th prox.

97th Regiment. The regiment will arrive at Gibraltar before the end of the year, according to present arrangements, to relieve the 2nd Batn. Rifle Brigade. Capt. Belgrave is seconded from the 17th inst., on appointment as adjt. of the 4th Kent R.V.

105th Light Infantry. Head-quarters and six companies left Newry for Mullingar by rail on the 13th inst., and will be stationed there for the winter. One company proceeded to Boyle and another to Sligo. Capt. Wiggins has been ordered from the depôt at Pontefract to head-quarters at Mullingar, on promotion.

106th Light Infantry. One company proceeded from Athlone to Oughterarde on Saturday, and will be stationed there for the winter.

Rifle Brigade. The 2nd Batn. is proposed to be brought home from Gibraltar about the end of the year. The 1st Batn. sails to-day from Portsmouth in H.M.S. Jumna for conveyance to India. Gen. Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., made an official inspection of a portion of the batn. at Aldershot on Thursday. Gen. Lysons having inspected the ranks, addressed the officers and men for a few minutes. The head-quarters and main portion of the batn. proceeds by a special train to Portsmouth this morning.

Pay Department. The Natal Witness of June 8 has the following:—"Around the Post-Office steps, and thick and close around the outward (coastwise) mail cart on Saturday morning last, 5th current, were grouped officers and townsmen to bid the parting God-speed to as quiet a gentleman and as industrious a military officer as ever signed a cheque, wore a sword, or fought in Crimean trenches. Capt. T. W. Bacon, A.P.D., after many months of wearisome office work, at length got clear of Pietermaritzburg. Although not of very high rank or distinguished special service, he has done duty of a severe class with credit to himself and satisfaction to his superiors. As a workman—in Pietermaritzburg his fame can only be eclipsed by that of the indefatigable and self-sacrificing—erstwhile—I.G.-L.F. C. and B. Their operations, financial and official, were for a time of almost equal magnitude. We know that Captain Bacon in his department issued no less than 250,000 cheques—imagine, more than a quarter of a million of those little slips that are so grateful to the toiling palm. Our departing friend's military history is excellent. It appears that he was for more than 30 years in her Majesty's service. He served in the Crimea with the 62nd Regiment, doing duty from Nov. 13, 1854, to the siege of Sebastopol. He was present at the Quarries, June 8, 1855, assault of the Redan, June 18, and again at the second assault Sept. 8. He was mentioned in despatches and received the usual medal with clasps and Turkish medal. Of the many hard workers who have been amongst us none were more retiring, unassuming, and yet, where known, justly popular than Capt. Bacon. We need not say we wish him a fortunate voyage, and a warm welcome in 'the land he's going to.'"

Medical Department. A correspondent writes:—"The sudden death, from heat-apoplexy, of Deputy-Surg.-Gen. Hannan, at Simla, on June 12, will be a great shock to all his old friends in the Service, as few men were better known and appreciated in his own particular branch, and also by those outside it. Though of late years attached to the Royal Artillery, most of his early and war service was spent in the 49th Foot, which he joined in the early part of 1854, though even before this period he had seen a good deal of hard, practical work as a medical officer in charge of convict ships proceeding to the Antipodes. He accompanied his regiment to Turkey on the commencement of our hostilities with Russia, and from the day the Army landed at Varna, in 1854, to the close of the campaign and re-embarkation of the Allied forces in the summer of 1856, he was never known to miss one single day's duty in the field or in the trenches before Sebastopol. Though of a naturally rough and retiring nature, bordering at times to almost rudeness to those above and below him, no man was better liked in his regiment. His shrewd, practical abilities and keen sense of anything approaching to imposition and contempt for the same, was proverbial in the old fighting division he belonged to. As a surgeon, few surpassed him, and his long and faithful services were duly appreciated by his superiors. He was one of the good old stamp of regimental doctors, now, alas, almost extinct (thanks to the sweeping changes of modern medical reformers), who not only knew every man and officer in his regiment by heart, but could distinguish at a glance the real sufferer from the malingerer; to the former he was his best friend, but for the latter he had an eye and memory that never forgave or forgot. In conclusion, I beg to annex an extract of his services from Hart's Army List, which I can vouch to the accuracy of, by which it appears 'he served in the Eastern campaign of 1854-55, including the battles of Alma and Inkerman, siege and fall of Sebastopol, sortie of Oct. 26, capture of rifle pits, April 19, capture of the quarries and assaults of the Redan on June 18 and Sept. 8 (medal with three clasps), 5th class ofthe Medjidie, and Turkish medal.'"

MILITIA.

Galway. In reply to Major Nolan, Mr. Childers said, on Thursday, in the House of Commons:—"In reply to my hon. and gallant friend, I have to say that the removal of the training quarters of the Galway Militia from Loughrea to Galway was decided on some time ago under the localisation scheme, and was carried into effect on Aug. 10. I understand that this removal was carried out in due form."

Limerick City Artillery. A vacancy for a captain has occurred in this regiment by the death, in Paris, of Capt. O'Grady, late captain in the 44th Foot.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

2nd West Yorkshire. On Wednesday last, this regiment marched from Harrogate to Leeds, whence the various troops proceeded to their respective head-quarters, for dismissal after permanent duty. No troop had less than thirty-five miles to march, and many of the men had to ride five or ten miles after dismissal, but no sore backs or sick horses were reported. The same satisfactory result attended the march to Harrogate, though the rain fell ceaselessly all day. The inspecting officer was the guest of the officers for the last two days of the training, and inspected the troops closely, both mounted and dismounted. After the review on Tuesday, he addressed the men in most complimentary terms, stating that they were a model of what a yeomanry regiment should be, and alluding to the admirable way in which they were mounted and rode their horses. The absence of white or grey horses from the ranks, which is insisted upon by Sir Henry Edwards, is a feature which might be imitated with advantage by other regiments. Col. the Hon. C. W. Thesiger, commanding 1st Cavalry District for Auxiliary Forces, was the reviewing officer.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

Lieut.-Gen. Willis, C.B., commanding Northern District has sanctioned a review parade of Volunteers being held on the Knavesmire, York, on Saturday, the 28th inst. About 10,000 Volunteers have applied to attend. They will be formed into six brigades and two divisions, the brigadiers being Cols. W. C. Bancroft (12th Sub-District), R. B. Chichester, C.B. (6th and 10th Sub-Districts), F. Hardy (7th and 8th Sub-Districts), R. Mockler (4th Sub-District), Manningham-Buller (19th and 20th Sub-Districts), C. Blewitt (9th Sub-District). Cols. J. H. Dunne (28th Sub-District), and J. S. Thompson (26th Sub-District), will command the divisions.

49th Middlesex (Post Office) Rifles. The regiment forming, with two companies of the 26th and a small detachment from the Civil Service, the 4th provisional battalion for summer drills, &c., returned from Aldershot on Saturday, the 14th inst., after being encamped there a week. The battalion was under command of Lieut.-Col. Du Plat Taylor, and H.S.H. the Duke of Teck, colonel of the 49th, was present with the regiment during the training. Before quitting Aldershot, the battalion was inspected by Major-Gen. Peyton, commanding the 3rd Infantry Brigade, in his Serene Highness's presence, and was warmly commended by the Brigadier for its steadiness, good conduct, and efficiency. Capt. Kane, of the Buffs, has been selected for the vacant adjutancy.

The Indian Army.

[The Editor will be glad to receive Contributions from time to time from Officers of Native Regiments who may desire to render this column interesting to friends in England.]

1st Bengal Cavalry. Lieut. R. F. Gartside-Tipping has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

1st Madras Light Cavalry. Surg.-Major J. McN. Donnelly has been granted leave to England for two years, on medical certificate.

12th Madras N.I. Major E. J. Wynch, wing-officer, has been granted leave to England on medical certificate.

3rd Bombay Light Cavalry. In reply to the disparaging remarks which have been made with regard to the conduct of the native troops under Gen. Burrows's command, a field-officer who has served in the Bombay Army writes to the Standard that he himself saw the 3rd Light Cavalry break a Persian square at Kooshab. The "Black Boys of Bombay" have long had a good reputation as willing and serviceable troops in Indian military circles. It is most unreasonable to brand men with cowardice for yielding to overwhelming numbers. The odds against Gen. Burrows's force were six to one, not to speak of the great superiority in artillery possessed by Ayoub Khan.

Poona Horse. Lieut. H. D. M. Minchin, squadron-officer, has been appointed adjutant, vice Capt. Anderson, who has vacated on promotion.

6th Bombay N.I. Lieut. J. W. S. Mercer, wing-officer, has been appointed quartermaster, vice Major Reay, who has vacated on promotion.

3rd Bombay N.I. Capt. G. J. Coulson has been selected to command the depôts of the 27th and 29th Bombay N.I.

13th Bombay N.I. Major M. D. Grant, wing-commander, has been appointed an officiating Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. of Division in Bombay.

25th Bombay N.I. Major J. Withers, wing-officer, has been appointed an officiating brigade major on the Staff of the Bombay Army.

25th Bombay N.I. Lieut. H. C. Powell, Royal Marines, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to the regiment on probation.

THE WIMBLEDON SCANDAL COURT-MARTIAL.

The Court reassembled on Saturday morning, being constituted as on the previous day. On the opening of the Court, the prosecutor reported to the members that that morning one of his witnesses, Serjt. Sage, had been assaulted by a person named Bartlett, formerly in the Marines, who called him into his shop and then struck him, and knocked him down, and kicked him. The President ordered the facts to be reduced to writing, and the matter referred to the civil authorities. The prosecutor said that unless the witnesses were protected they would become intimidated, and the ends of justice defeated. The matter was ordered to be brought before the civil authorities, and on Tuesday the man Bartlett was brought up before the Gosport Police magistrates, Capt. Field, R.N., and B. W. Carter, Esq., who, after hearing the evidence on both sides, expressed it as their opinion that the prosecution had taken a lenient view in only preferring a charge of common assault. If witnesses were to be subjected to such treatment while under examination, justice would be impeded. Defendant's advocate had done his best, but to their minds there was no excuse for the defendant. The law allowed a fine of £5 to be inflicted, or two months' imprisonment with hard labour. In their opinion a fine would not be a proper punishment for so serious an assault, under all the circumstances, and in their opinion it was their duty to commit the defendant to the common gaol of the county for six weeks, with hard labour.

The examination of Serjt. Sage was continued. He said he did not see Runtz after he had made arrangements with the prisoner, but saw the quartermaster-serjeant, to whom he told what he had done. He was not at the firing-point when Runtz fired, and did not see the prisoner again; he was under arrest. The cross-examination of this witness elicited nothing new, and on re-examination, the prisoner's friend asked:—How was Runtz to win the prize?—A.: By the number of points given him. I asked the prisoner, "Suppose someone beats that?" and he said, "We will take care that no one does."—The President: And Runtz was to get the points, whether he hit the target or not?—A.: Yes. Lance-Corpl. Adams, of the 1st Tower Hamlets Rifle Volunteers, was next recalled for cross-examination, and was taken over the same ground as Serjt. Sage, whose evidence on some points he contradicted. He had never made bets with Sage on the results of the shooting at Wimbledon. He also gave a different account of the position of the four in the railway-carriage during the journey from Putney to Waterloo in 1878. To the best of his recollection, the prisoner and Sage sat side by side on the same seat, and not opposite to each other, as Sage had said.

A return has been made by the Admiralty to the House of Commons giving an account of the state of ships in the programme for 1880-81, showing where built, when launched, first cost; total cost of repairs up to taking ship in hand for present repair, and cost of present repair; dates when commissioned and paid-off; stations on which employed; work done up to the present time; present condition and nature of repairs proposed now to be done (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 383, of Session 1879).

The Globe publishes the following facts regarding the Greek Navy:—"The material of which the Greek Navy as well as the mercantile marine is so largely composed, and out of which it has always been chiefly recruited, can hardly fail to be a source of embarrassment to the Greek Minister of Marine, should it be thought necessary to use a Greek fleet in Albanian waters. It is well known that nearly one-fifth of the entire population of the Greek kingdom, or 250,000 souls, are of Albanian nationality; and that not only all Attica, save Athens itself, but such districts as Salamis and Corinth, whose very names recall the days of Greek prowess on the sea, are almost monopolised by this hardy race, who, besides furnishing Greece with patient husbandmen, are the backbone of its maritime force. It is true that, in Greece proper, the Albanians have ever shown themselves an orderly as well as an industrious people; and that the men of Hydra — the birthplace of sailors — have become Hellenized to the extent of almost forgetting their own Shkipetar tongue. But for for all that, some uncertainty must surely arise in official minds in Athens as to the disposition which exists among these Albanian sailors to man Greek ships against their own nation. The system of universal service, however, is enforced for the navy as well as for the army of Greece, since a law to that effect was passed by the Boule in 1878; and, if a pinch comes, the Greeks themselves must take to sailoring, and serve the guns of the King Georgios and Queen Olga. These two corvettes, with the two iron cruisers, the Bubolina and the Midoulis, at present constitute all that is worth mentioning of the Greek Navy; for of late years it has dwindled terribly away. When the War of Independence was brought to a close, Greece could boast of a force of 32 men-of-war; but under the efforts of Capo D'Istria and Otho this navy soon crumbled away; and the system of corruption and peculation which has all along prevailed in this, as in the other spending departments, has done much to impair the efficiency of the force that was allowed to remain. Not very long ago more than half the personnel of the Navy were officers, and in Otho's time it was no uncommon thing for the captain of a man-of-war never to have been on his own quarter-deck."

INDIA.

In continuation of G.G.O. No. 1,203 of 1878, and under the authority of the Secretary of State for India, it is notified that leave out of India on medical certificate, taken by a British officer, will, on his subsequent admission to the Staff Corps, reckon as furlough already taken under Rule VI. of the Regulations of 1875. 2. Should such an officer, therefore, again require leave on medical certificate and proceed under Rule VI., he will be granted in the first instance only so much furlough as will complete the period admissible under that rule. 3. This furlough may be extended to two years on "English furlough pay," but it will rest with her Majesty's Government to determine whether any, and if so, what extension shall be granted.

A correspondent writes as follows to the Civil and Military Gazette:—"A recent Army circular published in India will press very heavily on many officers of the British Service coming under its terms. It is that all officers removed from the strength of the Indian Service will cease to draw Indian pay and allowances seven days after receipt of the order. The difference of pay is enormous. It means that an officer getting 600 rs. pe mensem would get about 200 rs. A case might happen where an officer might be far up in the north of India, and where it would be impossible to make all his arrangements to leave the country in seven days. Besides, if her leaves India without previously settling up with the Pay, Department (a by no means easy matter), he would draw no pay in England. So that we fear the above order will prove a very harsh, and, in many cases, a very unjust one to many.

Brigdr.-Gen. R. C. Stewart, half-pay, late 2nd Foot, has been posted to the Central District, on arrival in Madras to assume a brigade conmand.

In consequence of Brigdr.-Gen. Hogg being obliged to vacate his post for six months on account of ill-health, the following officiating appointments in the Bombay Army have been made:—Qrmr.-Gen., Lieut.-Col. B. H. Pottinger, R.A.; Deputy Qrmr.-Gen., Major W. B. Colvin; Assist. Qrmr.-Gen of Division, Capt. J. M. Heath. As Major Colvin is at present with the Reserve Division, Candahar Field Force, Major J. G. E. Griffiths officiates for that officer, pending his arrival at Army head-quarters. Capt. Stewart, 78th Highlanders, also officiates as a temporary measure as Deputy Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. Another appointment in the same department is gazetted. Major A. R Heyland becomes Deputy Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., Reserve Division, in the place of Capt. Melliss, who has been transferred to the Poona Division.

Lieut.-Col. Lowe, Chief Director of Transport with the Cabul Force, has propounded a scheme for establishing a permanent transport service. Col. Lowe takes a army of 36,000 of all arms with fifteen days' food as the unit to be treated, this being about the strength of a force which is likely to be mobilised in case of war breaking out, and he believes that under his system transport for such an army could be raised, at any time, in a fortnight. Taking the mule as the only transport animal in the "first line," he calculates that 70,000 mules (of which number 1,028 would be spare animals) would be required for the 36,000 men, the estimate being as follows:—

		Mules.
7,000	British Infantry	15,435
1,500	British Cavalry	6,036
2,800	Artillery and Engineers	11,267
4,000	Native Cavalry	9,900
21,000	Native Infantry	26,334
	Total	68,972
	Spare animals	1,028
	Grand total	70,000

This calculation is made on the Cabul scale of baggage, and each animal would have to carry two maunds only; allowance is made for forage and grain also being carried. The 70,000 mules required would be located in the three Presidencies, in the following proportion:—Bengal, 35,000; Bombay and Madras, 17,500 each. Regarding Northern India, it is calculated that the N.-W. Provinces would furnish 9,750, Oudh 750, and Rohilkund 2,000. The Punjab would be responsible for 27,500. The system of maintenance would be the division of all the country into a certain number of districts; as, for instance, the N.-W. Provinces into 13 and the Punjab into 20, each of which would have a fixed number of mules ready for the State when occasion might arise. Col. Lowe's explanation of the organisation he would create is so clear, that we will give his own words. He says:—"The districts would all have been numbered off in the transport books, and I will suppose I am visiting the Rawul Pindee or No. 20 district. The first village I enter might have perhaps, 15 mules, nine of which were over three and under 14 years old. To the owners of these animals I would say: Government will give you, through me, one rupee per month for each of these animals. Government does not want them now, and may never want them at all. Keep them, therefore, and use them as you have been accustomed to. All that Government asks is, that you will agree to give the use of the mules in time of war. You must bring them with their saddles, &c., arranging among yourselves that at least one man shall accompany every three mules. On Government calling for the mules, you will receive war rates of pay from that day till the animals are discharged, when they will revert to peace rates of one rupee per month. This present agreement to last 12 months, after which notice of three months on either side may end the bargain: the one proviso being that when Government has called for the service of the mules, the notice cannot be given until the mules are discharged. Meanwhile the mules must be branded with the district mark 'R 20;' and here is Rs. 36, the first quarter's payment, in advance." Col. Lowe states that from his personal knowledge, and from opinions expressed by native gentlemen, he is convinced the people would eagerly accept such a system, as it is one which they could easily understand, and is quite in keeping with their customs and traditions.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1880.

THE Duke of Wellington was at one time harassed by the importunity of an inventor who had a shot-proof dress for the British soldier in his portmanteau, and who fired away at the Commander-in-Chief with the usual persistence and effrontery of his class, whether they believe in themselves or not. One day the inventor was electrified with joy by a letter from the Horse Guards, in which he was desired to attend at 2 o'clock the next day, with his panoply. He was there to the moment, and in a minute more he was standing face to face with the Duke. "Mr. Smith," said his Grace, "I have resolved to see this invention of yours. I suppose you have got it here, and I should like to examine it, if you will be good enough to put it on." The delighted inventor opened his bag and took out the impermeable tunic, of which he was about to explain the merits, when the Duke stopped him with the remark, "Well, we can test it at once. I want to see it on you." Mr. Smith inserted himself in his shot-shattering toggery, and essayed to expatiate upon its manifold virtues, but was once more interrupted by the Field-Marshal,—"Would you be good enough, Sir, to stand with your back against that wall?" His Grace touched his bell, the A.D.C. in waiting appeared. "Send up four file of the Guard, with a few rounds of ball cartridge. I want to test a new invention." The inventor turned deadly pale. "I hope, your Grace," he gasped, "you are not going to have my idea tested in that way!—I really am not prepared for it just yet?" "Mr. Smith," said the Duke, sternly, "be off out of this at once! You have pestered me about this invention of yours for the last six months, and when I give you a chance of a fair trial, you decline it, though you are quite willing to let others be shot at in it. I shall not attend to your letters in future. Good morning." Now, we think the Duke's method might be imitated with advantage by the War Office, and especially by Sir Frederick Campbell, who is at this very time exposed to the most severe censures for his obstinate rejection of the most liberal offers ever made to any Government. To be sure, it is the War Office, and not Sir F. Campbell, which is to be blamed, because it is the War-Office authorities who have laid down certain rules with regard to the trial of inventions, the operation of which has barred the acceptance of the offers that have been made to revolutionise the whole of our Artillery, to its great advantage. Now, we think that the War Office should guard itself against imputations and hostile agitation by the most liberal attitude towards all inventors, so long as they do not ask for help from the public purse, and so long as they are willing to abandon any claim to pecuniary recompense for their trouble in being good enough to "invent." In other words, if Mr. Smith comes to the War Office and says, "I have a gun which is lighter, cheaper, and better than any gun the country possesses, and I only ask of you to try it," he should have a trial, provided always that he is not to be the judge of the results, and that he is not to make any demand whatever on the War Office for money. No Director-General of Artillery would dare to ignore an invention the merits of which were established at Woolwich or Shoeburyness, and the departure from the hard-and-fast line which has been drawn would, we think, very much strengthen the hands of the War Office, and give a quietus to the noisy people who are now posing as martyrs and baffled artillery geniuses. It may be objected to this proposal that waste of public time is waste of public money. There are some, indeed, who would say that there is too much capital invested in a certain system of ordnance, and ammunition to match, to make it worth while to sacrifice it all for some new system, which had some undoubted advantages; but we think that the country generally would be ready to pay handsomely, and to sacrifice largely, to secure such advantages. The War Office now asks for certain details to be made known to the Authorities before they accede to any proposals, warned as they have been by the legal dictum that they incur responsibilities, if they allow trials to be made of inventions which they believed to be valueless. These demands should be relaxed, for they place their representative officers in an invidious position, as long as the War Office manufacture ordnance or buy it from others; but that relaxation must be accompanied by stringent stipulations respecting the relations which are to be founded on these trials of inventions, and inventors should certainly be made to understand that the experiments are purely and entirely personal gratifications, at their own proper costs and charges. As long as an inventor can flourish a paper gun of transcendent powers before the public eye, and get Members of Parliament to believe in it, the War-Office authorities are accepting dangerous responsibility in declining to admit a practical demonstration of the fact. If the gun should turn out to be a meritorious invention, the War Office should give a fostering hand to the inventor, and should secure him the rewards of his ingenuity and labour. The country gains by such a result, and the inventor should have the benefit. On the other hand, if the trials, fairly conducted, as they must be in the national establishments, show that the inventor was mistaken, he is satisfactorily disposed of, and no one will attend to his outcries. We are old enough to remember the proposal which was made to asphyxiate the Russians at Sebastopol by an improvement of the Chinese stinkpot, and there are at this day plenty of people with devices for the destruction of navies and armies on the easiest terms. The Iron Duke's method may be found invaluable in such cases, and we are all for the free acceptance of proposals which shall involve no liability, and cost the taxpayer no money.

We are requested to state that the Military Secretary will not hold a levée until further notice.

The Duke of Cambridge has arrived at the Hôtel de Russe, Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

Lieutenant-General W. J. Smythe, Royal Artillery, who has just succeeded to the vacancy of Colonel-Commandant R.A., caused by the death of General Sir John Bloomfield, G.C.B., served in the first Kaffir war, under Sir Benjamin D'Urban. From 1842 to 1847 he was Director of the Magnetical and Meteorological Observatory established at St. Helena, at the instance of the Royal Society. In 1850 he was charged with the formation, and was the first director, of the Department of Artillery Studies, instituted for the further education of officers of Artillery. This country being unable to supply the immense quantity of arms required for the Crimean war, recourse was had to the Continental workshops, and he was appointed to superintend the manufacture of English arms at Liége and in Germany. In 1856 he was named a member of the small Commission sent to the Continent to collect information on the condition of military education in France, Germany, Austria, and Italy, preparatory to the changes about to be introduced into our own system. In 1860 he went out under the direction of the Duke of Newcastle, Secretary of State for the Colonies, to the Fiji Islands, to inquire into the advisability of annexing those islands. On promotion to the rank of full colonel, he joined his brigade (14th Field) in India, and returned with it to England in 1869. General Smythe has won for himself a deservedly high reputation in the Army for his great and varied scientific attainments, and is looked up to as one of the best officers in the Service.

A universal pattern forage-cap for hussar regiments has been approved, and the special patterns hitherto worn are to be discontinued.

We learn from Ceylon that the Royal Engineers are most actively engaged in providing efficient coast defences for the three principal ports of the colony, viz.:—Trincomalee, the Naval station and depôt; Galle, the southern coaling port; and Colombo, the capital and chief commercial port of the island. The existing defences of Trincomalee, Forts Frederick and Ostenberg, are so situated as to sweep with their fire the approaches to the harbour. The smooth-bore batteries already mounted are being supplemented by long-ranged rifled guns, mounted in protected implacements, in addition to which a torpedo service is being organised. A new battery, armed with heavy rifled guns, is in process of construction at Watering Point, to defend the approaches to Galle, while the old batteries will be armed with new ordnance. At Colombo, the existing batteries, Klippenberg, Enkhuisen, and Battenberg, will receive heavy rifled guns, and the construction of a powerful battery at Mutwal Point is contemplated.

The names of Company-Serjeant-Major A. B. Perry and Serjeant C. O. Fairbanks, from the Royal Canadian Military College at Toronto, have been submitted to the War Office to receive this year the two commissions in the Ordnance Corps, which we stated lately it had been arranged to offer annually to the successful candidates at the final examination at the Canadian Institution. Mr. Perry will be appointed to a commission in the Royal Engineers, and Mr. Fairbanks in the Royal Artillery. The result of the recent examination held at Toronto has just been made known as follows:— Company-Serjeant-Majors A. B. Perry, 42,285 marks; Y. McPherson, 39,789; J. Spelman, 35,520; H. E. Wise, 30,353; Serjeants C. O. Fairbanks, 29,562; W. M. Davis, 29,542; Corporals C. Desbrisay, 29,356; A. G. Wurtele, 28,077; Serjeant J. Cochrane, 27,257; Corporal H. C. Freer, 26,896; Battalion-Serjeant-Major H. W. Keefer, 25,710; Serjeant V. Rivers, 24,320; Corporal F. Dixon, 20,022; Serjeant F. Davis, 17,510; Corporal T. Reid, 8,904. Serjeant-Majors Spelman (Ottawa) and Keefer (Ottawa) have been appointed lieutenants in the local Militia. Colonel Hewett states that had there been a greater number of commissions available for the Royal Engineers, he would have felt justified, as an Engineer officer himself, in recommending for that distinction the first four on the list of graduates. Company Serjeant-Majors Wise and Corporal Freer will, however, receive the offer of Line commissions, in accordance with the arrangement entered into with the War Office. Of the eighteen cadets who joined the College in June, 1876, and who might have graduated, eleven have obtained first-class certificates, five took second-class certificates, one withdrew voluntarily, and three failed to qualify at some period of their course. The graduates who are respectively first and second on the list are representatives of the great source of wealth of the Dominion, agriculture. In the words of the Canadian Minister of Militia, "Mr. Perry bears a name which is highly honoured in Ontario, and particularly in Lennox and Addington, and which belonged to a family of marked ability in connection with the history of Ontario."

Major-General R. P. Radcliffe, R.A., relieves Lieutenant-General A. T. Phillpotts in the Inspector-Generalship of Royal Artillery, with effect from the 1st prox., from which date it is proposed that Colonel C. G. Arbuthnot, R.A., should take over the duties of Deputy-Adjutant-General of Royal Artillery at head-quarters. Colonel Arbuthnot's appointment has given great satisfaction throughout the Royal regiment, for it is recognised as a fitting acknowledgment of the services lately rendered by him in Afghanistan, where he has commanded a brigade in the field with marked ability.

It is hoped by the Government that Lieutenant-General Sir John Adye, the Surveyor-General of Ordnance, may succeed in obtaining a seat before the reassembly of Parliament for the Session of 1881, so that they may have the advantage of his support in carrying through the important measures of Army reform which Mr. Childers has in view, based upon the report of Lord Airey's Committee.

The reports as to the early retirement of Major-General Conolly from the Military Attachéship at Paris are, we understand, well founded. It is not unlikely that his successor will be an officer well and favourably known in connection with services recently performed in connection with the Horse Guards.

We are glad to learn that, thanks to the unremitting zeal of the present Principal Veterinary Surgeon, representations have been made in high quarters which, it is hoped, will have the effect of removing the anomaly by which the members of the Veterinary Department are denied the privilege granted to all other departments of the Army, of being officially recognised at Court.

It is rarely that any disturbances have occurred or been apprehended in Ireland without a battalion of Marines being employed. During the Repeal movement and O'Connell trials, a strong battalion was sent over in 1843 and remained until the end of 1845, shortly to be succeeded by another at the time of the potato famine in 1847-48. The Fenian movement again called for a battalion in the spring of 1867, and another was sent at the end of that year or beginning of 1868. The head-quarters of these battalions have, as a rule, been Spike Island in Cork Harbour, but companies have been detached as far as Pigeon House Fort, Dublin, to Waterford, Youghal, Kinsale, &c., besides to the forts at the entrance to Cork Harbour.

We learn from Constantinople that Captain L. V. Swaine, Rifle Brigade, Military Attaché, has proceeded to Salonica and Athens, on duty, to ascertain the number and disposition of the Greek and Turkish troops in those provinces.

Lieutenant-Colonel P. D. Boyle, Grenadier Guards, has been selected for the appointment of Military Secretary to General Sir Thomas Steele, K.C.B., in Ireland.

Major-General Higginson, Lieutenant-Colonel Stewart, 3rd Dragoon Guards, Captain Brooke, 15th Foot, and Lieutenant Roch, R.H.A., will represent our army at the French military manœuvres next month.

The War Office has ordered 90 one-inch Nordenfelt machine-guns to be supplied without delay.

Lord Colin Campbell, M.P., private secretary to the Right Hon. G. J. Goschen, returned to Constantinople from Athens on the 9th inst., where he had been for some weeks working at the Legation. Lord Colin has been relieved at Athens by Mr. G. Bland, one of the secretaries of the Constantinople Embassy.

The appointment of Musketry-Instructor at Malta should shortly be made, the present officer, Lieutenant Littledale, having completed his three years on the 11th inst. Rumour gives the appointment to Lieutenant Charles W. Dickenson (1872), now serving in H.M.S. Rupert, paying off. As this officer took a first-class certificate in gunnery, and has served on the staff of H.M.S. Cambridge, there is good reason to suppose he is likely to obtain the appointment.

We understand that a memorial has been presented by the officers of the Army Pay Department to the Secretary of State for War, praying that the Department may be placed on an equal footing, as regards rank, pay, and pension, with the other departments of the Army. We trust the Secretary of State will accede to the moderate wishes of this deserving body of officers.

General Sir Thomas Steele, K.C.B., lately commanding the Division at Aldershot, has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the troops in Ireland, vice General Sir John Michel, C.B., from October 9 next.

A telegram was received yesterday at the India Office from the Viceroy of India, dated August 20, stating that General Hughes's brigade arrived at Fort Battye, on the 19th, with head-quarters, all well.

The War Office has been advised to provide for the promotion of Veterinary-Surgeon B. L. Glover, R.A., whose services at the Cape lately have been so highly commended. We shall hope to learn shortly that the difficulties which stand in the way of Mr. Glover's promotion have been overcome, for it is nothing short of a disgrace to our military administration that, whilst all other Departments have been recognised, the members of the Veterinary Staff should be denied even so small a measure of justice.

Deputy-Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets—John Cotton, M.D., to Plymouth Hospital, vice M'Shane, retired.

Fleet Surgeons—A. Turnbull, M.D., to the Bacchante; G. Maclean, to the Duke of Wellington, additional for Haslar Hospital, for temporary service.

Staff Surgeons—C. Strickland, to the Himalaya; W. H. Steward, to the Cleopatra, when commissioned, to date Aug. 24; Robert Grant and Thos. L. Horner to the Duke of Wellington (additional in lieu of a surgeon), to date Aug. 24; Robert Turner, to the Duke of Wellington, for Victory, to date Aug. 24; Thos. S. Burnett, to the Valiant.

Assistant-Paymasters—G. W. H. Maggs, to the Inconstant; R. B. Marwood, to the Cleopatra; Henry Dawson, to the Belleisle.

Surgeons—Jephson J. Connell, to the Cleopatra, when commissioned, to date Aug. 24; M. F. Ryan, to the Valiant, to date Aug. 24; George M. Cuffe, to Haslar Hospital, to date Aug. 24.

Engineers—Charles J. Cock and John R. D. Johnson, to the Cleopatra, when commissioned, to date Aug. 24.

Assistant-Engineers—J. S. Watch, to the Indus; Edwin K. Odam, to the Cleopatra, when commissioned, to date Aug. 24.

Clerk—H. A. Dyer, to the Inconstant.

Assistant-Clerks—G. Grant and J. Murray, to the Inconstant; P. C. Cooke, to the Cleopatra.

Boatswain—John Westrope, to the Warrior.

COASTGUARD.

Agincourt. Capt. Elibank Harley Murray, who is appointed to the command of this ship, vice Buller, to the Cambridge, entered the Navy in 1847, and served as mate in the Arethusa, Capt. J. M. C. Symonds, in the Mediterranean, from Nov. 1852 until promoted to lieut., Sept. 2, 1854. On the 16th of the same month he was appointed to the Hornet, Com. Charles C. Forsyth, fitting for the East Indies; and on April 4, 1855, removed into the Spartan, Capt. Sir Wm. Hoste, Bart., and remained until the close of 1857. On March 31, 1858, he was appointed to the Agamemnon, Capt. G. W. Preedy, fitting for particular service, and on Sept. 3, 1858, was transferred to the Royal Albert, Capts. E. B. Rice and H. J. Lacon, and served under the flag of Rear-Admiral R. F. Stopford, capt. of the Fleet, with the Channel Squadron, until Jan. 1861, when he joined the Princess Royal, Capt. Chas. Fellowes, flagship of Rear-Admiral Robert Smart, K.H., also with the Channel Squadron; and on May 1 following was transferred to the Revenge, fitting for the Mediterranean, and remained until promoted to commander Feb. 16, 1864. He subsequently served as second captain in the Achilles, Capt. E. W. Vansittart, C.B., with the Channel Squadron from Dec. 17, 1864, until paid off in Oct. 1868, and on Aug. 25, 1869, was appointed to the command of the Virago, in Australia, and was posted from that ship Aug. 9, 1870. He afterwards commanded the Sapphire, and was again employed in Australia from Aug. 1875 until paid off July 9, 1879.

Alberta, Staff Capt. Alfred Balliston, crossed over from Osborne on Monday with Princess Beatrice, and embarked the Empress Eugénie for Osborne.

Alexandra, Capt. Lord Walter T. Kerr, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir F. Beauchamp P. Seymour, K.C.B., with the Mediterranean Squadron, left Villefranche on July 27 for Hyères, Barcelona, Malaga, and Gibraltar. By last advices they were at Palermo. Accounts from the Squadron all concur in describing the Commander-in-Chief as fully maintaining the dignity of the British Navy at the foreign ports visited by the Squadron.

Antelope, Lieut. and Com. the Hon. Walter Hylton Jolliffe, is stationed at Therapia, in attendance on his Excellency the Right Hon. G. J. Goschen, Special Ambassador to the Sublime Porte.

Audacious, Capt. H. W. Woollcombe, arrived at Sheerness on Saturday from her cruise with the Combined Squadron.

Bacchante, Capt. Lord C. T. M. D. Scott, has relieved the Belleisle at Cowes, as guardship, and will remain there until her Majesty leaves Osborne.

Belleisle, Capt. Barnardiston, proceeded from Cowes into Portsmouth Harbour on Saturday, and sailed on Monday for Ireland.

Cambridge. Capt. Alexander Buller, C.B., who is appointed to the command of this ship, vice Capt. Thos. Le Hunte Ward, whose period of service has expired, entered the Navy in 1848, and was acting mate in the Star, on the south-east coast of America, from Feb. 6, 1854, until the first of the following July, when he was transferred to the Royal Albert, in the Mediterranean, and on April 10, 1855, was promoted to lieut. On the 9th of the following month he removed into the Princess Royal, Capt. Lewis T. Jones, C.B., also in the Mediterranean; and on July 31, 1856, was again transferred to the Royal Albert, flag-ship, in the Mediterranean, of Vice-Admiral the Right Hon. Edmund, Lord Lyons, G.C.B., and was paid off in Aug., 1858. On Feb. 5, 1859, he was appointed to the Excellent, Capt. R. E. Hewlett, C.B., and on July 7 was transferred to the Donegal, Capt. W. F. Glanville, at Liverpool, and afterwards attached to the Channel Squadron, where he remained, until transferred Feb. 8, 1860, to the Forte, flag-ship of Rear-Admiral Hon. Sir Henry Keppel, K.C.B. On April 28 following he was appointed flag-lieutenant to Vice-Admiral W. F. Martin in the Mediterranean, in the Marlborough, and remained until Nov. 30. On May 21, 1861, he was appointed to the Edgar, Capt. G. P. Mends, flagship of the Channel Squadron of Rear-Admiral John E. Erskine, afterwards flagship on the North-American and West India stations of Rear-Admiral S. C. Dacres, C.B., in which ship he returned to England, and was paid off in July, 1862. He was appointed additional of the Excellent, under his former captain, Feb. 28, 1863, and on June 10 of the same year was promoted to commander. On Feb. 11, 1864, he was appointed commander of the Princess Royal, Capt. W. G. Jones, fitting at Devonport for the flag of Rear-Admiral George St. V. King, C.B., on the East Indies and China station, and returned to England, and was paid off Aug. 14, 1867. He was commander of the Royal Adelaide, Capt. G. W. Preedy, C.B., flagship at Devonport of Admiral Sir W. F. Martin, Bart., K.C.B., from March 23, 1868, until posted Dec. 10, 1869; and on Dec. 11, 1874, obtained command of the Modeste, screw corvette, in China, which he commanded until Jan. 16, 1878. He has commanded the Agincourt, under the flags of Rear-Admirals Henry Boys, C. L. Waddilove, and L. E. H. Somerset, with the Channel Squadron, since Dec. 14, 1878.

Cherub, Com. Arthur J. Fullerton, arrived at Sheerness on Monday morning.

Cleopatra will be commissioned on the 24th inst. by Capt. F. Durrant, and will have a complement of 245 officers and men. She is intended for service with the Detached Squadron.

Condor, Com. E. F. Day, arrived at Malta from Villefranche and Bastia on the 2nd inst., to pay off and be recommissioned by Capt. F. W. Egerton. The new crew for the Condor are expected in the Tamar about the 18th inst.

Coquette left Malta on Aug. 6 to join the flag of the Commander-in-Chief at Palermo. Sub-Lieut. E. H. Blair, appointed to the Alexandra, left by her.

Decoy, Lieut.-Com. Von Donop, was to leave Cape Coast Castle about July 10 with the Dido and the Flirt for Accra, proceeding thence with the Dido to Fernando Po.

Dido, Capt. Compton E. Domville, arrived at Cape Coast Castle on July 7, and will sail shortly with the Flirt and Decoy for Accra, whence she would proceed with the latter to Fernando Po.

Dwarf, Com. W. H. St. Clair, was to leave the West Coast for the Cape of Good Hope on July 9.

Elfin, Staff Com. W. B. Goldsmith, was run into on Wednesday by one of the steamers plying between Cowes and Southampton, while the latter was in the act of backing out from the Cowes pier. Whether the accident happened owing to some of the machinery being temporarily disabled is uncertain. Fortunately very little damage was done, but the passengers on board the company's boat were much frightened.

Encounter, Capt. the Hon. A. D. S. Denison, has been startling the good people of Shanghai out of their right senses, if we are to believe the statement of the North China Herald, that:—"Those who happened to be in the neighbourhood of the Bund on the morning of June 28 were aroused to a state of unusual animation by what appeared to be the shock of an earthquake, while those on board vessels in the harbour stated that the sensation was 'just as if the ship was going to take a leap out of the water.' It was not, however, an earthquake, but merely the concussion from the explosion of a comparatively small torpedo, lowered into the water from the swinging-boom of H.M.S. Encounter, and fired by one of the officers, as we are informed, for instruction. We are not aware that any damage was done, but the sensation occasioned will doubtless result in the prohibition of similar experiments in the harbour for the future."

Euphrates, Capt. Henry Hand, passed Gibraltar on Aug. 14 on her way to Malta. "The Euphrates will, it is believed, remain at Bombay, after landing the troops she is taking from England and the Mediterranean, until about Oct. 26, when it would have been her turn, in the ordinary routine of the trooping programme, to have embarked for Portsmouth the Indian reliefs of the season 1880-81."—Hampshire Telegraph. She arrived at Malta on Wednesday morning, and proceeded for Bombay on Thursday evening with the 98th and part of the 61st Regiments.

Falcon, Com. Bouverie F. Clark, left Constantinople on Aug. 10, for Malta, to join the flag. Lieut. W. L. Morrison, of this ship, has been appointed to the command of the Helicon, vice Sir Baldwin Walker, Bart., promoted, but is at present in the Consular Hospital, Constantinople, suffering from a severe attack of rheumatism, so bad that it is feared he will be unable to take up his present appointment, and will have to proceed to England, invalided.

Fawn, Capt. W. J. L. Wharton, left Constantinople on Aug. 8, to resume her survey of the Dardanelles, which it is expected will be finished by the 25th inst., when the Fawn will return to Constantinople for coal, to give leave, &c., and thence proceed to Malta, en route for England, to pay off. She was commissioned on June 1, 1876, so will be considerably over four years in commission before paying off, and will not undertake the survey of the Gulf of Xeros, in consequence of the length of time in commission and the present disturbed state of Turkey.

Flirt, Com. Brackenbury, C.M.G., was to leave Cape Coast Castle about July 10, with the Dido and Decoy, for Accra, where she will remain.

Gannet, Com. E. G. Bourke. "The ratings which are being sent out to the Pacific to fill existing vacancies will, I hear, be given a passage in the Gannet, which will pick them up at Panama and take them to the Sandwich Islands, where the flagship expects to be about the time these ratings become due. It is to be hoped that the number of supernumeraries to be drafted is not great, for it will be rather cramped work on board the Gannet, provided she has her full complement."—Hampshire Telegraph.

Garnet, Capt. Loftus F. Jones, was, by last accounts, off Buenos Ayres, having in company the Forward and Elk. The Swallow had been despatched to Monte Video with mails, but would return to Buenos Ayres.

Hellespont, Lieut. Adolphus F. Turner, left Larnaca in June to make a tour of the island in connection with the sponge fisheries, which are principally situated on the northern coast, and 28 boats were boarded between Morphou Bay and Kyrenia. With 3 exceptions every boat was provided with the necessary licence. The 3 boats without licences were towed to Kyrenia on July 10 to await trial. The cost of a licence for dredging boats is £8 10s., and for boats with diving apparatus, £25. The sponge-fishers are principally natives of the Greek islands. Strange to say, no Cypriotes appear to take part in this lucrative industry.

Hibernia, Com. Sir Francis Blackwood, Bart., bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral John D. M'Crea. Mr. W. H. Martin, secretary, has been appointed paymaster of this ship, vice Mr. V. D. Rickcord, time-expired.

Himalaya, Capt. Brent, sailed on Sunday at noon for Bombay, with reinforcements for Afghanistan, her orders being to call at Malta, Port Said, and Suez. Many people assembled on Southsea Beach and on the three piers to witness her departure, but there was no excitement.

Inflexible, whose completion has been so long looked forward to, will have her whole armament awaiting her before she is out of dock. The first of her 80-ton guns is ready for shipment under the shears at Portsmouth, and the second left Woolwich Arsenal on Wednesday afternoon in the steamship Stanley. These two will occupy the after-turret of the Inflexible, and the roof of the turret has been taken off ready to admit them. The other pair for the fore-turret will prebably follow next week.

Iris, Capt. Seymour, left Malta on Aug. 4 for Palermo, to join the flag of the Commander-in-Chief. Sub-Lieut. Mustapha Bey, for the Alexandra, and Mr. Holloway, chief engineer for the Monarch, took passage in this vessel. "There has been a good deal of sickness in the Iris, but I fancy it is only the usual thing one expects in a ship newly arrived from England, It is the fruit season in the Mediterranean, and the men gorge themselves with half-ripe plums and peaches. A small hatchway has been cut over the Iris's galley, but it has not, I am told, done much to reduce the heat of which everyone on board complains. I believe the Admiralty have approved of the galley being moved on deck as soon as the Service admits. This appears rather vague. In another two months the weather becomes cool and pleasant, and as it appears quite necessary that this alteration in the Iris should take place, the Service could very well admit of its being done now, when the benefit of the alteration would be felt."—Western Morning News.

Kingfisher was handed over by the dockyard authorities at Sheerness on Monday morning to the Medway Steam Reserve officials, previous to being commissioned by Com. R. H. Thornton. The whole of the examining staff expressed themselves as being highly delighted with the manner in which the ship has been built and fitted. She was commissioned on Aug. 17.

Lively, Lieut. and Com. Le Strange, left Plymouth on Thursday last with Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, K.G., for Cowes, and on Saturday proceeded into Portsmouth Harbour to enable his Royal Highness to attend the naval and military athletic sports, returning to Cowes in the evening. [She landed the Duke of Edinburgh at Dover, and proceeded to Sheerness, where she arrived on Wednesday.

Mercury. Capt. Gordon, of the Vernon, made an inspection of the torpedo gear of the Mercury at Portsmouth on Tuesday. The Mercury is a sister-ship of the Iris, now in the Mediterranean, and during the torpedo trials of the latter at Spithead, it was found that whenever the large ports, which are only 5 ft. above the water-line, were opened for practice, the sea entered in large quantities. In order to rectify this defect, small ports have been cut in the flaps of the large torpedo ports in the Mercury, and have been made perfectly water-tight by a canvas-bag arrangement, which collapses and expands as the impulse tube is trained forward or aft. The tube, the carriage, and the trolly were all tested, with satisfactory results. The new fitting admitted of easy elevation and depression, and as the small port allowed of a training forward of 37 deg. and aft. of 13 deg., it will answer all practical requirements, and will be adopted by the Iris.

Miranda, Com. the Hon. E. S. Dawson, returned on Saturday from her week's experimental cruise, which was satisfactory. She will leave for the Australian station after making good a few defects which became apparent during the cruise.

Penelope, Capt. H. F. Nicholson, left Portsmouth on Tuesday for Sheerness. She passed Dungeness on Wednesday morning between eight and nine o'clock, towing a barque, which had lost bowsprit and headgear, and had apparently been in collision.

Raleigh, Capt. Charles T. Jago, has been ordered to call at the Falkland Islands on her passage home from New Zealand.

Rambler, screw composite gun-vessel, 774 tons, 750 horse-power, carrying 3 guns, lately built by Messrs. J. Elder and Co., at Glasgow, was out for a six hours' run of her engines and machinery on the measured mile at the Maplin Sands on Monday morning. With the exception of a few very slight defects, the engines and all connected with them were found to answer very satisfactorily. The Rambler is to be docked and brought forward for sea at Sheerness.

Rupert, Capt. E. J. Pollard, arrived at Malta on the 5th inst. from Hyères, and was inspected by Admiral M'Crea. She has left for England to pay off.

Spartan, Capt. Richard R. Tracey, is being dismantled, and the stores are being returned to the dockyard authorities at Sheerness. It is understood that the Spartan, which has been absent from England for four years on the East Indies station, will be paid off this day.

Tamar, Capt. T. H. Royse. The paid-off crew of the Condor, which will be brought home by the Tamar, will be landed at Devonport, where the ship was commissioned in July, 1877. The Tamar also brings home the families of the 24th Regt. from Gibraltar, and these will be landed at Portsmouth, together with a number of invalids and time-expired men from Malta.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Téméraire, Capt. the Hon. Walter C. Carpenter, arrived at Malta on Aug. 9 to coal, and would rejoin the flag.

Thunderer, Capt. Philip Colomb, arrived at Malta on Aug. 9 to coal, and would rejoin the flag.

Torch, Com. W. H. C. Selby, arrived at Constantinople on Aug. 13, taking the place of the Falcon, gone to Malta, and will probably remain there some months, doing the duty of senior officer.

Tourmaline, Capt. R. P. Dennistoun. "The decision for the Tourmaline to return to England was rather a sudden one, I believe, the order having been received at Jamaica by telegraph. Her officers and crew will not be sorry to come home, for the Tourmaline has not had a very successful commission, and has lost several of her officers. She was commissioned at Sheerness in October, 1876, but she did not finally leave England until January, 1878, her commission having been rather broken up by her return to England."—Hampshire Telegraph.

Triumph, Capt. A. H. Markham, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Stirling, was at Esquimault on July 10, but would leave early in October.

Turquoise, Capt. M. B. Medlycott, was under orders to proceed to the Society Isles.

Tyne, Com. John E. Stokes, arrived at Simon's Bay on Aug. 6.

Valiant, Capt. W. C. Chapman, steamed into harbour from the Sound on Saturday to have defects made good.

Wolverene, Comdre. J. C. Wilson. Lloyd's agent at Fiji telegraphed on Aug. 16 from Auckland, New Zealand, that the Wolverene struck on sunken rocks during thick and foggy weather, and has put into Fiji leaky, where repairs can be performed.

PORTSMOUTH NAVAL AND MILITARY SPORTS.

On Saturday last, at one o'clock, the royal yacht Osborne was sighted on her way from Cowes, and the Commander-in-Chief, Admiral A. P. Ryder, attended by Flag-Lieut. Gough and Capt. Wells, Superintendent of the Steam Reserve, and his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, General commanding the Southern District, attended by Capt. Lord Albert Seymour and Capt. the Hon. C. Byng, aides-de-camp, Col. the Hon. J. Dormer, A.Q.M.G., and Col. Bray, A.A.G., and Admiral Superintendent the Hon. F. A. Foley, assembled on the boathouse jetty to welcome the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh, who were accompanied by Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales and the Princesses Louisa, Victoria, and Maud. The Royal visitors having expressed a desire to see the 80-ton gun of the turret-ship Inflexible, which had just arrived from Woolwich, they were accordingly conveyed in a saloon carriage out to the extensive works where the monster weapon lay underneath the sheers, by means of which it had, only a few minutes before, been unshipped from the steamer. Under the direction of the Hon. F. A. Foley, the gun was raised a few feet, pointed in different directions so that their Royal Highnesses might understand the method applied for the transference of the weapon from the steamer to inside the Inflexible's turret. Afterwards the Royal party went to Admiralty House, where they were entertained at luncheon by the Commander-in-Chief. Thence they drove to the garrison recreation-ground, arriving there shortly after four o'clock, and being received with cheers from thousands of spectators. Among the principal visitors gathered in the enclosure were the Earl and Countess Wilton, Lord and Lady Gosford, Lord Henry Lennox, Lord and Lady Charles Beresford, Sir Dighton Probyn, Mr. and Mrs. Cornwallis West. The programme was a diversified one, including feats of horsemanship by officers and troopers of the 16th Lancers, and the Royal party manifested the utmost interest in the several competitions. Shortly before six o'clock, the Princess of Wales presented the prizes to the successful competitors, the Royal party leaving the ground soon afterwards amid further hearty cheers. The Prince and Princess of Wales returned to Cowes in the Osborne, and the Duke of Edinburgh in the Lively.

Referring to the part taken in these sports by Lieut. Victor Balck and the Swedish officers and gentlemen of the Stockholm Gymnastic and Fencing Club, the Portsmouth Times says:—"The Swedish athletes, who arrived in the course of the afternoon, were accoutred in a light suit resembling in make that worn by sailors in summer, but composed of white linen, having blue braiding, with the addition of a blue silk cap, with poke, edged with black velvet, and of a blue sash round the waist. Five pairs of them first went through exercises with foils, their actions being characterised by precision and the utmost expertness, while they manifested equal skilfulness with both the right and the left hand. Twelve of them followed with broad swords, no guards being worn, although the rapidity with which thrusts were made seemed to be attended with no slight degree of danger. A duel with foils was the next item, and face-guards were worn, not without justification, as the progress of the engagement plainly demonstrated. A couple next fought with cutlasses, although their only protection were gloves, and subsequently there was an engagement between two others, the one using a sword against the rifle of the other, and both exhibited remarkable mastery over their weapons, although the advantage seemed to be decidedly in favour of the one wielding the larger weapon, notwithstanding all the agility and manual skill of his opponent. Afterwards there was an interesting struggle between foil and dagger, and later on they went through their extension drill, which is taught in all the Swedish schools, and has been aptly described as consisting of quaint but pretty and salutary manœuvres. After exercising on the horizontal bar, they executed some movements illustrating their proficiency in a fantastic kind of drill, in the course of which they turn somersaults out of line and back into line. Their jumping capabilities received striking exemplification. Without a spring-board they vaulted with great ease, and with skilful turns of the body, over a hobby-horse, 4 ft. 9 in. high, on which first one, then two, and afterwards three of their comrades sat astride, while the remainder leaped over them. Their several feats elicited rounds of applause, and after leaving the ground they were drawn up in double line in front of his Serene Highness, who complimented them upon their general proficiency, and was in turn cheered by them after their national fashion."

Concerning the aquatic performance at the Clarence Esplanade Pier, the same journal gives the following graphic report, which we have much pleasure in reproducing:—"The members of the Stockholm Club who occupy the highest positions for proficiency are Mr. Ullstedt, Mr. Stavenow, and Mr. Pahlman, but of one and all, the party numbering about 40, it can be said that they performed their various feats with a degree of intrepidity and skill that elicited the admiration and astonishment of the spectators. They took to strange water without the least hesitation and battled manfully against the tide, which was running strongly. The diving from the highest level, the most remarkable item of the whole programme, was executed in various ways, some taking the 'header' from the 'giddy height' in a sitting position, and others running to the end of the platform, the feat demanding great muscular strength, coolness, and self-possession. The vaulting and somersaults performed en route from the different stages to the water evoked frequent outbursts of applause, as did also the horizontal and vertical floating and distance diving. The feat of undressing and dressing in the water was performed with marvellous facility, having regard to the strength of the current; and the exhibition of life-saving, while it was, deservedly, much applauded, was not without an incident that caused some fun. Two of the Swedish athletes put off in a skiff, which, from the apparent lubberliness of its occupants, "turned turtle." One man was supposed not to be able to swim, and his companion, seizing him, made his way for the harbour end of the pier, a distance of some 200 yards, holding the apparently drowning man by one hand while he occasionally used the other, and, considering his incumbrance, reached terra firma in a short time. At the outset a waterman, taking the aquatic farce for a reality, put off in hot haste to the help of the immersed men, and it was only the shouts of laughter which arose on all sides that caused the man in the wherry to see that his energetic spurt was misplaced. The Swedish system of ordinary swimming was exemplified, and in the combined dive one member had another head downwards, with his arms round his thighs, his legs encircling his neck, and, thus encumbered, he went off a stage some 28 ft. from the water, performing a backward somersault during the descent. Finally, 11 members dived from the different stages at the same time, and the demonstration was at an end."

THE ITALIAN 100-TON GUN.

The recent experiments carried out at Spezia with Gen. Rosset's 100-ton cast-iron gun have demonstrated that the object of the inventor has been fully attained. To protect the Italian coast efficiently at the smallest expense possible has been a difficult problem to solve, but armed with 100-ton guns, costing under 180,000 fr. each, the harbours of Italy may be deemed secure. It is undeniably certain that the grand ideas of Gen. Rosset may be retarded, either through the interference of others, or through financial restrictions imposed by the state and condition of the country; but the grandeur of the young General's idea is there, and it is an idea worthy of the land of Cæsar, for these trials have, perhaps, initiated a new era in its history, an era during which Italians hope that "L'Italia fara da se!" Be that as it may, the following particulars relating to the gun and its trial, for which we are indebted to the kind forethought of Gen. Albini, will be read with curiosity by most of our readers. The principal dimensions of the gun are as follows:—Diameter of the bore, 18 in.; ditto of the chamber for projectile, $18\frac{2}{3}$ in.; ditto of the chamber for powder, $18\frac{4}{5}$ in.; total length of the bore, 31 ft. 4 in.; ditto of the rifled part, 24 ft. $2\frac{1}{2}$ in.; ditto of the rifled bore from base of the projectile, 25 ft. 10 in.; ditto from base of projectile to breech end, 7 ft. 6 in.; first combustion-space, 10 ft. 1 in.; total volume of the bore, 54 ft. 4 in.; maximum diameter of the breech, 6 ft. $2\frac{1}{2}$ in.; total length of the gun, 33 ft. 4 in.; ditto of the first hoop, 15 ft.; ditto of the second hoop, 13 ft. 10 in.; ditto of the third hoop, 11 ft. $8\frac{3}{4}$ in.; size of hoops of the internal stratum, 4 in.; ditto of the middle stratum, $4\frac{2}{3}$ in.; ditto of the external stratum, $5\frac{2}{5}$ in.; diameter of trunnions, 16 in.; weight of the first hoop, 13 tons 2 cwt. 0 qrs. 8 lb.; ditto of the second hoop, 17 tons 8 cwt. 3 qrs. 1 lb.; ditto of the third hoop, 20 tons; ditto of the breech-piece, 16 cwt. 3 qrs.; total weight of the gun, 99 tons, 1 cwt. 1 qr. 4 lb. Experiments at Spezia from June 28 to July 6, 1880.—Committee—Artillery and Engineer Generals. President—Lieut.-Gen. Cerroti. Members—Generals Martini, Rolandi, Nagle, Bozzani, with staff. French, Austrian, and German delegates, assisted by special envoys from Prussia and France (Mons. de Belle-isle, of the Toulon foundry; Mons. Haas, Krupp, Essen, Prussia); there were also attachés from all the Embassies at Rome. These trials and experiments have had a distinct object in view, viz.,—to obtain data to establish the tables and scale of firing, as well as the velocity at the commencement and termination of firing, at four different ranges, as follows:—June 28th—Three rounds, charge 450 lb. powder; projectile, 1 ton. Result—Initial velocity (average), 450m.; atmospheric pressure (average), 1,680. The trials were continued at a floating target anchored at sea, at about 2,000m. June 30—Five rounds at an elevation of 2° 51′. Four rounds at same elevation, found grouped in rectangle (horizontal), 18 metres long, 5.90 breadth. Time between firing, six minutes (average). July 2—Five rounds at an elevation of 6° 42′, target, 4,000 metres; longitudinal deviation (écart), 57m.; lateral, 13m. July 4—10 rounds at 5,755 metres, in two series, 5 rounds each: 1st series, elevation 10° at 5,711m., found grouped in a rectangle of 38m. (33m. long, 8 70 breadth); 2nd series, elevation 15°, at 7,745m., found grouped in a rectangle of 61m. (9 30 breadth). July 6—Three rounds, for the purpose of terminating, by noting the velocity once more. Result—Initial velocity, 451 (average); atmospheric pressure, 1,798 (average); recoil all the time, 1m. 70. The gun itself is of cast-iron (from the Government foundry, Turin); the rings are of cast-steel; cost, 180,000 francs Italian, say 170,000 francs gold; the projectile costs from 600 to 700 lire. The gun was served by the service company of Artillery, stationed at the fortress, who did so for the first time.

BREVET PROMOTION.

"B." writes:—"The Queen's Birthday gazette of 1873 did simple justice to a large number of officers of long service, and was most gratefully received by them. By that gazette all captains who, on July 5, 1872, had served twelve years in that rank, were promoted brevet majors, dating promotion July 5, 1872. Of the officers so promoted, about thirty remain heading the list of Army majors; over twenty years have elapsed since any of these officers attained the rank of captain. In almost every gazette majors of R.A. and R.E. supersede them, and their promotion at once would only be completing the Queen's Birthday gazette of 1873. I would ask to be permitted to make a suggestion which, if adopted, would, I feel convinced, do much to allay the anxiety and soreness of feeling now obtaining, owing to the anticipated cessation of brevet promotion (except for field service):—Promote the majors I have referred to above, and promote all captains who on July 5, 1880, had served twelve years in that rank, dating the gazettes July 5, 1880. The cost would be nil, and the gratitude and good feeling engendered by the gazette of July 5, 1872, would be renewed by a knowledge that justice had been done."

OFFICERS' WIDOWS.

"Electing Pension" writes:—"About 20 years ago, I entered the Army, and as I am a poor man, and had no prospect of being able to purchase, I intended to make soldiering the profession of my life. A few years ago I married, and was assured by the Warrants then in force that a pension would, on my death, be given to my widow and a compassionate allowance to my children. Since then, our regulations have been entirely reconstructed, and in a short time, from no fault of mine, I shall be forced to quit the Service, at the age of 40. A cruel choice is left to me. If I elect to go on half-pay, I ensure a pension to those I shall leave behind me, but during my lifetime shall have only £127 per annum wherewith to support myself and family, and can have no hope of further military employment. On the other hand, should I be tempted to prefer the comparative wealth of a pension of £200, I know that, on my death, nothing but beggary awaits my family, for, from such a pittance, how can one save enough to pay the premium of a policy of insurance? A short time ago we were told by high authority that under the new system no one would be worse off than he was under the former Regulations; but facts show that officers are much worse off, and poor officers very much worse off. They are cut off from the profession of their lives, and are debarred from serving to qualify for promotion, and the increase of pay consequent thereon; but must either starve on £127 or accept the pension of £200, and thereby forfeit all claims to allowances for their widows and orphans."

OBSOLETE IRONCLADS.

SIR,—The long and what are generally termed obsolete ships of the Navy have lately attracted much attention, and several articles have been written strongly condemning the proposed alterations to the Agincourt and Minotaur on the ground of expense, arguing that changing the rig of their sister-ship, the Northumberland, to that of a barque cost many thousands of pounds—money said to have been entirely thrown away on such an old-fashioned ship. Now, the statement that this was such an expensive business can hardly be correct, as the alteration in rig was made by taking out the second and fourth masts, and leaving the three others in their former places, thus lightening the top hamper, and much reducing the surface exposed when steaming head-to-wind, thereby making the Northumberland a much more handy ship. The hulls of these ironclads have been found on examination to be in as good a state as on the day on which they were launched; and now that guns have become so enormously heavy that unless a ship has some 12 in. of solid iron on her sides, she cannot be expected to be impenetrable, to heavy shot, it makes but little difference whether the thickness of armour be 4½ in. or 8 in. thick, as the thinner iron is quite sufficient to break up shell. The radical mistake in ships of the Swiftsure and Invincible class was not made in these ships. Their watertight bulkheads go up to their main decks, six or seven feet above the water-line, and prevent the same misfortune occurring to them which caused the Vanguard to sink in so short a time, the water, after filling one compartment, flowing over the combings, and swamping the ship in a few minutes. The bulkheads in these so-called obsolete ships are numerous, and the principle of sub-division is carried out to a very large extent, and might be much improved at a small expense by carrying the double bottom—which in the Achilles only extends about twelve feet on each side of the keel and as far forward and aft as the armoured bulkhead—up on each side until it meets the wings, thus covering a vital part open to the attack of the Whitehead torpedo. Before the armoured bulkhead and below the flat deck, an iron deck fitted with watertight hatches is placed, and effectually prevents water from entering the upper part of the compartment when an injury happens to the keel or bottom of the ship. It only requires watertight hatches to be fitted to the hatchways in the flat deck to make this system of sub-division perfect and a ship of this class practically unsinkable when wounded in her extremities. The broadside of these ships are very heavy, and can be delivered with crushing effect by means of electric firing. Their steaming powers are good; and, though from their great length, they do not turn as well as the newer type of vessels, they are by no means unhandy or uncertain in their movements. From their enormous size they have great capacity for stowing and carrying stores, and could in a very short time be made available for conveying troops. For a short trip of seven days, they could, no doubt, stow an extra 1,500 men without difficulty. The question now arises as to whether we are so well provided with the newer types of vessels that we can afford to dispense with the services of these old and well-tried ships? It may be instructive to cast our eye over the list of twelve shlps which Admiral Hood now has under his command, as, of all the twelve, there is but one, the Hercules, that would have a chance with any of the long ships which everyone is so anxious to condemn. —I am, &c., A LIEUTENANT OF THE FLEET.

Vigo, July, 1880.

[The experience recently gained from the result of the naval combat in the Pacific between the Huascar and the Chilian ironclads serves to prove that lightly-armoured ships are more dangerous to their own crews than to the enemy; the 4 and 5-inch plates affording no protection against Palliser chilled shells. Electric broadsides are also most uncertain and unreliable. The Shah, watching her opportunity, attempted at the most critical moment of the whole day to deliver such a broadside to the Huascar. The effect was certainly most "crushing" to the water, the whole of the projectiles taking effect thereon, having passed over the Peruvian turret ship. The opportunity was lost, and no other occurred during the remainder of the day. Perhaps it is as well that it was so.—ED. A. & N. G.]

ORDERLY-ROOM CLERKS.

"Dernier Resort" writes:—"Although the position of Orderly-room Clerks has again and again been the subject of communications in your columns, I would venture to make one more endeavour to enlist the sympathy and influence of some one in authority, who might perhaps be sufficiently interested in their case to urge its consideration at head-quarters. Your correspondent, 'C. J. S.,' very properly points out the fact that 'in most cases this non-commissioned officer is the confidential clerk and adviser of his commanding officer and adjutant.' To be this, and to completely and thoroughly perform his multifarious duties, he must be cognisant with most matters appertaining to military affairs. His work entails a knowledge of Court-martial law, he must be acquainted with all the puzzling regulations relating to recruiting, discharge, desertion, fraudulent enlistment; in fact, he is daily appealed to for the latest reliable information as to changes (more than ever numerous) created by General Orders, Army Circulars, and Memorandums affecting the whole Army system. He is personally responsible that the management of his office is at all times regular and in order. He must read hard, and devote all his time and energy to be posted up in those intricate questions involved in the many changes to which 'C. J. S.' alludes. His very occupation demands an educational standard superior to that required of any other non-commissioned rank. It should not be forgotten, also, that as the short-service system becomes daily more complete, his work proportionately increases. Three or four men enlist, and are discharged now, where, formerly, one was 21 years with the colours. Consequently, the difficulty is great to get men willing to forego the extra pay obtained all round them, and accept a post in which their sobriety, intelligence, and application are so shabbily recognised, and where they may work, work, work, with no prospect of improved financial remuneration beyond the 6d. a day, only granted after three years' service as a clerk. Look at the anomaly of a man of this stamp, receiving the lowest rate of serjeant's pay, while men appointed colour-serjeants, often far inferior in education and in other respects, with no such weighty responsibilities, get immediately on appointment often as much as 1s. 6d. a day extra. Then, besides cook-serjeants, provost-serjeants, and quartermasters' clerks (who may be corporals or privates), getting their 6d. and 8d. a day, there are dozens of others employed in comparatively trumpery billets who are in receipt of extra pay, amounting to considerably more than the salary of the despised O. R. C. I feel convinced that now the Government have announced their intention to deal generally with the subject of non-commissioned officers, it needs only to be brought to notice that the O. R. C. has hitherto been the victim of a great oversight, and his industry, intelligence, and responsibility will receive the most favourable consideration; and I am bold enough to believe that his position will be materially improved, up to his merits and deserts."

The Washington Army and Navy Register says that,—"News of much interest to American manufacturers of arms, comes by cable from Stockholm. It is said in a despatch to a daily paper that the Swedish Government has determined to reorganise its Army and equip it with the best modern breech-loaders; that American manufacturers are invited to send over their rifles with price lists; and that heavy contracts will be given out. It is stated that Sweden is determined to reassert its claims to consideration in Europe, and in the next general war wishes to be prepared to uphold its title to Finland. It is not probable that the Swedish Government could buy such vast quantities of American arms as have been purchased by Turkey of the Providence Tool Company, or by Egypt of the Remingtons. But it would be a very happy thing for our manufacturers to have another great contract placed at their disposal at this time. The Remingtons, by the way have just collected $325,000 from the Egyptian Government, and all our great private arms companies are now in a flourishing condition."

Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets John Cotton, M.D., who is appointed to Plymouth Hospital, vice M'Shane, retired, entered the Navy as assist-surg. at Haslar Hospital in Sept. 1847, and in the following month was appointed additional of the Vindictive, flagship of Sir F. W. Austen, on the West India and North-America station. In April, 1849, he was transferred to Jamaica Hospital, and in Jan. 1850 joined the Arethusa, and after serving with the Lisbon Squadron, proceeded to the Mediterranean, and took part in the campaign in the Black Sea, and was present at the bombardment of Odessa and attack on the sea defences of Sebastopol Oct. 17, 1854, and was gazetted and promoted to surg. for his services. In 1855, he was borne on the books of the Royal Albert, flagship of Lord Lyons, in the Black Sea. He was subsequently employed in the Inflexible, Capts. J. Corbett and G. A. C. Brooker, in blockading the Canton river, and during the operations against the city in Dec. 1857. Obtained favourable mention in the despatches of Sir Michael Seymour for his care of the sick and wounded. Afterwards visiting Calcutta and Japan, the Inflexible, assisted, with the Magicienne, Plover, and Algerine, the whole under the command of Capt. N. Vansittart, in capturing and destroying, in the neighbourhood of Hong Kong, 26 piratical fighting-junks, 74 fast row-boats, 236 guns, and about 372 pirates, in addition to a fortified stockade, mounting 14 guns. He afterwards served on the coast of China, with the 2nd Batn. of the Royal Marine Brigade, until the close of 1859, when he was transferred to the Assistance. He subsequently served in the Narcissus, flag-ship, at the Cape of Good Hope and Africa, from Aug. 1861 until Aug. 1864; at Lisbon Hospital, from Dec. 1864 until Oct. 1866; and from the latter date until June 1869 was attached to the President. He next served, from June, 1869, till Sept. 1872, in the Caledonia, in the Mediterranean; was fleet surg. at Haslar Hospital from Nov. 1872 until Feb. 1876, when he was transferred to the Black Prince, and remained until appointed, in Jan. 1879, to the Britannia, from which ship he was promoted.

SIR,—Some people, when they wish to be particularly cheerful, go for a walk in a cemetery. I am unable to give myself such a treat, there being no cemeteries in my vicinity. Therefore, when I desire to be merry, I work out my prospects of promotion to paymaster; and as the look-out is so very enlivening, I do not like to keep it all to myself, but give it for the benefit of any merrily-disposed assistant-paymasters. I would preface my statement with the information that the paymasters' line is about the only one in the Service possessing a host of influential friends. This can easily be seen, by the numberless questions that have been asked respecting their status in the House of Commons during the last ten years, and the great benefits that have been showered upon them. One benefit is so good that it will bear repeating. In Feb., 1870, when Mr. Childers reorganised the Navy generally, he fixed the number of paymasters at 240; in 1873, some one suggested reducing the list to 200, and the idea was acted upon. This was, without doubt, very funny, only a good many assistant-paymasters did not see where the laugh came in. Now for the prospects of promotion. I have selected Mr. Harris as an example. I am quite unacquainted with the officer, but he is the last of the large batches of assistant-clerks that were entered, and for that reason I have selected him. He has been 7½ years an assistant-paymaster, and judging by the rate of promotion for the last year, he has still more than 12 years to serve before he will be promoted. Does not that make an assistant-paymaster happy? Fancy only 19½ years an assistant-paymaster! I have in my mind's eye a young dog of an assistant-paymaster (aetatis 40) being turned out of his hammock at 6 a.m., dressing at his chest with a number of elderly midshipmen (quite 17, I am sure), and being slanged by a man half his age for not being dressed by seven bells. "Come, move along, young gentleman!" Very funny, isn't it? The spectacle of a bald-headed man being ordered about like a boy is so amusing!—I am, &c., SHRIMP.

P.S.—In case you imagine that in my light-heartedness I have taken a too rose-coloured view of promotion, I would mention that in 1870 assistant-paymasters were promoted after 10½ years' service, in 1880 they served for 14¼ years, so in 1890 they will have to serve 18 years.

Captain Frederick George Denham Bedford, who has been appointed to the captaincy of the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, vice Durrant, to the Cleopatra, entered the Navy in 1852, and served as mate in the Victor Emanuel in the Channel and on the Mediterranean station from Sept. 1858, until promoted to lieut., Nov. 26, 1859. On the 13th of the following month he was appointed to the Neptune, also in the Mediterranean, and in the following September removed into the Firefly, from which vessel, in April, 1863, he was transferred to the Royal Oak, and was paid off in Dec. 1867. In Jan. 1868 he obtained command of the Sealark, from which vessel he was promoted to the rank of com., Dec. 29, 1871. On the morning of the day appointed for the Plymouth Regatta in July, 1868, Capt. Bedford and his brother, Mr. Gordon Bedford, were standing near the taffrail of the brig Sealark, when a boy fell overboard, and was quietly passing astern with the strong tide then running, when the brothers, animated with the same spirit, simultaneously plunged overboard, just as they were, without removing coats or watches, and by their joint efforts succeeded in sustaining the sinking boy until a boat reached them. He was second capt. in the Agincourt, Capts. R. O'B. Fitzroy and Lord W. T. Kerr, flagship successively of Rear-Admirals G. T. P. Hornby and F. B. P. Seymour, C.B., attached to the Channel Squadron, from May 17, 1873, until appointed to the Serapis, Capt. the Hon. H. C. Glyn, C.B., C.S.I., July 22, 1875, and was advanced to post rank, May 15, 1876, in remembrance of the successful termination of the voyage of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to India and back. He afterwards commanded the Shah, flagship in the Pacific of Rear-Admiral A. F. R. de Horsey, from Aug. 14, 1876, until Dec. 2, 1878, when he was transferred to the Triumph, and was subsequently employed under the flag of Rear-Admiral F. H. Stirling until Oct. 1879.

It is announced in Army General Orders that "Major H. M. Evans, Staff Corps, wing-commander and second-in-command, 23rd Assam Native L.I., is appointed Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. on the Establishment, vice Major C. R. Cook, killed in action in the Naga Hills."

WANTED! AN EXPLANATION.

SIR,—In your impression of last Saturday, you say, "There remains, however, one matter which the War Office has not explained, and that is the rejection of the offer," made by myself and my old friend, General Ripley; "but to establish any charge on that rejection, it should be shown that there was an actual, tangible proposal, based on something stronger than assertion." Certainly. This is an impartial statement, quite in accordance with the judicial tone of your whole article on "The Government and the Metallurgists," and I at once admit its perfect reasonableness. "It is quite right that public Departments should be subjected to public scrutiny, but they are also entitled to public protection and respect, till it be proved they are undeserving of either." That, Sir, is a sentiment that I also entirely agree with, and no old Crimean officer can for one moment suspect the Editor of The Army and Navy Gazette—to whom, in common with the whole Army, past and present, he owes so much—of an undue tenderness for a public Department. It is therefore that I count with confidence on receiving your support against the War Office, or rather against General Campbell, who, under the late Government, was their responsible and autocratic head of the Ordnance Department. Now, Sir, what are the facts? General Campbell—for it was he, more than any other man—"led the country, with a fanaticism almost ferocious, back into the narrowest impasse of Woolwich Toryism in ordnance," to quote your own words. In other words, he shut out all outside science and knowledge, and forced for years upon the reluctant Navy the clumsy, heavy, feeble, and structurally weak "Campbell-Fraser modification of the Armstrong gun," as you very accurately call it. At last, the protests, public and private, of the Navy are too strong, and it is decided to withdraw the Campbell gun from the Navy. This is announced by Col. Stanley and Mr. Smith in the House of Commons. In any other country, or even in this country at any other epoch, such a change could only have been effected after the closest investigations of the new system, and the hitherto unsuccessful Gen. Campbell would have had to make way for the successful Gen. Uchatius, Herr Krupp, or whoever the man of the future turned out to be. But in the present instance, nothing of the kind has taken place. Nothing worthy of the name of a public inquiry has been held. Gen. Campbell is prolonged in his appointment for another two years, while the resignation of Gen. Younghusband (who, to his credit be it said, never would give in to some of the most mischievous Woolwich "fads") was accepted. Yet no new gun has been made, still less experimented with. The ipse dixit of the unsuccessful Gen. Campbell is accepted as a receipt in full for the success of the new gun, and the Navy see themselves still under the thumb of their bête noire. In this most unsatisfactory crisis, I came forward with "an actual, tangible proposal" (and that there may be no doubt about it, I send a copy herewith,) in my own name and in that of Gen. Ripley, whose history you will find at pages 7 and 8 of the "proposal." Suffice it to say here that he is the only man who ever sank an ironclad in fair fight by artillery fire, and that he did so chiefly with guns of his own manufacture. Our proposal was to make 200 breechloading guns for the Navy, 100 of 6¼ tons guaranteed to beat Gen. Campbell's 38-ton gun, or not to be paid for; 50 weighing 16 tons, guaranteed to beat Gen. Campbell's 80-ton gun, or not to be paid for; and 50 weighing 28½ tons, to equal an imaginary Armstrong gun of 150 tons, or not to be paid for; the prices to be about two-fifths of the cost of the corresponding guns. We further offered a proof of each gun, consisting of 10 rounds, any one of which would blow a Campbell gun into a thousand fragments. Finally, we offered, in subsequent letters, to accept any other conditions of trial within the limits of the energies stated that Gen. Campbell could devise. That offer Gen. Campbell contemptuously rejected, without consideration or negotiation. I say this after hearing, in the House of Commons, Mr. Childers's chivalrous attempt to screen the Director of Artillery. Mr. Childers was never told of the importance of the offer, and consequently never read it. The proof is that he alluded to Gen. Ripley, the historic defender of Charleston, as "a General of the United States Army,"—a notion which, as the latter remarked, appeared to be "a little mixed." I directly charge Gen. Campbell with sacrificing the interests of the country to his own "fanaticism, almost ferocious," to his "Woolwich Toryism," and to his amour-propre; and I defy him to bring forward any sound reason for refusing such an advantageous offer, on the "no cure, no pay" principle, as we made.—I am, &c.,

"Hopeful" writes:—"Your correspondent 'Miles' deserves the thanks of the Ridingmasters for the very able letter you were good enough to lay before your readers on the 31st ult. You have taken up the cause of the ridingmasters on many previous occasions, and I can assure you they are exceedingly grateful for your advocacy. Without adverting to the duties or responsibilities of the ridingmaster, as compared with those of the quartermaster, I wish, with your permission, to point out a few of the advantages the former does not enjoy, and which I think, in common fairness, might be conceded. In the regiment to which I belong (the Artillery) there are three classes of officers who receive their commissions from the non-commissioned ranks, viz., ridingmasters, quartermasters, and officers of the Coast Brigade. The ridingmaster, before he can perform his duties, has to go through a long and severe professional course of training; the others can enter upon theirs at once, the knowledge they obtain in the non-commissioned ranks being considered sufficient to enable them to do so. All three classes of officers, as a rule, were staff serjeants and married men previous to being promoted. That being so, the question of quarters is a serious one. And how does the ridingmaster find himself in that respect? He is entitled to the same accommodation as a subaltern on first joining,—viz., one room and half a kitchen, or one-half the space he was allowed as a staff serjeant! It being impossible for him to live with a family in the quarters offered him, he is compelled to pay house-rent, and from his position as an officer must live in a respectable neighbourhood, where rent is high, which is a crushing tax on his slender income. I admit that at many stations special quarters are provided or extra rooms given, but in others it is not so, all depending on the construction of the barracks; for instance, at this station the ridingmaster is in the position I describe, and has been so for a long time, and in all probability will remain so as long as he continues to do duty here, no lodging-money being allowed for him as long as a single quarter remains unoccupied in barracks. A provision is made for the quartermaster, surely the same might be extended to the ridingmaster. His brother-officer in the Coast Brigade, as a rule, is amply provided for in this respect in some fort, and left in undisturbed enjoyment there to the end of his service. Then after a long service, a great part of which is spent abroad, the ridingmaster finds both the quartermaster and the lieutenant of the Coast Brigade in receipt of more pay when serving, and greater advantages on retiring. If his duties and responsibilities are not considered sufficiently onerous to give him rank with his contemporaries, it cannot be too much to ask for the same advantages in pay, quarters, and retirement as they enjoy? This by no means exhausts the subject, but I trust I have shown that a great deal might be done for the ridingmaster, without making him equal with his more fortunate brother-officers."

"Justice" writes:—"I saw by the Standard of July 27, that Mr. Creyke asked the Secretary of State for War whether, having regard to the relative rank of ridingmaster and quartermaster, the Government intended to consider the advisability of granting the ridingmasters the same advantages as the quartermasters. In reply to that question, Mr. Childers said, that as the duties of the ridingmasters were not so onerous and responsible as those of the quartermasters, he could not undertake to make their advantages the same. If the Secretary for War gave this answer from his own knowledge, it shows that he knew nothing about the subject; and if he gave it on the information he received from another, he has been wrongly informed. What are the facts of the case? They are simply these:—The quartermasters are better paid than the ridingmasters, but for what reason I cannot comprehend. In the Royal Artillery the former get 9s. 6d. per day, and in the Royal Horse Artillery 12s. 6d., whilst the ridingmasters in both branches of the Artillery only get 9s. Besides, the ridingmasters have not the numerous perquisites that the quartermasters have. Now, with regard to the onerous and responsible duties attached to each of these officers, I am informed, on the very best authority, that the quartermasters in the Royal Artillery have very light duties, as every service battery at home and in India draws its clothing, stores, and equipment direct from the several departments, the quartermaster-serjeant doing the duty of the quartermaster. The only battery that the quartermaster has anything to do for now is the depôt of his brigade, and then he is assisted by the quartermaster-serjeant and several clerks. Then as to his responsibility. I will give you an instance in which the quartermaster's responsibility was shifted on to the shoulders of a man who had no more to do with the matter than the Tycoon of Japan. Some time since a store at Woolwich Barracks was broken into and several pairs of boots stolen. The usual inquiry was held, and then it was decreed that the loss should be made good by the officer commanding the depôt battery. Fiat justitia ruat cœlum! On the other hand, the ridingmaster has no one to help him in his work, and it certainly is a greater responsibility to see that the officers and drivers of a battery or brigade are efficient equestrians than to walk about the barrack yard and see that the drains are kept clear and the yard properly swept. I hope you will give this letter a place in your columns."

"Cavalry" writes:—"It appears that in reply to Mr. Creyke's question as to the advisability of granting to cavalry ridingmasters, who hold the same relative rank as quartermasters, the advantages that are about to be conferred on the latter, Mr. Childers stated 'that the duties of ridingmasters not being so onerous as those of the quartermasters, he could not undertake to make their advantages equal.' Surely the Military Secretary must have been misinformed as to the duties of the cavalry ridingmaster, as it is considered by cavalry officers quite the opposite, the ridingmaster being specially selected from amongst the smartest non-commissioned officers in the regiment, and then sent as a kind of cadet to Canterbury to be qualified, this course of training lasting on an average for three and a half years. Now, quartermasters are not required to pass any kind of examination whatever, but are simply appointed from the non-commissioned officers as a vacancy occurs. If any one will refer to the Army List, he will see at once which of these two positions is the most onerous. He will find that out of the twenty-eight Cavalry regiments, there are twenty-four quartermasters who have completed their thirty years' service and retired with the rank of captain, and one invalided. Of the ridingmasters nine completed thirty years' service, and three invalided. The difference is easily accounted for, their duties being of so arduous a nature that it is next to impossible to complete thirty years' service; generally breaking down at about twenty-five years, and then lingering on a complete wreck, altogether unfitted for the duties; yet none but men of good physique and great activity are selected, being medically examined as to their special fitness before being sent to qualify, and again after qualifying, immediately before being appointed. No medical officer would hesitate a single moment in rejecting one, if he had the slightest doubt about him. Still, with all this care, and the three and a half years' probation, the mortality is three times greater than that of the quartermasters. The diseases from which they chiefly suffer are pulmonary,—bronchitis, and a kind of blood-poisoning from inhaling so much tan and dust, in addition to kicks and falls from vicious horses. These things are seldom brought to the knowledge of the medical authorities, for fear of being invalided, so they struggle on to complete their thirty years' service, and, as it too often happens, die in the attempt. I might further venture to say that there is not a single ridingmaster but what is qualified to perform the duties of quartermaster. Yet there would be great difficulty in finding one quartermaster qualified for those of ridingmaster. A great deal more might be said on this subject, but I have no wish to enter into a long controversy, but only desire to draw attention to the fact that the duties of the cavalry riding-master are considerably underrated or misunderstood by the authorities, and to point out that the duties of one are those of a storekeeper, while the duties of the other are those of a combatant officer, and as such should be acknowledged. It is to be hoped that some member of Parliament will inquire into the relative position of these two officers, and having satisfied himself as to the correctness of the above statement, he will use his influence in bringing to the notice of the Military Secretary the very unsatisfactory position of the cavalry ridingmasters. Their duties not being clearly defined subjects them to great annoyances, and leaves them entirely at the mercy of their senior officers, which sadly interferes with the freedom of action required in the execution of their duty. There is every hope that if their anomalous position could be properly represented to the Military Secretary, that he would favourably reconsider ther case."

THE POSITION OF THE VOLUNTEER FORCES.

A "Civilian Lieutenant-Colonel" writes:—"The thanks of all well-wishers of the Force are due to you for your recent outspoken criticism anent the change of uniform and re-numbering of regiments. It is fully time that the War Office adopted a more vigorous policy with regard to the Volunteer Force, for much dissatisfaction has been expressed throughout the provinces at the favouritism which, as you very properly say, has been shown for some time past in the case of a few Metropolitan regiments. In such towns as Glasgow, Liverpool, and Manchester, regiments know full well that there is nothing for it but for them to conform to any orders which may emanate from the authorities in Pall Mall. It may be imagined, then, what the feelings of the officers and men of these provincial regiments are, when they find such corps as the London Scottish, Artists', and Queen's Westminster doing pretty well as they choose. Such a state of things ought not to be allowed for a moment, and it has occasioned no small satisfaction here to find that you have had the manliness to do what the supposed 'organ of the Volunteer Service' has never yet done, viz., express the views of the Force generally, and not those of a few influential persons, whose one aim and object it would appear to be to resist all change. It is rather a remarkable fact, as I heard it pointed out a few evenings ago, that every improvement that has been brought about in the Volunteer Force—and how many of these improvements have been—has been suggested in the first instance by the Army and Navy Gazette, and has been strongly resisted by those organs which profess to represent the feelings of the Force. Believe me, Volunteers generally appreciate the exertions you have made in their behalf, and whatever the few 'pot-hunters,' whose ideas the 'organ of the Force' is content to put forward, may think, all true friends of the Volunteer movement are ready to allow that faults, and many faults, exist in the Force as it is at present constituted, and regard those as its friends who point these faults out, and lead officers and men to feel their shortcomings and strive to rectify them. The days of fulsome criticism of the nature of that to which a certain paper has been in the habit of treating us for a number of years are, fortunately, past now. All ranks have been brought to realise the fact that they have much to learn, if ever they wish to attain that excellence which will fit them to be considered as a serviceable auxiliary; and I am glad to note that you have lately devoted attention to us, and have opened your columns to the discussion of subjects which are of interest to Volunteers, without falling into those errors which, in the opinion of all sensible men, have had the effect of bringing ridicule on the service, and have caused it to be looked down upon and sneered at among military officers who would have been among the first to extend to it a helping hand, had it admitted its imperfections and sought their aid in correcting mistakes."

"Purchase Subaltern" writes:—"In your impression of June 19, 'Equity' writes:—'When Purchase was abolished, there was but one way in which it was possible to have carried out that great change in England's military administration with honour, with equity, with justice, viz., by returning the Purchase officers their money. Their money has been kept,' &c. The Government found it impossible to do so, as it would cost millions to pay back the Purchase officers. The retirement scheme was brought in, and is liberal in some cases, especially to the Purchase captain (not reduced) of twenty years' service, who can retire on £259 per annum, with a bonus. The cases of the reduced officers are very hard, i.e., those who were placed upon compulsory half-pay. The scheme also goes very hard against the Purchase subalterns. A great many of these officers are now captains, and will have to retire under the new system after 20 years' service (if not promoted) on £200 per annum, their non-Purchase juniors, who have paid nothing for their commissions, receiving the same pension after the same number of years' service. I think, at least, that as no compensation was granted, the Purchase subaltern ought, in justice, to receive an increased rate of pension or a bonus on retirement after 20 years' service in proportion to the the Purchase captain. The captain, lieutenant, and ensign all purchased their commissions, and why the subalterns are not compensated in the slightest degree I am at a loss to understand. A scale might be fixed according to the rank of each subaltern when Purchase was abolished. If this was carried out, I feel confident that the old Purchase subaltern would be perfectly contented."

A Sketch of the Kaffir and Zulu Wars. By Captain Hallam Parr. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.)

The author of this unpretending but interesting and instructive volume held the responsible post of military secretary to Sir Bartle Frere during the late Zulu war, and consequently enjoyed many facilities of acquiring correct information as to the most important incidents of the campaign. Without entering minutely into the matters treated of in the introductory chapters, we take up the thread of the author's narrative at the period when a new King of the Zulu tribe was placed upon the throne,—the "determined, ambitious, warlike, far-seeing, crafty, and insatiably bloodthirsty Chaka." He it was who laid the foundation of that system of Zulu tactics which has since so frequently elicited the admiration of his foes, as well as his allies. Having formed, drilled, and disciplined his army, Chaka lost no time in testing its prowess. He made war on all sides, his warriors fighting with the heroism of desperation, knowing well that if they evaded their fair share of fighting in order to elude the enemies' weapons, they would have to undergo the terrible ordeal of "The Cowards' Bush." Here it was that Chaka, used to review his troops on their return from an expedition. Here it was he meted out praise and blame to his captains and their men, his army being drawn up in a huge semicircle round him. Then he would command the regiments, in turn, to march past, and, as each arrived at a certain spot, the terrible order was given, "Bring forth your cowards!" and those who had failed in their duty were brought out and put an end to. Chaka was assassinated, and Dingaan reigned in his stead, until in 1840 he was defeated and driven out of Zululand by the Dutch, and killed by the Amaswazi. The independence of the Zulus then disappeared, and the Dutch placed upon the throne Panda, a Zulu, who was content to kill as many people only as was necessary to preserve a moderate amount of discipline amongst them. In 1872 he died, and Cetywayo was installed on the throne by a representative of the British Government, which ordered that no massacres were to take place, that no Zulu should be killed without fair trial, and that the King's sanction should be obtained before any Zulu was put to death. With wonderful energy and determination the son of Panda commenced to organise an army which had nearly become demoralised by the timid policy of his father. He collected the old regiments, and formed new ones, regularly assembled them for training or exercise, and lost no opportunity of encouraging the military spirit of his army, and of strengthening the cords of discipline in his regiments. In a short time the discipline of his army had become perfect, while its mobility remained as remarkable as ever. Such was the Zulu Army in 1878, and the author inquires, "Against whom was this formidable engine to be used? Was it for his amusement that Cetywayo had turned, like a savage Frederick the Great, his nation into soldiers? Was it necessary, in order to resist the Swazies, or to keep down the Tongas, that he kept up an army of 50,000 men? Or had he been fired by ambition and bitten by the same lust of conquest as his grandfather Chaka? I may venture to say that all South Africans, and all those who have made the burning questions of South Africa their study, with very few exceptions, think the last explanation is the one which discovers the policy of the Zulu king." The author sketches rapidly the history of the events in which, according to him, there was much dexterity in the way in which the Zulu king played off the Dutch of the Transvaal against the Government of Natal. But the exceptions include some very eminent men and very experienced statesmen. In concluding this chapter, which may be regarded as an indictment against Cetywayo, the author deprecates any intention to stigmatise him as a monster, being content to accept the estimate of his character by the highest authorities in South Africa,—namely, that he was an able, unscrupulous, and extremely ambitious savage, commanding a large standing army of young warriors eager for battle, and menacing with ruin the border farms and homesteads which lay within a few hours' march of his capital. The author enters fully into the negotiations carried on with Cetywayo, and dwells on his insolent bearing, the various endeavours to preserve peace, the rejection of the ultimatum, and the final rupture; but we are not sure that his reading of what occurred will meet unqualified adhesion and support. All readers have become more or less familiar with these events; but they have not had the opportunity of reading them set forth with greater distinctness and descriptive power than in this portion of Captain Parr's narrative. The author states the diplomatic or political reasons for commencing the Zulu campaign early in 1879, and then points out the military considerations. In the beginning of the year 1879 the British troops were nearly ready—the Zulu Army was not; our Commissariat arrangements were on the point of being completed—theirs had not begun; the bulk of the native population of Natal could not be depended on for more than passive support; and, what is still more important, the Buffalo and Tugela rivers would in the early months of spring present a formidable barrier to the invasion of Natal by a Zulu impi; and, finally, in the month of May the grass, on which the waggon-oxen and horses of the mounted men would depend, would be burnt by the Zulus. The ninth chapter of Captain Parr's volume presents a vivid picture of the terrible disaster at Isandhlwana. The leading incidents of that fatal day are, as far as they will ever be known, familiar to most readers, but it would be difficult indeed to find a more masterly description of what took place than that which is here laid before us. The exact details of the desperate hand-to-hand combat, fought out to the last by the old and tried soldiers of the 24th and the brave little band of Colonial troops against overwhelming numbers, can never be known. An idea of what occurred can only be formed from those who caught a hurried glimpse of the scene while making their escape, and from the accounts of the Zulus themselves, weighing both by the sad evidence offered by the position of our dead. The author observes upon the keen and ready appreciation of our gallantry manifested by the Zulus when telling of the way our men struggled on, fighting to the last, and how hard they struck before they could be subdued:—

> "One tall man, a corporal of the 24th, killed four Zulus with his bayonet, but his weapon stuck for an instant in the throat of his last opponent, and the Zulus rushed in on him. The only sailor in the camp, one of the men of H.M.S. Active' was seen with his back against a waggon-wheel keeping the Zulus at bay with his cutlass, till one crept behind him and stabbed him through the spokes. One of the Natal Volunteers, who had been sick in hospital, was found with his back against a stone, near the hospital tent, nearly a hundred fired cartridges round him, his revolver empty, and his bowie-knife clutched in his hand."

No white man saw the end, but the Zulus tell of how firm the "red soldiers" stood:—

> "They describe the officers calling out and encouraging their men,—they tell how often they charged the little square till they became, after their heavy losses throughout the day, reluctant to attack it. They tell how the red soldiers even taunted them by gestures to come on; and then how at last, the white man's ammunition running short, they flung showers of assegais, standing just out of the reach of the bayonet, and then rushed on and finished the one-sided fight. 'Ah! those red soldiers at Isandhlwana' (many Zulus said), 'how few they were, and how they fought! They fell like stones, each man in his place.'"

The mournful episode of Melvill and Coghill is told in a few sentences:—

> "When the Zulu right horn showed in the rear of the hill, an effort was made to save the Queen's colours of the 1st Batn. 24th Regiment. It was handed over to Melvill, the adjutant of the battalion, and he started, accompanied by Nevill Coghill, orderly officer to Colonel Glyn, and was joined by Pte. Williams. The fugitives, closely pursued by Zulus, held on with difficulty till they reached the river side close together. Here Williams was carried down stream, and saw his companions no more. Melvill's horse was shot in the stream and the colours slipped from his grasp. Coghill reached the Natal bank in safety, but on seeing Melvill clinging to a rock in the river, trying to recover the lost colours, he put aside all thought of self-preservation, and rode back into the river to his comrade's assistance. Here his horse was also shot."

They both reached the Natal bank, and tried to struggle on, but could not,—

> "There are, at not many hundred yards from the riverside, two boulders within six feet of each other, near the rocky path. At these boulders they made their last stand, and fought until overwhelmed. Here we found them lying side by side, and buried them on the spot where they fought and fell so gallantly. There is no need of anything to remind Englishmen of their conduct. While we remember the Zulu war, it will not be forgotten. They did not die in vain; ten days after they fell, the colour was found in the rocky bed of the Buffalo."

In his description of the battle of Rorke's Drift (which, strangely enough, contains but slight mention of Chard and Bromhead), Captain Parr speaks highly of the courage of the Zulus, whose bravery and recklessness of death were beyond belief. At the end of the first week in February, Captain Parr left Rorke's Drift for Maritzburg, to resume duties which he had been permitted to lay aside for a time. He has placed before the public a history of the Zulu war, so far as he witnessed it in person, and has done so with remarkable clearness and lucidity of expression. He seldom expresses any strong opinion upon what came under his notice, except, indeed, where he challenges the accuracy of the rumours so zealously spread about that the British Army was guilty of cruel treatment to the Zulus, and again, when he expresses his anxiety that the book which he has written may be of use in modifying the opinion, held by many in England, that the war was needlessly hurried on.

Obituary.

Major Magenis, whose death we recently announced, served with the 90th Light Infantry in the Crimea, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol; commanded a party of the regiment at the taking of the rifle-pits on April 19, 1855, and was of the storming-party at the assault of the Redan on Sept. 8 (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, 5th class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). Served also during the Indian campaign of 1857-58, present with Havelock's column at the actions of Sept. 21 and 23, relief and subsequent defence of Lucknow, defence of the Alumbagh, under Outram, and fall of Lucknow (brevet of major, medal with clasp, and a year's service for Lucknow). He was one of the most popular officers in the 90th Light Infantry in Crimean and Indian Mutiny days, and was through every engagement with his regiment.

Lieut. John Burlton Benett, late of the Boadicea, died at Haslar Hospital on the 12th inst., after a long and painful illness, contracted in the Zulu campaign. The deceased officer, who was only 28 years old, was the second son of Mr. W. M. Benett, of 2 Chester Terrace, Regent's Park, and Fritham, New Forest, Hants. He served as midshipman in the Liffey, Capts. J. O. Johnson and Robert Gibson, on particular service, from Aug. 13, 1867, until Jan. 1871, when he was transferred to the Monarch, Capt. C. M. Aynsley, attached to the Channel Squadron; and in June following removed into the Topaze, Capt. R. B. Oldfield, and was employed with the Detached Squadron until paid off, in Oct. 1872. He subsequently served as sub-lieut. in the Aurora, Capt. Sholto Douglas, with the Detached Squadron, from Dec. 1872 until the close of 1873; and afterwards studied for some time at the Royal Naval College at Greenwich. From April 1, 1874, until paid off, July 1877, he served in the Spiteful, Capts. M. B. Medlycott and A. T. Powlett, as sub-lieut., and lieut. at the Cape of Good Hope and on the West Coast of Africa. He subsequently studied again for some time at the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, and on June 7, 1878, was appointed to the Boadicea.

Amusements.

The Promenade Concerts at COVENT GARDEN have been remarkably well attended, and the frequent variation of the programme would seem to have had the effect of causing the same audiences to reassemble night after night. The Swedish Sestet, who only want good voices to make them admirable singers, have given harmonised arrangements of their national melodies; the English concert, comprising the works of native composers, is prominently attractive; and on Saturday night, the spirit-stirring "Colonel Polka," composed by M. Hervé, who conducted his own work, proved such a success, that it will be frequently repeated during the remainder of the season.

At HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, Haverly's troop of American Minstrels, who furnish a thoroughly amusing entertainment for three hours without more than a minute's interval, continue to receive a large amount of patronage; and at DRURY LANE the decidedly sensational drama of "The World" has so firmly taken its place on the boards of the old theatre, linked with so many memorable histrionic associations, that the playbill is likely to remain without alteration till Christmas.

At the HAYMARKET, Mr. Boucicault's comedy of "A Bridal Tour," admirably acted as it is, fails to draw remunerative audiences, and Mr. J. S. Clarke will, in consequence, forthwith reappear in some of those popular impersonations which have the peculiar advantage of invariably attracting the playgoing public.

The Irish drama of "The Eviction," already well-known in the provinces, and recently played at the Standard Theatre, has been transferred to the OLYMPIC; but even at a period when eccentric experiments are made in testing the quality of new pieces and performers, the boldness of this venture may excite surprise. Mr. and Mrs. Hubert O'Grady, who represent the hero and heroine placed in difficulties sufficiently indicated by the title, act with some cleverness and command some sympathetic favour; but the drama is not suited to the theatre, and the situations are not sufficiently novel to arouse any strong interest in the familiar story evolved.

The CANTERBURY, in the Westminster Road, has passed under the management of Mr. Edward Garcia, who has considerably strengthened the "variety" company engaged at this establishment, and an exceedingly diverting entertainment is now presented.

The sad announcement of the sudden death, at Paris, of Miss Neilson, the accomplished actress, sent a shock through all theatrical London on Monday afternoon which will long be remembered. Her career, brief as it was, sufficed to show what could be done by an enthusiastic woman devoted to her art. In July, 1865, when scarcely sixteen, Miss Lilian Adelaide Neilson made her first essay in the Metropolis at the Royalty Theatre as Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet," and fifteen years comprised the history of her advance to fame and fortune by continued labour and incessant study. Her life was a romance, and it has had a romantic close. One of the objects of her holiday trip was to select some picturesque abode where she might tranquilly pass the remainder of her days. It was decreed, instead, that her rest should be found in a grave at Brompton Cemetery, where so many of her professional sisters and brothers have their names also recorded on tombstones, instead of play-bills.

MESSRS. ALLEN AND HANBURYS have as nearly as possible succeeded in depriving Cod Liver Oil of its nauseating smell and taste. They present in their "Perfected" article the oil in a beautifully bright and but very little coloured state. Many persons to whom the taste of the oil has hitherto been an obstacle will doubtless be able to take it in this its more perfected form.—Lancet. No nauseous eructations follow after it is swallowed.—Medical Times and Gazette. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanbury's "PERFECTED" OIL. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all chemists.

ALLEGED PLOT TO DESTROY CORK BARRACKS.

From Cork we learn that the extent of the disturbances there have been much exaggerated. A report prevailed on Tuesday night that an attempt was to be made to blow up the military barracks at Cork, and as evidence of this it was stated that two barrels of gunpowder were found in the tunnel. On inquiry from the police authorities, it was ascertained that no gunpowder was found in the tunnel, and that there was no foundation whatever, as far as they were aware, for the intended plot. It is stated that some extra vigilance is exercised at the military barracks, in consequence of recent events, but beyond this nothing unusual has been reported. The tunnel referred to belongs to the Great Southern and Western Railway. It is three-quarters of a mile long, and runs under a great hill of earth and stone, upon which the barracks and a fashionable part of the city stand. The tunnel does not run immediately underneath the barracks, but skirts by a wing of it, where stand the stables and other out-offices. To blow up the barracks from the tunnel would be physically an utter impossibility.

ENGINEER SURVEYORSHIPS.

BOARD of TRADE.—MARINE DEPARTMENT.

NOTICE is hereby given that the Board of Trade are about to select Two Marine Engineers for appointment in the Third Class of Engineer Surveyors attached to the Marine Department. Applicants to be eligible for these appointments must have served an apprenticeship as an Engineer or Iron Shipbuilder, must be not less than 25 and not more than 45 years of age, and must have served at sea in charge of engines for at least five years. They must also at the time of application be entitled to, and at the time of appointment, possess First-class (Board of Trade) Certificates of Competency as Engineers.

The necessary "form of application for appointment" will be forwarded, on a request being made by letter to the Assistant-Secretary of the Marine Department, Board of Trade, London.

The applicants selected for competition will have to be examined in technical subjects by the Board of Trade Officers, and the two successful candidates will then be appointed, subject to their passing a satisfactory clerical examination before the Civil Service Commissioners in

1. Handwriting and Orthography.
2. Arithmetic (including Vulgar and Decimal Fractions).
3. English Composition (moderate proficiency).

The Salary of Third-class Engineer Surveyors commences at £200 per annum, and increases (subject to the Board's approval) by £10 per annum to £300 per annum. Third-class Surveyors are eligible for promotion to the second and first classes, for which the rates of salary are £300 to £400, and £400 to £500, respectively.

All personal applications upon the subject of these appointments are expressly prohibited, and if, notwithstanding this prohibition, personal application is made, the fact will be noted against the name of the applicant.

Copies of all letters of recommendation and copies of testimonials and certificates should be attached to the form of application.

The Board of Trade will not hold themselves responsible for the safety of any original papers sent with the form of application.

No application will be considered for the appointments above mentioned, unless it is received at the Office of the Board of Trade on or before September 30, 1880.

THOMAS GRAY, Assistant-Secretary.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

ZOEDONE. — OHNE PHOSPHOR,
KEIN GEDANKE.—There has long been a desire to obtain a sparkling and agreeable beverage combining sustaining and invigorating qualities without intoxicating effects. This want is now, in every respect, supplied by

ZOEDONE, a non-alcoholic nutrient Tonic Beverage, which will be found invaluable in all cases of mental or physical strain, while its refreshing properties and pleasant flavour render it a delicious drink for daily use.

ZOEDONE is recommended by the Faculty. Dr. Simpson says:—"Zoedone contains two of the most important elements of the human organism, viz., phosphorus and iron, in a state easily assimilable, supplying exactly what is required where any extraordinary waste of tissue has been induced—a condition too common in this competitive age."

Pamphlet of particulars, with list of Agents, free.

Price, including bottles and packages, free on rails at Wrexham, 6s 6d per dozen in half-champagne bottles—in six-dozen cases; 12s per dozen in large champagne bottles—in three-dozen cases. A small extra charge in smaller cases. See Pamphlet.

THE state of affairs in Afghanistan at the present moment is most exciting, not to say critical, and our anxiety is increased by the fact that our reliable information is very meagre. According to the Western Morning News, General Roberts has had several skirmishes on his march from Cabul, and may expect to meet with serious opposition as he approaches Candahar. The tribesmen around Khelat-i-Ghilzai are said to be collecting in large numbers, while by the accession of Ghazis and ordinary villagers, Ayoub Khan's army has been swollen to a strength of 100,000 men. According to yesterday's Standard, also, the new Ameer's troops have mutinied, and General Stewart has, in consequence, been ordered to stand-fast at Jellalabad. In the south, matters are represented as being in an equally unsatisfactory condition. The Beloochees are showing hostility, and a wing of the 78th Highlanders have been ordered to Khelat, in order to support the authority of the Khan. On the Toba plateau, which adjoins the Khojak Pass, a mob of Kakurs have assembled, against which General Phayre is about to send a column. This intelligence is not authentic, and probably most of it is exaggerated. For example, why should the Western Morning News be able to obtain from General Roberts's camp information which no other paper has been able to procure? Yet, if the correspondent of our contemporary is not with General Roberts's force, he cannot possibly vouch for the accuracy of his statements. Again, the strength of Ayoub Khan's army is evidently exaggerated. It is no light task to feed 100,000 soldiers concentrated in one spot, under any circumstances. To do so in Afghanistan would be next to impossible. That rumours should be afloat of mutiny at Cabul is only what might have been expected. The rumours may turn out to be true, but it is equally possible that they have their origin in some petty acts of military insubordination. The report that the Khan of Khelat has lost control, for the moment, over his turbulent subjects, is very probable, but nothing very serious can have taken place, or the authorities would scarcely expect to restore order by sending merely a wing of a European regiment to the assistance of our feudatory. We may accept, without reserve, the statement that the ill-conditioned, turbulent Kakurs have gathered on the Khoja Amran Mountains. It is but in accordance with their instincts that they should swarm together when they scent plunder. They will not, however, we fancy, if we avoid it, accept battle, but will retire or disperse with a view of returning when General Phayre has advanced. On the whole, however, while making every allowance for exaggeration and inaccuracy, the situation of affairs is not exactly what we should like or had expected. General Roberts will, we may feel sure, overthrow without much difficulty the undisciplined hordes in his front, and reach Candahar in a few days, though, perhaps, with slightly diminished numbers. His arrival will at once raise the blockade to which General Primrose has been subjected for over three weeks. Only half his task will, however, then have been accomplished. The main point is that Ayoub Khan should, in a military sense, be annihilated. Till lately the idea has been that he would not await an engagement; but now the conviction gains ground, not only that he will fight, but that it will give our troops some trouble to beat him. He has a river in his rear, it is true, but at this time of the year it is easily fordable almost anywhere. On the other hand, his right is covered by a high range of stony hills, and his front and left flanks by several canals and a host of enclosures. Unless, therefore, he is out-manœuvred, it will cost many lives to oust him from his strong position. It must be remembered that, man for man, the Afghans are physically quite equal to our troops, both Native and European; that Ayoub Khan has got a numerous, well-served artillery; that in numbers he will, at the lowest computation, be twice as strong as the force brought against him. Nevertheless, he will certainly be beaten; of that we entertain no doubt. Unless General Roberts purposely slackens his march, he will undoubtedly reach Candahar before the arrival of General Phayre. That General was left so shamefully ill-provided with transport, that a full month has elapsed since General Primrose first invoked his aid, and it is not yet certain when he will start. From Chaman, his present advanced post, it is 79 miles to Candahar, and the distance can scarcely be accomplished in less than five days at the quickest, and in that time only on the assumption that he is not delayed by opposition on the march. If, therefore, the advance commences—as it is said it will—on the 30th, he will not be at Candahar before September 3, at the earliest. We shall, however, be surprised if he arrives before the 5th. In the meantime, it would be only common prudence on the part of the Government to collect a second reserve division, with transport, if it can be got, ready to move up to Quetta, if necessary. Turning to Candahar, we learn that, after a long period of apparent inaction, a sortie was made on the 16th against the village of Deh Kwejeh, situated some 500 yards to the east of the city. What the object of that sortie was, we cannot understand, but we are told that it was successful, though our loss was very severe, and it would seem that we were eventually driven back rather rapidly. Certainly we never completely dislodged the enemy from the village, but only chased a few of them through the streets and out at the other side. What, therefore, we have gained by our dearly-bought and unsubstantial success, we fail to see. We, however, await further details.

In our last number there was a letter from Colonel W. Hope, dated "Army and Navy Club, August 9," which we inserted, as there was a reference in a previous number of the Army and Navy Gazette to an offer made by him and Mr. Ripley, formerly a General in the C.S.A., or Army of the Confederate States of America, to provide the country with a new system of ordnance, and to the rejection of that offer by the War Office. In the same number, we indicated what we believed to be the proper course for the War Office to take in dealing with such proposals, and our opinion has been strengthened by Colonel Hope's letter. But in justice to ourselves, we must say a few words in regard to the main question. We think, as we said before, that "public departments," including their head, "are entitled to public protection and respect till it be proved they are undeserving of either." Colonel Hope says General Campbell was "the responsible and autocratic head of the Ordnance Department" under the late Government. We have no interest in the proposition as far as General Campbell is concerned. Responsible he was certainly to the head of the Department in which he served, and therefore he could not very well be "autocratic," for autocracy and responsibility cannot be co-existent. When he was at the head of the Gun Factory at Woolwich, General Campbell, in conjunction with Mr. Fraser, effected considerable economies in the cost of material and in the mode of manufacturing coiled guns on the Armstrong principle, and we cannot accept Colonel Hope's statement that it was the present "Director of Artillery and Stores" who "led the country with a fanaticism almost ferocious into the narrowest impasse of Woolwich Toryism in Ordnance." The Woolwich Tories whom we meant in the passage quoted by Colonel Hope, were to be found in high places outside the Gun Factory, and General Campbell and his subordinates had only to carry out the reactionary "fads" of their superiors, and to build guns on the designs which were furnished to them by others. Having from the very beginning fought almost, if not quite, single-handed—and certainly we are not aware that we had any ally at the outset of the fight—against the supercilious and ignorant bigotry of those whose efforts threw the ordnance of this country back some twenty years, and who now are compelled to strike their colours in the face of accomplished facts, we can pass by any insinuation that in our desire to do justice to General Campbell we have any interested motives, public or private, to serve, with due contempt; but we are bound to state that we think the bias against breech-loading ordnance which was given by General Adye to our Artillery was not without its influence on the mind of General Campbell whilst he was at the Gun Factory, and, it may be, after he left it for Pall Mall. He was not prepared to say that breech-loaders were bad, nor was he unwilling to admit they might be good, but he did not think that they were superior to muzzle-loaders even, if equal to them, though he was quite ready to manufacture them if ordered to do so. Such we hold to have been Major-General Campbell's position on the gun question. It is not true that "he forced on the reluctant Navy the clumsy, heavy, feeble, and structurally-weak Campbell-Fraser modification of the Armstrong gun," for the simple reason that he could do nothing of the kind, no matter how willing he might have been to do so; and seeing that the most venomous partisan cannot point out a single advantage, to the extent of a penny, which General Campbell could gain from the adoption or rejection of that gun or any other, it is really an outrage to hold him up to opprobrium as a "responsible autocrat," who has rejected off-hand a splendid offer of an established and novel ordnance system. Why the War Office did not accept the Hope-Ripley or Ripley-Hope offer we do not know, and we are sorry that it was refused. It is true that the War Office might have had long to wait, for these guns, as far as we can learn, are among the ordnance of the future, and as yet in nubibus. General Ripley's defence of Charleston was a very fine piece of military work, but Colonel Hope is really "trying to pull the" editorial "leg" a little, when he talks of the gallant officer of the late C.S.A. as being "the only man who ever sank an ironclad in fair fight by artillery fire, mainly by guns of his own construction," as a reason or argument why the Ripley-Hope proposal should be accepted, and that the War Office should therefore, inter alia, have given an order to the officers named to make two hundred breech-loading guns for the Navy. The Navy have more to say to such proposals than our correspondent thinks. When a writer has the courage to assert that "the Vavasseur steel guns are the only ones manufactured in this country which, in the opinion of competent foreign critics, have been found able to sustain the character of English gun-makers," he must have a tremendous confidence in the ignorance of his readers. No country has adopted—no school of artillery has accepted—"the only guns manufactured in England which sustain the character of English gun-makers." But that circumstance is of no consequence in the mind of an "authority," who can, no doubt, manufacture "competent foreign critics" as easily as he can either facts or guns. Perhaps if he is equally well acquainted with the causes which led to the appearance of the article of June 26, on the policy of the War Office in connection with the Gun question, he will be able to understand the discrepancy of which he makes so much account.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, K.G., accompanied by her Imperial and Royal Highness the Duchess of Edinburgh, arrived at Coburg on August 24, and intend making a long stay in that town.

A special Commission has been appointed by the Government of India to report on the subject of Indian seaports, in order that steps may be taken to provide the necessary means for defence for the more unprotected portions of the Indian coast, including Burmah and Port St. Blair.

We are glad to learn that the dispute on board the Tay, referred to by us last week, did not arise between any of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers on board, but between two of the crew of that vessel, and that the man, George Taylor, who was stabbed, is an ordinary seaman.

Captain Morant, of the Valorous, has ably fulfilled the duties which devolved upon him when Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh was suddenly withdrawn from the command of the Irish Relief Squadron. We hear that the Relief Committees have been much indebted to him for his constant reports as to the extent of the distress and best means for carrying out the important duty of distributing clothing and stores among the islanders. We hope that his withdrawal from this Service may meet with some recognition.

The request of Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, second commandant of the Plymouth Division of the Royal Marines, that he might be permitted to retire from the Service, has been granted by the Admiralty. To have refused such a request would have been as great an injustice as the former denial of a command, which this officer has suffered in common with the other second commandants who were formerly senior to the present colonels-commandant of the three Divisions. Probably these officers will follow the example of Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, and take, in retirement, that extra step which was denied them while they remained on the Active List.

Captain Loftus Jones, senior officer on the Brazils station, has decided to remain at Colonia in the Garnet for the present, the duty of protecting British interests at Buenos Ayres, in the event of further troubles, being in the hands of the Elk.

Some new vessels of, the Mallard class, 4-gun composite gunboats of 455 tons, are shortly to be ordered to be built by contract. A new vessel of the Porcupine class is to be built by Messrs. Samuda, to replace the old vessel of that name which is attached to the Duncan for surveying service.

A telegram has been received from Zanzibar reporting the death of Lieutenant A. K. Woodrow, who was appointed in May last to the Euryalus for duty as senior lieutenant of the Ruby, on her being recommissioned. Lieutenant Woodrow obtained his commission in September, 1872, and had qualified as a gunnery officer, and held an honorary certificate for the Royal Naval College, at Greenwich. His death deprives Captain Foot of an able first lieutenant, and the Navy of a promising officer.

If Majors of Marines are wise, they will refrain from pushing the matter of their duties afloat. The Admiralty cannot find accommodation in ships-of-war for both a major and captain of Marines, and therefore since the substantive rank of major has been created for the benefit of the corps, there can be no very great hardship if, when an officer of that rank is embarked in command of a detachment, he should, considering the exigencies of the Service, be prepared to perform the duties of the grade he would otherwise have held had not majors been created. If the corps values the retention of the rank of major, any such small point of etiquette should be waived, rather than, by endeavouring to force it, the continued strife should be the means of abolishing that which has been created with a view to benefitting the senior captain. We know there are many opinions adverse to substantive majors in the Marines, and therefore we recommend submission without further remonstrance on the part of those who feel (we think unnecessarily) aggrieved.

His Excellency the Right Hon. G. J. Goschen, proceeded, on August 19, in the Antelope from Therapia to Constantinople, and visited the Mosque of St. Sophia, which every night during Ramazan is illuminated within and without by thousands of small oil lamps. The mosque was, says a correspondent, visited in the evening, during the time the faithful were at prayers, and to any one who has never before seen such a sight, the interior presented a most weird and curious sight, no chairs or forms of any sort are used, and no women admitted, the men stand or kneel, and constantly prostrate themselves and kiss the ground. Every man, on entering the mosque, either takes off his shoes or puts over them slippers, which are kept for the purpose. Music is never heard in a Turkish mosque. The month of Ramazan (or Mahommedan Lent) is very strictly kept, and from sunrise to sunset every Moslem is forbidden to eat, drink, smoke, or take snuff, but after sunset the evening is spent in eating, drinking, smoking, revelry, and prayer. All the mosques and coffee-houses are open, the latter generally crowded with Turks listening to singers, story-tellers, &c. The central dome of St. Sophia is over 100 feet in diameter, with a rise of 46 feet, and is 180 feet above the ground. After visiting the mosque, his Excellency drove through the streets of Stamboul, returning to Therapia by midnight.

The Committee appointed by the Admiralty to make inquiries relative to the loss of the training-ship Atalanta met on Wednesday at the Sessions House, Westminster, and held a private consultation. The oral evidence is now stated to be finished, with the exception of the examination of Admiral Sir George Wellesley, G.C.B. (who was Senior Naval Lord of the Admiralty when the Atalanta was fitted out). Sir George Wellesley has been on the Continent, but has been asked to return to give evidence before the Committee.

Thomas Castro, better known as the "Claimant," who has for some time past been kept at work stacking timber in Portsmouth Dockyard, is said to be anxiously waiting the result of his appeal to the House of Lords against the adverse decision of the Judges on the writ of error.

On Wednesday the Lords of the Admiralty made their official inspection of Sheerness and Chatham Dockyards. On their Lordships' arrival at Sheerness, a reception was held, at which the whole of the officers of the establishment were presented. Their Lordships then proceeded to the Captain-Superintendent's office, where a long consultation was held. The Dockyard was minutely inspected, the ships in the basin and in the several docks, as also the numerous workshops, being each in its turn visited. Captain Theodore Jones, Superintendent of the yard, entertained their Lordships at lunch, after which they proceeded on board the Enchantress to Chatham Dockyard, the inspection of which was continued yesterday.

Vice-Admiral Robert Jenkins, C.B., has, we are glad to hear, joined the committee of the Orpheus Memorial Fund, and has subscribed £5 towards the object in view.

The first of the four 80-ton guns of the Inflexible was placed in one of the turrets yesterday, at Portsmouth. The gun was raised by the sheers, the wire hawsers used being capable of standing a strain of 300 tons. It was placed in the starboard turret, and heeled the ship over several feet.

It would very soon have been found impossible to continue the work of the Coast of England Survey, for want of a ship in which to carry on the service, unless the Admiralty had consented to the proposed construction of another vessel of the Porcupine class, for that little vessel, which has been for so many years employed on the coast survey, is now thoroughly worn out, and past repair. Messrs. Samuda will, it is said, build the new little paddle-steamer, and there is some probability of their having some ships of the smaller classes to construct.

We hear that the Admiralty declined to accede to the request of the Committee of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club at Southsea—that the brigs attached to the training-ships at the Home ports might be allowed to compete for a prize at the recent Club Regatta. In former years, the brigs have been allowed to enter for sailing matches, and their young crews have been sorely disappointed at the prohibition this year.

Commodore Thomas Smith, who has been absent from Hong Kong on leave of absence, was to return about the middle of July, when Captain East, who has been doing senior officer's duties at Hong Kong, was to leave in the Comus for Yokohama.

The Tourmaline, which was ordered home from Jamaica, by telegraph, to pay off, may now be looked for, as her orders were to sail from Port Royal for Bermuda and England on July 31.

Is there any use in keeping at the Ports the old patterns of uniforms, now that a volume like a tailor's pattern-book with lithographed plates has been issued? Every Commander-in-Chief's office is in possession of one of these pattern-books for reference, while the uniforms in the gross cases are in many instances quite out of date and irregular. Their appearance, too, reminds one more of some relics, such as "Nelson's uniform" at Greenwich, rather than the uniforms to be worn by British officers of the Navy. Indeed, some of the ancient garments are hardly fit to dust an old fiddle with. They should be sent to those people who give "the highest price for old uniforms," and the proceeds of the gold lace and buttons should be handed over to the Naval schools, or some such charitable institution connected with the Service.

We are asked by a naval correspondent, "Where is the promised book of forms?" Like the fate which attended the Admiralty Instructions themselves, perhaps the book may be hanging fire at the Stationery Office, where it is the rule that work shall be executed in the order in which it is received, regardless of its nature or urgency. But as this book of forms is repeatedly alluded to in the Admiralty Instructions, which are now sufficiently old to call for a volume of Addenda, the non-appearance of the said book is highly inconvenient, and its issue should certainly be hurried forward.

Major Crease, R.M.A., who is well known in the Service for his inventive genius, will retain his appointment in connection with "Public Works" until promoted. He was wisely selected for the superintendence of artificers at Eastney Barracks, and so beneficial has this appointment proved, that it is intended to at once select another officer of the corps to learn the duties of this post, in order that he may be able to replace Major Crease on his promotion.

Rear-Admiral W. Gore Jones, C.B., has reported to the Admiralty that it was his intention to leave Zanzibar for Trincomalee on the 16th inst., when he would have completed his inspection of the London and other ships on that part of the East Indies station.

The editor of a paper published at Wick has waxed very wroth, and said hard things of the Jackal, because she was not on the spot to lend a hand to some fishing-boats when they wanted a tow. But setting aside the fact that the Jackal cannot be in two places at once, and cannot always be within sight of all the fishing-boats on the Scotch coast, it is quite a question whether the editor of the Wick paper has not been asking too much. We admit that at Wick the soul of the people may be centred in their boats and what they catch, but the "protection of the fisheries," and not keeping a watchful eye on every fisherman and his craft, are the duties of the Jackal. She was never intended for service as a steam-tug, and the sooner our contemporary and his subscribers awake to this fact, the less rubbish they will write about the shortcomings of the Jackal.

Commander Clayton Mitchell has applied for a further term of service in the Coastguard, and has been reappointed for another three years. Commander Mitchell was given the command of the Cowes division in August, 1877, and we fear that some who had been looking forward to this chosen command will be disappointed at its being retained by Commander Mitchell for a further term.

Captain O'Connor, R.M.A., the newly-appointed Gunnery Instructor to the Artillery Division of the Royal Marines, has applied for permission to be attached to Shoeburyness, to become more fully acquainted with some of the most recent changes introduced into the science of gunnery.

Lieutenant Edmund Slade, R.N., has, we hear, offered himself as a candidate for examination for interpreter in Spanish.

The Russian Mediterranean Squadron, under the command of Admiral Kroener, has been ordered to proceed forthwith to Cattaro. Another Russian vessel stationed at Naples has been ordered to join the Admiral's squadron. The Russian torpedo-boat Nadine, which recently crossed the Atlantic on a trial trip, has been completely wrecked off Aracati, near the mouth of the Jaguaribe River, in Brazil. All her crew were saved.

A six-oared galley race between the boats of the Victoria and Albert and the Osborne was rowed in the Solent on Saturday. The boats were towed down opposite Egypt House, the present residence of Lord Dudley, and a splendid start was made. The Osborne's boat, in which were Prince George of Wales and Lord Charles Beresford, was slightly behind at the start, but it soon got level, and won a well-pulled race to Osborne, about a mile distant, by a dozen lengths. The Prince and Princess of Wales witnessed the race from a steam-launch which followed the boats over the course.

A court of inquiry has been held at Portsmouth, under the presidency of Captain Buckle, into the circumstances of a collision between the Minotaur and the German barque Hoffnung. The latter was bound from Swartwick for Falmouth, with a cargo of timber, and at 1.30 on the morning of Friday, the 13th inst., she was run into by the Minotaur off St. Catherine's Point, at the back of the Isle of Wight. It was alleged that the merchantman did not exhibit any lights until a collision was inevitable, and that, instead of keeping on the course, she put her helm hard a-starboard. The Hoffnung received considerable injuries, and was towed into port by the Minotaur. The court decided that the Minotaur was to blame, and recommended an award as compensation for injuries and loss by demurrage to the Hoffnung.

It can scarcely be known at the War Office that so inadequate and inefficient were the defences of Aden at the time of the Turkish crisis, that the Military Authorities entreated the Admiral commanding the East Indies Station to remain with his ship for the protection of the place, which he did for some months. If the Navy are in future to be utilised in this way in the Red Sea, and also in the Pacific, we fear our commercial marine will have the pleasant duty of protecting themselves in war time.

The Russian Minister of War has announced that for the future the officers of the rifle brigade of the Caucasus are to be allowed one pack-horse apiece for baggage, and every 25 men thirteen horses.

Can anyone explain the principle upon which vacancies on the list of General officers are absorbed? The Royal Warrant says, in the distinctest possible language, that one vacancy in every three shall not be filled. "After the promotion of effective General officers provided for in Article 30, one vacancy in every three among General officers of our Cavalry and Infantry, which would give promotion to a Colonel of our Cavalry and Infantry, and every vacancy among the General officers of our Indian Staff Corps, or our Indian Military Forces, which would, under any of our Warrants, now in force, give promotion to a Colonel of our Cavalry or Infantry, shall be absorbed." So says the Warrant, but if the gazettes are carefully examined, it will be found that considerably more than the due proportion of vacancies have been absorbed. So complicated are some of the rules governing promotion at the present time, and so strangely does the War Office interpret them, that it is quite impossible to follow the promotions with any amount of accuracy. The above clause, however, is clear enough, and there is no excuse for it being misinterpreted, as the gazette proves it to have been, at the expense of the senior officers.

Major-General T. J. L. Gallwey, R.E., has entered upon his duties as Inspector-General of Fortifications at the War Office, vice General Sir Linton Simmons. It may be recollected that General Gallwey, in conjunction with Major Alderson, R.A., wrote a comprehensive history of the war between the Northern and Southern States of America; and, at the same time, made a most able survey of the fortifications of the contending forces.

Major Lord Gifford, V.C., 57th Regiment, has arranged to leave England on the 15th proximo, accompanied by Lady Gifford, to take up his appointment as Colonial Secretary of Western Australia.

As lieutenants of five and six years' service, who were originally in the Militia, are becoming the seniors of that rank in Cavalry and Infantry regiments, anxiety is being manifested, which it might be expedient for the Authorities to allay by some assurance as to the time of service which will ensure their not being passed over for promotion. One apprehension is lest those officers should be again superseded in their regiments by others of somewhat longer standing from without, may be, by younger men. Article 55, paragraph (d), provides that certain regimental vacancies may be filled by "selection," though not necessarily from another regiment, so long as the officer selected, if a lieutenant, has been "two years in the Service, and has passed the professional examination prescribed by Articles 9 and 60," of the Royal Warrant of 1877. It is thought that time of service in the Militia ought not to be entirely ignored, the more so as many officers were detained longer in the Militia than originally contemplated; whilst the rank given on entering the Militia, and supposed to be perpetuated on transfer to a Line regiment, was so far withheld in that the officers upon whom it was conferred were retained for two or three years on sub-lieutenants' pay, and were in many cases superseded by sub-lieutenants from Sandhurst, who, though they had not performed a day's duty with their regiment, were placed above them on the Lieutenants' List through ante-date of commissions.

We would caution officers who may have retired upon pension against commuting their retired allowances, without first having obtained some distinct understanding as to the sums to which they are entitled. A case occurred the other day which may be quoted in illustration of the treatment which those may expect who foolishly act on any sudden impulse. An officer of high reputation not being able to make up his mind whether to commute or not, took a pension, thinking that from the wording of Article 163 of the Royal Warrant, he could at any time commute until he attained the age of 41 years, receiving a sum of £3,200. Immediately after his name appeared in the Gazette, he made a formal application for permission to commute, taking it for granted that as his pension had been settled according to his age—viz., £242, age 40—he would, of course, receive the full sum to which he was entitled, provided he applied before entering upon his 42nd year. On this point, however, he found himself greatly mistaken. The War Office handed him over to the Pensions Commutation Board, and they forwarded a list of life assurance questions, accompanied by a declaration to be filled in and signed before a witness, that their offer was accepted. Instructions were also given that the officer should proceed to town from Ireland, to be examined by a doctor specially appointed. A long correspondence followed, when, to the officer's great surprise, he discovered that all commutations must be taken under the Pensions Act of 1871, which is nowhere mentioned in the Warrant of 1878. Finding the War Office powerless to override the decision of the Commutation Board, application was made for permission to retire upon half-pay and surrender, a request that was at once complied with by the Horse Guards, which is ever ready to meet the wishes of officers, and certainly does not encourage the systematic robberies of which officers are continually being made the victims at the hands of other departments. We give this case in order to open the eyes of others to the risks they run in going before the Commutation Board.

The publication of the new Royal Warrant, dated July 7, 1880, instituting promotion of Army veterinary-surgeons for distinguished service, will be thankfully received by the department as a first instalment towards the removal of the melancholy feeling of dissatisfaction under which it now labours. But, strange to say, in this Royal Warrant the great anomaly is seen of what may be called second-class veterinary-surgeons being eligible for promotion to "first class" for distinguished service, while those who are already "first class" have no reward to look forward to. The first-class veterinary-surgeons who in a campaign or during peace are the more experienced and responsible officers, will consequently perform their duty with the idea that their younger brethren—who are glad to seek from them advice, guidance, and assistance—can obtain promotion by zeal and ability, while they alone must expect virtue to be its own reward. It is true that an exceedingly unsatisfactory consolation is offered to them by saying, "You 'first-class' veterinary-surgeons cannot be promoted or rewarded for distinguished or meritorious service because your next higher grade is that of inspecting veterinary-surgeon, limited to a fixed establishment of six; but when a vacancy occurs in that grade, if your turn has come, and you are otherwise eligible, your claims shall be considered." In actual fact, however, it is found that the vacancies in this grade are few and far between, and that waiting for one is, even to the meritorious, a long and wearisome business. The vacancies are so few, that to promote any one to the rank of inspecting veterinary-surgeon over the head of any veterinary officer possessing the necessary qualifications for the post would be an injustice. Such promotion would in this case only be at the expense of several officers who had always done good service. What remedy, then, is proposed? The answer is easy, and it may be given by asking a question. Why should not a grade of promotion, equal to the relative rank of major be open to "first-class" veterinary-surgeons? It appears very reasonable to suggest that these officers should be promoted to a grade corresponding to that of inspecting veterinary-surgeon, for distinguished service, or as a matter of right after twenty years' service. In considering this subject, we must remember that Army surgeons are promoted to a grade equal to the relative rank of major, as a matter of course, after only twelve years' service. It is to be hoped that the "first-class" veterinary-surgeons may no longer be left to think that they are the only officers in the Army "who have nothing to gain by increased industry and nothing to lose by increased idleness?" The prizes open to the officers of the Veterinary Department are comparatively few. In time of war—and too much stress cannot be laid upon this fact—no officers are more flattered and sought after, because it is seen that none can confer so many useful and valuable services. The services of the Veterinary Department are every day becoming of more importance, and it would only be good policy to acknowledge them.

We regret that the controversy as to who was to blame for the catastrophe of Isandula should have been needlessly revived, and that there should, apparently, be a common determination to attack Lord Chelmsford. The sad story has become a matter of history, and no good purpose can be served by going over the old ground. After reading the different letters on the subject which have been published by our contemporaries, we retain the opinion which we expressed soon after the event. We imagine that no impartial person, who has mastered the circumstances of the case, can come to any other conclusion than that Lord Chelmsford, Colonel Durnford, and Colonel Pulleine—the latter in a less degree—must share the responsibility among them. Lord Chelmsford was to blame for not knowing that a large Zulu army had passed the night within five miles of his camp. He was to blame for not having laagered the waggons—an operation which he admits would have only occupied an hour. He was to blame for not having, at all events, sent his mounted men back full speed to camp, as soon as he heard that the enemy were threatening it, following as quickly as possible with his infantry. Colonel Durnford was a gallant soldier, and is now dead, but that is no reason why his memory should not bear its full share of responsibility. The fact of his having fallen does not make Lord Chelmsford guilty, nor ought it in fairness to be considered as having precluded him from vindicating himself. Colonel Durnford was ordered up to take command of the camp, and, as Lord Chelmsford justly observes, he necessarily took over the orders given to Colonel Pulleine, together with the command. Those orders were to remain on the defensive. Yet, Colonel Durnford at once galloped off some five miles with two troops of his mounted men, in order to take the offensive, and co-operate, as he imagined, with the General. Moreover, he begged Colonel Pulleine to support him if he should be pressed. Surely, in doing this he did not seek to defend the camp by assuming a temporary offensive, but deliberately assumed the simple offensive. He was, therefore, to blame. Colonel Durnford was also to blame for not having laagered the camp, notwithstanding that there were no orders to do so, for as an Engineer officer, he might have been supposed to have been specially alive to the necessity of artificial defences in such a case. Colonel Pulleine was also to blame for not having laagered the camp; for having, in spite of his orders, detached companies to meet the enemy; and for having failed to secure a constant supply of ammunition.

An officer lately commanding a battalion of Rifle Volunteers at Aldershot sends us the following very gratifying letter:—"It is customary, I know, for some people to complain that there is a want of proper feeling existing between the Line and the Auxiliary Forces. Having been at Aldershot lately, in command of a battalion, I trust you will enable me to refute such an idea. Directly my battalion marched into Aldershot, we found ourselves appointed honorary members of the messes of several of the corps in garrison, and from Generals and Staff officers downwards we met with nothing but kindness, politeness, and consideration, which we all most thoroughly appreciated. So far as I could see, the Regular troops at Aldershot showed a most praiseworthy desire to meet us on a proper footing, and for my own part, I shall look back with the utmost satisfaction to the week I spent in camp, for I received unmistakable testimony of the desire which all classes evinced to make us comfortable and at home; and it would have been gratifying to those regiments who extended to us the hospitality which their messes provided, could they have known how thoroughly their generous act was appreciated. I hope that in future we may hear no more about any such thing as jealousy, for I have learnt from experience that no feeling of the kind exists. All the Regular Army desires is to see the Volunteers conduct themselves in uniform in a proper, soldier-like manner; and if they do this, they will find firm friends amongst the paid soldiers of her Majesty. I can say this much, that the Volunteers who have been drilling at Aldershot have come away with a high opinion of the Regular soldier, and if ever the two Services should be called upon—God forbid that they should!—to shoulder their rifles together in the defence of our shores, these little attentions which the officers and men of the Volunteers have received at the hands of the officers and men of the Aldershot Division will not be forgotten by the civilian soldiery, whose aim it is to approach, if it can, the Line standard of excellence."

Lieutenant F. S. Allen, 36th Regiment, has been appointed acting aide-de-camp to Lieutenant-General H. Hamilton, commanding the Cork District, vice Captain Ewart, 78th Highlanders, resigned.

We are requested to give an unqualified denial to a most mischievous and utterly groundless report, which was first circulated throughout the provinces by the writer of a "London Letter," and has since been copied into one of the "Society" papers, to the effect that it is proposed to arraign Brigadier-General Burrows before a court-martial. No such idea has ever been as much as suggested in official quarters in India.

The French War Minister, General Farre, has just decided that four officers per infantry regiment shall be told off to follow artillery practice. After having been present at gun-practice, and learned the principal details of gunnery, these officers will visit the artillery establishments, where they will be initiated into the peculiar tactics of artillery and other matters. It is hoped that this innovation will lead to the best possible results. It is evident that this sort of training may lead a long way, if each branch of the Service is to learn the duties of the other branches.

A very valuable work on the Russian Army in Central Asia, from the pen of Colonel Kostenko, of the Intelligence Department at Tashkent, has just appeared at St. Petersburg. The author embodies in it the results of twelve years' service in Central Asia, and previous to his departure for Kuldja, to join General Kaufmann's Staff, has confided the English translation of the work to Mr. Marvin, the author of the Disastrous Russian Campaign Against the Tekke Turcomans. When we add that the work consists of over 1,200 pages of closely-printed matter, we need scarcely say that the translator has not a very easy task before him.

OUR POSITION IN AFGHANISTAN.

From the Special Correspondent of the Standard :—

"Killa Abdoola, Tuesday.—A messenger has come in from Khelat-i-Ghilzai. Col. Tanner writes that he is in communication with Gen. Roberts, whose advance guard is expected to reach Khelat-i-Ghilzai to-day. Col. Tanner is well provided with stores, and will be able to spare a portion to Gen. Roberts. A messenger has also come in from Candahar. The position there is regarded as perfectly safe. A sortie was made on the 16th, and Col. St. John reports that its result has been to secure the east face of the city from further molestation. The enemy must, however, have fought with great determination, as our loss is heavy, especially in officers. We have lost in killed and wounded about 180 men. Of officers, Gen. Brooke and Col. Newport, 28th Regt.; Major Trench and Lieut. Stevenson, 19th Bombay N.I.; Capt. Cruickshank, Royal Engineers; Lieuts. Marsh and Wood, 7th Fusiliers; and the Rev. — Gordon are killed. Col. Nimmo, 28th; Major Vandeleur, 7th; and Lieut. Wood, Transport Corps, severely wounded, and Cols. Malcolmson and Shewell slightly wounded. Gen. Brooke was killed while carrying Cruickshank, wounded, out of action. Col. St. John reports that Lieut. Maclaine, R.H.A., who was supposed to have been killed at Kushk-i-Nakhud, is a prisoner in Ayoub's camp, and is well treated. The enemy occasionally throw shells into the town, and his infantry keep up a continual fire at the ramparts. Little harm is done by the enemy's fire. The troops who deserted from the Wali, and the Ghazis, are alone occupied by the attack upon Candahar. The main bulk of Ayoub's army is three miles away, on the Herat road. Ayoub's force is now estimated at 5,000 regular infantry, 5,000 cavalry, 10,000 Ghazis, and 37 guns. Large numbers of Ghazis continue to flock down from the Khelat-i-Ghilzai road and other directions to join Ayoub's army, and Ayoub could not now retreat even if he wished it, as the Ghazis are determined to fight it out to the last. The two columns ought now to be able to combine, so as to join hands before the battle with Ayoub. Roberts will probably reach Candahar on the 29th or 30th, and there is lively regret among our troops here that we shall be late at the scene of action. Here everything is plentiful, with the exception of firewood, which is very scarce. Owing to the long drought and the two years' war, the greatest difficulty has been experienced in organising this column, the country having been denuded of transport animals and supplies. All are working hard, and wonderful progress has been made, considering the obstacles that at first beset us. All the troops are now marching towards the point of concentration, and every effort will be made to get the column forward to join hands with Roberts at Candahar. The road now appears to be quite open, and it is possible that the fighting outside Candahar has influenced Ayoub in recalling the regiments sent in this direction and in concentrating for the coming action.

Tuesday, 7.20 p.m.—It is considered here that four courses are open to Gen. Roberts. He may, after strengthening the garrison of Khelat-i-Ghilzai and holding the Tarnac Valley, turn north, cross the Argandab River, into country where supplies would be plentiful, and making a detour place himself by a rapid march in Ayoub's rear on the Herat road. Then this column pressing forward, would hem in the enemy, drive him back on the desert, and completely destroy him. Secondly, Gen. Roberts may halt at Khelat-i-Ghilzai for four days, so as to allow Gen. Phayre to reach Candahar simultaneously with himself. Thirdly, he may consider his own force to be ample to dispose of Ayoub, and may order Gen. Phayre's column to halt, until he, after defeating the enemy, opens up communication with us from Candahar. Lastly, he may push on with all speed to the relief of Candahar, leaving Phayre to advance in accordance with present plans. It is hoped here that he will choose the first of these courses. It is reported that large bodies of the Marris are raiding between Jacobabad and Sibi. The news is serious, although it will in no way affect the movements of these columns.

From the Viceroy, Aug. 24.—Following from St. John, Candahar, 21st :—Sortie took place, 16th, against village on east face of city : has secured us from further molestation on that side, but loss very heavy. Brigdr.-Gen. Brooke, Capt. Cruickshank, R.E., Col. Newport, 28th, Major Trench and Lieut. Stevenson, 19th, Lieuts. Marsh and Wood, Fusiliers, and Rev. Mr. Gordon killed. Wounded: Col. Nimmo, 28th, Major Vandeleur, 7th, and Lieut. Wood, Transport, all severely; Cols. Malcolmson and Shewell. Casualties among men about 180. Lieut. Maclaine, R.H.A., reported missing after Maiwand, prisoner in Ayoub's hands, but well treated. Enemy throws a few shells into city occasionally, and keeps up fire on ramparts from sharpshooters, but does little harm. Investment entirely trusted to Candahar troops and Ghazis, the Cabulees being encamped round Ayoub three miles off, on Herat road. A letter dated 20th, from Col. Tanner, commanding Khelat-i-Ghilzai, received at Chaman this morning, begins :—"I have heard from Roberts to-day. He is four marches off, and will be here 24th. We are all well, collecting supplies for Roberts and on Candahar road. Well off for supplies here. Roberts expects to be near Candahar on 29th."

The following particulars of the officers announced in the Viceroy's telegram as having been killed on the 16th inst., are published by the Morning Advertiser :—

Col. H. F. Brooke, a major on half-pay of the 109th Foot, and lately adjt.-gen. of the Bombay Army, with the local rank of brigdr.-gen., entered the Army in June 1854, and received his lieutenant's commission in May 1855, having landed with the 48th Regiment in the Crimea on the 21st of the preceding month. He subsequently served at the siege and fall of Sebastopol, for which he received the medal with clasp and the Turkish medal. He became a capt. in Sept. 1858, with which rank he served throughout the campaign of 1860, in China, as aide-de-camp to Sir Robert Napier, and was present at the actions of Sinho and Tangku, the assault of the Taku forts, where he was severely wounded, and the final advance on and surrender of Pekin. In these services he received the brevet of major, Feb. 15, 1861, and the medal with two clasps. The deceased officer was advanced to the rank of lieutenant-colonel in Dec. 1871, and to that of colonel in Dec. 1877. During the operations in the neighbourhood of Candahar he has been attached to the staff of the First Division of the Candahar Field Force, and, like Brigdr.-Gen. Burrows, was in command of a brigade, and after the defeat of the last-named officer at Kushk-i-Nakhud last month, Gen. Primrose sent out a part of his small force under Brigdr.-Gen. Brooke to bring in the fragments of Gen. Burrow's brigade.

In regard to Capt. Cruickshank, of the R.E., the telegram from the Viceroy gives no initials; but there is not much doubt the unfortunate officer is Capt. J. H. R. Cruickshank, of the Bombay Sappers and Miners, who, before the outbreak of hostilities, was stationed at, and did good work in, Kirkee. He had seen over 22 years' service, having entered the Army in June, 1858, became a lieutenant in August of the same year, and a captain in May, 1870. He was, we believe, in the Royal (late Bombay) Engineers, was second-in-command of the Bombay Corps of Sappers and Miners, of which he was also officiating commandant, quartermaster, and interpreter, and superintendent of the field and park train.

Lieut.-Col. W. H. Newport, Bombay S.C., wing-commander of the 28th Bombay N.I., entered the Army in Dec. 1855; became a lieut. in Oct. 1857, and served in the Indian Mutiny campaign, being present at the siege and capture of Ratghur, at the action of the Barodea, at the relief of Saugor, the capture of Garrakota, the forcing of the Muddenpore Pass, the siege and storm of Jhansi, the battle of the Betwa, and the storm of Lohari, where he was severely wounded. He also took part in the actions at Koonch, Muttra, and Galowlee; in the capture of Calpee, and the battle and capture of Gwalior. For these services he some years afterwards received the Indian Mutiny medal and the brevet of capt. and brevet major, Dec. 7, 1867. He attained his majority in Dec. 1875, and was made a brevet lieut.-col. in Dec. 1876. In April, 1877, he was appointed wing-commander of the 28th Bombay N.I., of which he was the officiating officer, second-in-command.

Major R. J. le P. Trench, 19th Bombay N.I., was borne on the General list of officers of the Bombay Infantry. He entered the Queen's East India Army in Sept. 1859, became a lieut. in Jan. 1862, and a capt. in Oct. 1869, and had only recently been promoted to the rank of major. July, 1875, he was appointed wing-officer and qrmr. of the 19th N.I.

Lieut. F. Stevenson, of the same regiment, formerly belonged to the 105th Foot, which he entered in Feb. 1870, becoming a lieut. in Oct. 1871. In Jan. 1877, he was appointed wing-officer of the 20th Bombay N.I., and was subsequently transferred to the 19th. He is also on the Bombay S.C.

Lieuts. Marsh and Wood, 2nd Batn. 7th Fusiliers, were both young officers, who had only recently joined the Service.

The Special Correspondent of the Standard telegraphed from Bombay on Thursday :—"A great sensation has been produced to-day by the news that the Government has ordered Gen. Stewart to halt his troops at Jellalabad, owing to the position of affairs at Cabul. It is reported that there is a defection among the Ameer's troops, and that a great demonstration has been made by Yakoob's party in favour of the late Ameer or his brother Ayoub. This early but striking proof of the impolicy of the hasty withdrawal of our troops — a policy most strongly condemned by nearly every military man in India—has created great excitement. The cholera is raging in Peshawur, and is daily increasing in virulence. This was only to be expected at this season, and the certainty of severe losses among the retiring troops was one of the reasons which have been most strongly urged against the policy of the withdrawal of the troops during the hottest and most unhealthy period of the year."

The ground will be kept by the 5th Royal Irish Lancers and 6th and 10th Brigade Depôts.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR MEDAL.

"L. M." writes :—"In your issue of the 7th inst., you published particulars of G.O. 103, relative to the further issue of the South-African war medal. On the face of it, this order is explicitly worded so as to exclude certain officers and to include others. It states that hostilities commenced on Sept. 26, 1877, and 'the successful conclusion of the operations' was Dec. 2, 1879, being a series of wars successively against the Galekas, Gaikas, and other Kaffir tribes, Pokwani, the Griquas, the Zulus, and Secocoeni. During this period, of course, every officer and soldier in Natal, the Transvaal, &c., were on the strength of the Army in the field, and liable to any and every duty, yet this order is so worded as to exclude many (beyond a certain favoured few), who were not in certain spots between Sept. 1 and Nov. 11. Suspicious this, to say the least of it, considering that during the whole of this time the troops were in an enemy's country. This above specific period of 22 days, commencing Nov. 11, doubtless includes the day in which a certain officer, who shall be nameless, reached the Secocoeni country. If it is necessary so carefully to limit and particularise the issue of the clasp for the Secocoeni affair, why not restrict it to the date of attack, and further exclude all troops at the outlying forts? Anyone who went by post-cart to Secocoeni's stronghold, or one of the outlying forts, for one day, between Nov. 11 and Dec. 2, but who never saw a shot fired, gets that from which the pioneers in that country are excluded. There is another point that doubtless has been noticed,—no mention is made about a clasp for Ulundi, the climax of Cetewayo's overthrow. The absence may seem strange, but it is not surprising, for the elements did not admit of a certain officer being at Ulundi in time for the fight. The medal should be for troops engaged in South African wars from Sept. 26, 1877, to Dec. 2, 1879, with three clasps, respectively for the Old Colony, Zululand, and the Secocoeni affair. By the way, if we should have another war in the East, I suppose the old Crimean medal would answer, simply by attaching a clasp stating the year; such trifles as Alma, Inkerman, &c., will be absorbed in four figures denoting the year."

THE RIDINGMASTERS' CASE.

"Cavalry" writes :—"The position of all officers are constantly being improved, except that of Cavalry ridingmasters. The claims of these officers the Authorities simply ignore. Nothing has been done for them since the Warrant of 1857. Before that Warrant they were combatant officers, holding the rank of lieutenant, but as they had not the means when they became senior to purchase their troops when a vacancy occurred, many of them found themselves in a very awkward position. To obviate this difficulty, the Warrant of 1857 was brought out, by which they were to hold the relative rank of lieutenant only, with no further promotion. Now, Purchase being abolished, there is no further necessity for the ridingmaster holding relative rank, his duties being those of a combatant officer, which is obvious to every cavalry officer in the Service, when they consider that he is supposed to attend all parades, mounted and dismounted, and do everything else the same as themselves, if not otherwise employed, except take command, which his relative rank does not entitle him to do. So regardless of all qualifications or length of service, they are always placed as serrefiles, while a combatant officer of a few months' standing takes command, although, at the same time, he is perhaps only a pupil of the ridingmaster's. But this is not the lowest degradation to which he is subjected. It frequently happens that a serjeant of some 5 years' service is commanding, while an old and experienced ridingmaster of 25 years' service and 15 as an officer, is the distinguished serrefile. A troop was detached as a support for a battery of Artillery, a serjeant commanded, an experienced officer was the serrefile. This is only one instance. Again, the ridingmaster's position not being clearly defined, leaves it to the commanding officer to interpret it. According to his own views, each one varying more or less, some not allowing him to do anything except school work, if they can possibly help it; others making him do everything they think fit; others, again, treating him entirely as a combatant officer, allowing him to perform the duties of adjt., or leaving him in command of depôts, &c. Can any one imagine himself in a position in which it is impossible to attain any honour or distinction of any kind, whilst at the same time it is the simplest thing possible to fix on him discredit which should be borne by others? Such is the position of the Cavalry ridingmaster, doing the duties of a combatant, but debarred the honours and advantages of the combatant ranks, not even the slightest sign of promotion being granted to him in the anomalous position he at present holds. The ridingmaster of 10, 15, or 20 years' standing, with 20, 25, or 30 years' service, is no more than the young ridingmaster just appointed with 10 or 12 years' service, except an increase of 3s. per diem, after 15 years' commissioned rank. A bright prospect to look forward to with 25 years' service, utterly worn out with trouble and anxiety, with no hope, no future; while all around him are progressing, he alone stands fixed."

The Army.

1st Life Guards. The Morning Post says:—"The circumstance of a non-commissioned officer of the regiment being refused admission whilst in uniform to a public room in an hotel in Windsor has been much discussed in the Royal Borough. On Sunday morning, at Holy Trinity Church, the Rev. Arthur Robins, one of the Queen's chaplains and chaplain to the Household Brigade, preaching to a very large congregation, with great warmth and indignation characterised the practice as an insult to soldiers and a gross affront to the Queen's uniform."

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). In consequence of the Lord Advocate having petitioned against the return of Capt. Milne Home for Berwick last month, the Conservatives of that borough have presented a petition against the return of Sir S. C. Marjoribanks, M.P. for Berwick, at the general election, on the grounds of bribery, treating, and undue influence.

7th Hussars. Capt. G. H. Powell, late of the regiment, has been appointed to a company in the 1st Hants R.V.C.

14th Hussars. Lieut. Burn sailed for India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Jumna, to rejoin head-quarters. Lieut.-Col. W. Arden, J.P., D.L., surgeon upon half-pay, for many years in medical charge of the regiment, and lately major in the King's Own Stafford Militia, died at Burton-on-Trent on the 14th inst.

15th Hussars. A telegram to the Standard, dated Quetta, Aug. 21, says:—"The 15th Hussars have marched in to-day in splendid condition, perfectly fit to take the field at once." Lieut.-Col. Sir Robert Gyll, whose death is announced as having occurred on the 17th inst., at Cumbernauld Lodge, Feltham, Middlesex, at the age of 75, was for many years lieut. of the Yeomen of the Guard, and formerly held a commission in the 15th.

17th Lancers. Lieut. Steele sailed for India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Jumna, en route to join head-quarters. 2nd Lieut. F. D. H. St. Quintin, son of the late Col. M. C. D. St. Quintin, died at Scarborough on the 18th inst., aged 21 years. The deceased entered the Army, May 1, 1878, and served last year in the Zulu campaign. 2nd Lieut. Butler has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

20th Hussars. We regret to announce the death of Lieut. Sir J. C. Burke, Bart., which occurred at Dublin a few days ago from blood-poisoning. The deceased entered the Army Jan. 22, 1879, and became Lieut., Nov. 30, 1879.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The body of Capt. G. S. Mainguy, 10th Brig., who has been missing since July 29, was on Saturday last found in a thicket near Maidstone. A revolver was found near the body, and it had evidently been discharged into the mouth of the deceased. An inquest was held at Yalding on Monday on the body. The deceased, who was an abstemious man, had been in a depressed state of mind since his return from India. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that deceased committed suicide whilst in a state of temporary insanity.

Major-Gen. J. Singleton, lieut.-col. on the Retired Full-Pay List, died after a long illness and much suffering at his residence, Quinville Abbey, Clare, Ireland, a few days ago, in his 55th year. The deceased obtained his commission as 2nd lieut. in 1845. He served in the Eastern campaign of 1854-5, including the affairs of Bulganac and M'Kenzie's Farm, the battles of Alma, Balaklava, and Inkerman, the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and the repulse of the sortie on October 26, 1854; brevet of major, (medal with four clasps), Knight of the Legion of Honour, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal. He served in India in 1858, and commanded the Artillery in the repulse of the mutinous Sepoys at Mooltan on March 31 in that year.

The Jumna, which sailed for India on Saturday last, took out a draft for E Baty. B Brig. R.H.A., under command of Major Knox and Lieut. Cunningham; also Capts. W. J. Tydd and W. Taylor.

Capt. J. M. Tabor has been appointed adjt. of the 3rd Brig., at Newbridge, and will join on Sept. 4, in succession to Capt. Disney.

Lieut.-Col. L. Griffiths does not, we understand, contemplate retiring till next year.

The London Gazette announces the appointment of Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. H. Lefroy, K.C.M.G., C.B., to the administration of the Government of the Colony of Tasmania and its Dependencies.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The A Troop, R.E. Train, marched a few days ago from Aldershot, and encamped at Runnymede, near Egham, for a month's pontoon practice on the Thames. The site of the camp is on the Surrey shore of the river, about a quarter of a mile from the "Bells of Ouseley," and opposite Magna Charta Island. Major Bond has command of the troop, the strength of which, including officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, is about 200.

Lieut. H. H. Hart, garrison instructor, Lucknow, has passed the higher-proficiency examination in Urdu, and Lieut. G. Kunhard the high-proficiency in Hindee.

The 15th Company, which for many years past has been employed at South Kensington Museum, has received orders to join the School of Military Engineering, Chatham, prior to embarking for Bermuda. They will leave on Oct. 23. It is stated to be the intention of the authorities not to have a company of Engineers at Kensington for the future, but that there will be a detachment of men sent from Chatham.

At a parade of the corps at Chatham on Saturday, Senior Regimental Qrmr.-Serjt. W. Sibley and Corpl. Milligan were each presented with a silver medal and gratuity for long service and good conduct.

Lieut. C. R. Low, late I.N., writes:—"I trust you will give me space in your columns to correct an injustice, inadvertently committed, in my last work, Soldiers of the Victorian Age. Major W. P. Jones, R.E., has drawn my attention to a statement in the footnote on page 104, Vol. II., of that work, in which I placed the command of the Royal Engineers at Ulundi under Major Chard, V.C., and Capt. Annesley. On the memorable 4th of July, 1879, the Engineers and Pioneers were commanded by Major (then Capt.) Jones, who, with the other commanding officers, was officially thanked for his services in that action. In my statement, I was guided by the Times' correspondent, whose vivid accounts were generally trustworthy. I may here also mention that when the 5th Company R.E., then under the command of Capt. Jones, was fired into at Fort Newdigate at 9 p.m. on June 6, a complimentary order to that gallant officer and his company was read out to the whole of Woods' Flying Column; and I believe I am right in stating that, with the exception of the companies at Rorke's Drift, his was the only one specially mentioned in the war."

6th Regiment. Capt. Grundy has been appointed adjutant of the 2nd Warwickshire R.V.C., with effect from the 30th ult. 2nd Lieut. Twigg, 1st Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

8th King's. A telegram from Quetta states that "Brigdr.-Gen. Newdigate having vacated his command of the brigade in Kurum, Col. Grogan, of the 8th Foot, succeeds him." Capts. Orme and Granger remain with the 2nd Batn. on promotion, and Capt. Thompson with the 1st Batn.

9th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Daunt, 2nd Batn., has been appointed to the command of the 1st Brigade, 2nd Division, of the Afghan Field Force, vice Brigdr. Roberts, 5th Foot, ordered to England on promotion as Major-Gen.

11th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Light, 2nd Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

13th Light Infantry. Lieut.-Col. England is transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn., on promotion. Major Allfrey remains with the 1st Batn., to which Capt. Parr is posted from the Supernumerary List.

14th Regiment. Lieut. St. George, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for nine months, on medical certificate.

17th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Humfrey, 2nd Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

19th Regiment. Lieut. and Adjt. Briggs is named for one of the vacant companies, and the high character which the 2nd Batn. bore at Aldershot would seem to give both him and Lieut. Franklyn a strong claim, notwithstanding that they have only six years' service.

20th Regiment. Capt. Festing, 2nd Batn., who was lately promoted from the 1st into the 2nd Batn., has applied for permission to retire on half-pay.

21st Fusiliers. Brevet Major Jackson and 2nd Lieut. Dawson, 1st Batn., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

22nd Regiment. The 2nd Batn. at Allahabad, will, it is believed, shortly proceed to Morar, to relieve the 62nd Regiment.

24th Regiment. At 6 o'clock on the morning of the 12th inst., the 2nd Batn., under command of Lieut.-Col. Degacher, C.B., was formed up in quarter-column on the New Mole Parade, Gibraltar, preparatory to embarkation on board H.M.S. Orontes. Lord Napier of Magdala was present, and after riding round the column, addressed a few words of farewell to the regiment, congratulating them on their good conduct during the short time he had been in command. The regiment was then marched down to the wharf by successive companies, being played off the parade-ground by the bands of the brigade, which were massed. The embarkation on board the Orontes proceeded without delay, under the direction of Col. Flood, C.B., A.Q.M.G. While the embarkation was in progress, his Excellency proceeded on board, accompanied by Lady Napier of Magdala, and after remaining on board for upwards of half-an-hour, said good-bye to Lieut.-Col. Degacher and the officers of the regiment, and returned on shore. Shortly before 10 o'clock the Orontes got under weigh and passed out, with the band of the batn. playing "Auld lang Syne," those assembled at the Mole Head giving three hearty cheers. A Blue-book containing further correspondence respecting the affairs of South Africa has been issued. The despatches are 32 in number, besides four which appear in an appendix, the earliest being dated Feb. 13, and the latest July 20 in this year. An appendix contains some correspondence respecting the burial of the dead at Isandhlwana. Brevet Major C. J. Bromhead, of the 24th Regt., was sent with a detachment last autumn to Isandhlwana for that purpose. He reported:—"The battle-field was thoroughly cleaned, all débris removed and buried or burnt. The remains still unburied were decently interred, as well as such as were found only partly covered. I could not obtain the necessary information to enable me to identify individual graves, so I caused three cairns to be erected at points where the largest numbers had been buried; sixteen young trees (eucalyptus), successfully removed from the Intabankulu Mission-station by Capt. Harvey, were planted in a circle round the lower cairn." In consequence of the action of the weather having exposed some of the bodies, a fresh party was sent there after Christmas, under Lieut. O'Connell, 60th Rifles, who accomplished the work thoroughly between March 13 and 26. He believes, however, that,—"A few stray bones will be found from time to time at Isandhlwana for many years to come. In the first instance, many men were buried in water-courses; their remains will in some cases be uncovered in course of time by the action of the water. The bodies of some of the men who fell into the water-courses and were not buried have been covered with sand or gravel by the action of the water. As this gravel or sand is moved by the streams changing their course, these bones will of necessity be exposed, and will ultimately be washed down or covered over in another site by more sand." There is a sketch map of Isandhlwana attached, which shows the nature of the ground and the position of the graves. Capt. Farquhar is posted to the 2nd Batn., on being brought on to the establishment from the Supernumerary List, and will proceed to India to join head-quarters.

26th Cameronians. On arrival at Malta from England, the regiment was to take over quarters at Pembroke Camp. Colour-Serjt. Barron has been transferred to the staff of the Roscommon Militia, at Boyle.

27th Inniskillings. Capt. Bayly, having vacated his civil appointment at Cyprus, leaves England in the course of a few days for Hong Kong, to rejoin head-quarters.

31st Regiment. Lieut. Carruthers, a candidate for the Indian S.C., is to take up duty in the Madras Presidency.

34th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Chapman succeeds to the command, vice Lieut.-Col. Puget; Brevet Major Malcolm obtaining the majority, and Lieut. Rose the company.

35th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Yate, a probationer for the Indian S.C., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

41st Regiment. H.M.S. Orontes, Capt. Kinahan, arrived at Gibraltar on the morning of the 11th inst. from Queenstown, having on board the head-quarters and service companies, under command of Col. Allan. The Orontes proceeded at once alongside the New Mole Wharf, and commenced discharging baggage without delay. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the 41st Regiment landed, and were formed up on the New Mole Parade, being there met by the bands of the several regiments of the infantry brigade, which accompanied it to its temporary quarters at the North Front. His Excellency Lord Napier of Magdala was present on the parade, and watched the regiment march off. The regiment moved into the Casemate Barracks the following afternoon.

45th Regiment. Major Hayward succeeds to the command, vice Lieut.-Col. Preston, placed on half-pay on completing five years' service in the appointment, Brevet Major Callwell becoming major. Lieut. Swann, a candidate for the Indian S.C., is to take up duty in the Bombay Presidency. 2nd Lieut. Plumer has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

ROYAL MARINES.

The Admiralty has issued Fleet Circular 26, dated Aug. 10, 1880, relating to the "Issuing prices of Marine clothing, appointments, &c.," which cancels Fleet Circular 50, of July 17, 1879.

Serious cause for dissatisfaction exists, and is bearing fruit among the battalion of Royal Marines who have been sent to Ireland. An order has been received to the effect that they are to be placed on the same footing there as if they were in barracks at their respective head-quarters as regards fuel, light, and allowances. Ordinarily, when Marines are sent from home, they are placed on ship's books, and are able to make allotment for the maintenance of their wives and families during their absence. But this they cannot now do, and the cost of commission for Post-office orders, stamps, &c., for regular remittances home amount to a considerable item, where the total sum available for the maintenance of a family is measured by pence, and not by pounds. They, moreover, by their absence, sacrifice the privilege of drawing rations, bread, meat, groceries, and vegetables, a share of which goes a long way towards keeping a family. The result is that many women and children are suffering great privations, and in some cases have had to apply for pauper relief. It is so essentially important to keep soldiers who are charged with the unpleasant duty of repressing disaffection among their own countrymen in a healthy state of mind and discipline, that the effect of the order to which we refer cannot have been well considered before it was issued.—Western Morning News.

The appointment of Colonel Second-Commandant at the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines becomes vacant by the resignation of appointment and retirement of Col. Gregory. This is the first of those officers who have been passed over for Commandant of a division, who has taken it into his own hands to relieve himself of the somewhat unpleasant position of being junior to those formerly junior to him, and I anticipate that others will shortly follow the example thus set. Col. Gregory will be recommended for a step in rank, on being placed on the Retired List.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Medals for long service and good conduct have been awarded to Charles Frampton and Serjt. George Long.

57th Regiment. Capt. Hughes-Hallett has been granted leave of absence to the 10th prox., pending his embarkation for Malta, to assume the duties of garrison instructor at that station. Capt. Creed, D.A.A.G., Dublin District, having been granted leave of absence to Oct. 16, his duties meantime are to be performed by Capt. Garstin. Lieut. Lyde, a candidate for the Indian S.C., is to take up duty in the Bombay Presidency. The London Gazette announces the appointment of Brevet Major Lord Gifford, V.C., to be Colonial Secretary for the Colony of Western Australia, and Senior Member of the Legislative Council of that Colony.

60th Rifles. Capt. Tilden and 2nd Lieut. Eaton, 2nd Batn., and 2nd Lieut. Kinloch 4th Batn., sailed for India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Jumna.

62nd Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies are named for removal to Aden shortly, preparatory to returning to England. 2nd Lieut. Loch is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to do duty with the 3rd Goorkhas, on probation.

66th Regiment. The losses of the regiment in the recent action in Afghanistan are now stated to have been 282.

73rd Regiment. Capt. Turner, D.A.A.G. for Musketry on the Bengal Staff, has had his period of Staff service extended to March 17, 1881. Lieut. Harris has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

75th Regiment will shortly be moved from Aldershot to Chatham to replace the 26th Regiment, which has embarked for Malta.

78th Highlanders. Capt. Sargent has vacated his appointment as A.D.C. to Lieut.-Gen. Willis, C.B., commanding the York District, and sailed for India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Jumna, to rejoin head-quarters.

79th Highlanders. The General officer commanding the 1st Infantry Brigade at Aldershot has been directed to hold a draft, consisting of Capt. Murray and 154 men, in readiness to embark for Gibraltar to join head-quarters.

80th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Ussher sailed for India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Jumna, to join the Indian S.C., on probation. 2nd Lieut. Colomb has applied for transfer to the 66th Regt., for the purpose of seeing active service in the field in Afghanistan.

89th Regiment. Capt. Cuthbert has been granted leave from India to England for six months.

99th Regiment. Lieut. MacMullen sailed for India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Jumna.

103rd Fusiliers. Capt. Pelly-Clarke is to be brought on to the establishment from the Supernumerary List, vice Capt. Davidson, retired.

104th Fusiliers. Capt. Gordon-Short has been selected for the adjutancy of the 3rd Durham Rifle Volunteers. Capt. A. Willes, late of the regiment, died at North Berwick on the 18th inst., aged 49 years.

105th Light Infantry. Major Way is about to retire on half-pay. Capt. Davy is to join the depôt at Pontefract for two years, vice Way, promoted. Capt. Symons has requested that his name may be removed from the list of candidates for appointment as an adjutant in the Auxiliary Forces.

Rifle Brigade. Previous to the departure of the 1st Batn. for India, the officers and men were inspected on Saturday by her Majesty at Portsmouth. As compared with many regiments in the Army, the Rifle Brigade may almost be said to be an organisation of yesterday. It was originally raised from detachments of the 1st, 21st, 23rd, 25th, 27th, 29th, 49th, 55th, 67th, 69th, 71st, 79th, 85th, and 92nd Regiments of Foot, and was at first distinguished as "Manningham's Sharpshooters," from the name of its colonel and the fact of its being armed with rifles. From 1800 to 1802 it was known as the Rifle Corps, from 1802 to 1816 as the Old 95th, and from 1816 to 1862 as the Rifle Brigade. At the time of his death Prince Albert was its Colonel-in-Chief, and upon his death, in 1861, the Queen bestowed upon it the name which it now bears, "The Prince Consort's Own Rifle Brigade." On the death of his father, the Prince of Wales became its Colonel-in-Chief, which position he held till his Royal Highness was lately appointed Colonel of the Household Cavalry, when he was succeeded by the Duke of Connaught. It will thus be seen that her Majesty, who is greatly influenced by her domestic sympathies, is peculiarly interested in the career of the Rifle Brigade, and her kindly and gracious conduct in going specially from Osborne to inspect the battalion on board ship was, perhaps, influenced to some extent by the circumstance that its present Colonel-in-Chief, the Duke of Connaught, who is absent from England, was precluded from bidding farewell to the officers and men of his regiment. The Brigade, under the command of Lieut.-Col. E. W. P. Clinton, arrived at the south railway jetty in the dockyard at half-past 12. The battalion consisted of 24 officers, six staff serjeants, 37 serjeants, 17 drummers and fifers, 39 corporals, and 745 rank and file, including 20 bandsmen. A little before 1 o'clock Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, accompanied by his staff, arrived at the jetty. His Serene Highness contented himself with a casual look at the troops as they prepared to go on board. Shortly afterwards the royal yacht Elfin, Com. Goldsmith, steamed up, having on board the Prince and Princess of Wales, and Princes Edward and George of Wales. The visit was of an entirely unofficial and unceremonial character, the Prince being in plain clothes, Mrs. Adrian Hope, Admiral of the Fleet Sir Henry Keppel, and Gen. De la Cherratte, formerly leader of the Pontifical Zouaves, accompanied their Royal Highnesses. The Royal party were received by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Admiral Ryder, Admiral Foley, and other officials, and Lieut.-Col. Lord E. P. Clinton, of the Rifle Brigade, on coming forward, was warmly shaken by the hand by the Prince and Princess. Their Royal Highnesses then drove off to Government House to luncheon. A little before 4 the party returned to the jetty, Prince Leopold, who had in the meantime returned from London on his way to Osborne, occupying a seat in the Royal carriage with the Prince and Princess of Wales and Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar. Previous to returning to the Elfin, the party proceeded on board the Jumna, through which their Royal Highnesses were conducted by Admiral Ryder and Capt. Parsons. The inspection lasted about an hour, and before leaving the whole of the officers of the Brigade were severally introduced to the Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince Leopold, each one being shaken cordially by the hand. The particulars of her Majesty's visit are thus recorded in the Court Circular, of Sunday :—"The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, and attended by the Dowager Marchioness of Ely, the Hon. Harriet Phipps, the Hon. Mary Lascelles, Lieut.-Gen. the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby, K.C.B., Major-Gen. the Hon. Arthur Hardinge, C.B., Major-Gen. Sir M. Biddulph, K.C.B., Capt. Edwards, R.E., and the Master of the Household, went to Portsmouth yesterday afternoon on board her Majesty's yacht Alberta (Capt. Thomson), and went on board H.M.S. Jumna (Capt. Parsons), where her Majesty was received by Admiral Ryder, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, Lieut.-Gen. H.S.H. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, C.B., Rear-Admiral the Hon. Fitzgerald Foley, and Lieut.-Col. Lord Edward Clinton, commanding the 1st Batn. Rifle Brigade, which embarked on board the Jumna during the forenoon for service in India. Her Majesty was conducted round the ship by Capt. Parsons and Lord Edward Clinton, and saw the men of the battalion assembled on the troop deck. At the conclusion of the inspection, the officers of the battalion, and the officers of other regiments proceeding to India at the same time, had the honour of being presented to the Queen by Lord Edward Clinton. On leaving the ship the Royal yacht Alberta, with her Majesty on board, and the Victoria and Albert following in attendance, gave three cheers to the battalion on board the Jumna, which were returned by the battalion and ship's company, which manned yards." The officers who embarked with the battalion were Lieut.-Col. Lord E. W. P. Clinton, commanding; Major C. T. Bunbury, Brevet Major Fryer; Capts. Eccles, the Hon. T. C. Scott, Burnell, Lord Torphichen, Bagot, Norcott, and the Hon. C. D. Home; Lieuts. Burn (inst. of musketry), A. Hervey, Wegg-Prosser, Metcalfe (adjt.), Lamb, Drummond, and Astley; 2nd Lieuts. Hunter, Lascelles, the Hon R. Baillie-Hamilton, Russell, Vans Agnew, and the Hon. A. C. E. Somerset; Qrmr. Markland. Major Deedes and Capt. Wingfield-Stratford, 4th Batn., also took passage in the Jumna. Lieut.-Col. Nicholl is transferred from the 1st to the 3rd Batn. on promotion, Major Dugdale from the 2nd to the 1st Batn., and Capt. Bowles from the 1st to the 3rd Batn.; Capts. Cuffe and Sherston remain with the 2nd Batn.

6th Provisional Battalion. This battalion, made up of detachments of the 37th and 40th Middlesex, and 1st, 5th, and 8th Surrey, under command of Lieut.-Col. Ommanney, which had been encamped on Church Plateau, North Camp, from the 14th inst., completed its week's work and left Aldershot on Saturday last. The battalion underwent inspection at 6 a.m. on Saturday on the Queen's Parade, Major-Gen. Peyton being the inspecting officer. At the conclusion of the movements, Gen. Peyton addressed the battalion, complimenting it most highly on the manner in which it had passed through the ordeal. He had, he said, had several Volunteer battalions under his observation, but this one had certainly acquitted itself the best of any of them, for there had been an entire absence of talking in the ranks, and the captains, all of whom he had called out to drill the battalion, had shown a thorough knowledge of their duties. He was highly pleased with the result of the inspection, and should make a most favourable report. The battalion struck its camp at mid-day, being specially complimented by the Ordnance Store Department for the clean state of its camp and the admirable arrangements made for the return of stores. The staff of the battalion was provided by the 5th Surrey R.V., and it is to the great exertions of Col. Ommanney, Major and Adjt. Urquhart, and Capt. and Acting-Qrmr. Nevill, 1st Surrey, that the success of the week's instruction is largely due. The other officers of the battalion consisted of Major Alt, Capts. White, Leese, Gruggen, and Burn, and 2nd Lieut. Groom, 40th Middlesex; Capt. Sayer and 2nd Lieuts. Stedall, Burkett, and Owen, 37th Middlesex; Capt. Fourdrinier, Lieut. Anderson, and 2nd Lieut. Selby, 1st Surrey; Major Rugge-Price, Capt. Nettleship, and Lieut. Western, and Surg. G. F. White, 5th Surrey; and Capt. Haddan and 2nd Lieuts. Newitt and Low, 8th Surrey.

DOWNING STREET, Aug. 23, 1880.

The Queen has appointed Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. H. Lefroy, K.C.M.G., C.B., to Administer the Government of the Colony of Tasmania and its Dependencies.

DOWNING STREET, Aug. 24, 1880.

INDIA.

An official notification states that the Government of India offers a prize of £100 for the best hygienic manual for the use of British soldiers in India. The manual, says the official notification, must "be without theories"—that is to say, "thoroughly practical, showing the ordinary causes affecting health, the special dangers to health to which British soldiers are exposed in India, and more particularly during their first year in the country, and the best means by which these dangers may be averted." The successful essay will be printed at the public expense, and become State property. Competitors must send their MSS. to the Military Secretary, Calcutta, not later than the last day of next March. The essay "must not cover more than fifty or sixty pages of print, of small pica octavo size."

Major-Ge n. Hatch, R.A.,Inspector-General of Ordnance and Magazines, retires, it is said, from the Service next month.

The following article 63*a* of the Royal Warrant of May 1, 1878, as amended by the Royal Warrant of Jan. 10, 1880, has been made applicable to the Indian Army:—"In the event of a General or other officer desiring to change his aide-de-camp, or of the aide-de-camp wishing to resign his appointment, it shall not be competent for the General officer to select another officer for the appointment until such time as there shall be a vacancy which will absorb a seconded officer in the regiment or corps to which the aide-de-camp originally appointed may belong."

It is announced that the provisions of G.G.O. No. 813 of 1876, on the subject of the leave of officers of the British Service holding staff appointments in India, the tenure of which is limited to five years, are applicable also to British officers on the Indian establishments holding such appointments who are not seconded.

The Madras Times hears that the Government of India have at length sanctioned the proposal for the permanent withdrawal of British troops from Trichinopoly, and the abolition of the southern command in the Madras Presidency, the station duties of Trichinopoly being performed by a station staff officer of the third class. It has also been decided that in future the detachment of British infantry at Maliyapuram shall be relieved from Fort St. George, instead of from Cannanore.

Various rumours and speculations are rife regarding the changes to be effected in the Commissariat Department, in conformity with the suggestions made in the report of the Indian Army Commission. A large amount of work of the Commissariat is to be detached and separated from the department. The Keddah establishments are to be made over to the Civil Department, and all supplies are to be made by regimental arrangements. It is said that there will be two Comys.-Gen. in the Bengal Presidency, viz., one for the Presidency and the other for the Punjab Division. A Director-General of Stores is also to be appointed. As several senior officers of the department are likely to retire next year, it is rumoured that Lieut.-Col. J. V. Hunt is to be the Comy.-Gen. of the Presidency Division, and Major A. R. Badcock is to be the Comy.-Gen. of the Punjab Circle. Both of these officers are now on field-service.

Remittances allowed to military men at the Government rate of exchange for the year are in future to be restricted to the letter of the order sanctioning home payments for the benefit of the remitter's family. An officer may not even take advantage of a brother officer's not requiring to send home the full amount allowed to his rank to supplement his own remittances.

The appointment of Col. C. M. MacGregor, Bengal S.C. Deputy Adjt.-Gen. and Deputy Qrmr.-Gen. in Northern Afghanistan, to be Chief of the Staff to Lieut.-Gen. Sir D. M. Stewart, commanding the Northern Afghanistan Field Force, is gazetted. Col. MacGregor assumed the duties some time ago.

PURCHASE OFFICERS.

"An Old Soldier" writes:—"You have advocated the case of the Purchase Captains so strongly for them, that I would wish to call your attention to what I regard as the hardest part of their case. A friend of mine with twenty-three years' service, brought in from half-pay, is serving in a regiment with a captain of only seven years' service. This officer has, of course, paid nothing for his position, whereas the Purchase officer has invested £2,600 for his company; consequently, in addition to the risk of losing his money by death, he actually, with his long service, receives £130 pay less than his junior by 16 years. Surely it would be better for the good of the Service to let an officer so placed either count his half-pay towards pension, or put in the remainder of his time in the Militia or Reserve Forces, than to keep him a justly discontented man serving against his will, knowing that he never can hope to a higher grade, and consequently taking no interest in his work or his regiment."

A singular boat-race took place at the recent annual regatta in Shetland, where the women are noted for their ability in managing boats. The Sheriff and Admiral Thomas, who was in Lerwick at the time, offered to act as coxswain to three Shetland women in a contest between them and a crew of men from the revenue cutter Eagle. The match was keenly contested, but ultimately was easily won by the Shetlanders by over four seconds on a half-mile course.

A Parliamentary paper has been issued from which it appears that the deposits in the military savings banks during the year which ended on March 31, 1877, amounted to £191,179. The number of accounts open on the same date was 17,286. The balance due to depositors was £278,692, and the total amount of the fund for military savings banks up to Aug. 6 of this year was £331,129.

Army and Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1880.

SURVEYING-VESSELS having been exempted from capture in time of war, the Hydrographic Service came to be looked upon as a civil branch of the Navy. Masters flocked to it; and soon came to regard it as theirs by right divine, for who more competent to prepare charts of harbours, channels, or unknown coasts than the Navigator, who from his youth had been taught to use and read them? The executive officer was purposely represented as unable and incompetent to do such work, and was carefully excluded from the list of Surveyors for many years. At last he obtained a footing, and made a name for himself in the Surveying Service. But how jealously was he not watched and criticised by the Masters! Imbued with that commercial instinct which has often been summed up before now as amounting to two and two make three, or five, according to how one's interests are affected, the Masters, while forced to tolerate the presence of executive officers in their midst, left no stone unturned to limit their numbers. We are speaking of the good old days, some twenty years ago, when Masters were in charge of all the surveys then in progress, with but one, or at most two exceptions. The potency of command, however, was soon found to be all too powerful for the old navigator, who, failing to apply it aright, soon proved himself infinitely better in all respects without it. Scarcely a survey was to be found where the Masters employed on it had not seriously disagreed, if not openly quarrelled. In Australia, at one time, they were all at sixes and sevens. The executive officer had to be introduced in many cases, solely to keep the peace. In Melbourne, on Commander Robinson departing this life, a lieutenant and a navigator were left to continue the work, pending the appointment of a new commanding officer. The navigator, using the influence of his father-in-law, a member of the Legislative Council of Victoria, succeeded in having himself recognised by the Colonial Government as the senior surveyor and successor to Commander Robinson. The lieutenant continued to assist in the work of the survey, having referred the matter to the Admiralty; but until the decision was made known, he drew no pay, nor did he sign any document, or commit any act which could be construed as admitting the superiority in rank claimed by the navigator. Thus the precedent of an executive officer serving under a navigator of inferior relative rank was avoided, much to the satisfaction of their Lordships, who, on reversing the state of things brought about by the navigator, and making him resign the executive command of the survey into the hands of the lieutenant, were pleased to inform the latter that his conduct had been characterised by great moderation, and that he had avoided in any way delaying the work of the survey. The lieutenant's "great moderation" proved his ultimate professional ruin. Within three months, the colonial influence of the navigator succeeded in getting the lieutenant ordered afloat, to enable the navigator to be given the command—a position he retained for some ten years—while the losses incurred by the lieutenant in the discharge of the public service were never refunded, simply because the navigating element within the Department at Whitehall was straining every nerve to remove the Executive officers from the Surveying list. This element succeeded in securing for Captain Evans, an old Master, the post of Hydrographer, in succession to Admiral Richards; and although in the Regular Service the two lines have been merged into one, in the Hydrographic Service they remain distinct, to the great detriment of the Surveying Service. Disquieting reports have long been at work with this Department of the Admiralty, and it is well remembered that poor Captain Davis was thrust into retirement to admit of his rival obtaining the increased pay and position to which Captain Davis had long been regarded as the rightful aspirant. It is now rumoured, incredible as it may appear, that Mr. Blakeney is to succeed to the Hydrographic chair. The claims of such officers as Captains Sir George Nares, K.C.B., Bedford, Wharton, and others, would thus be ignored, in order to advance an officer who, joining the Service as a Master's assistant, changed over to the paymaster's line, and has since earned the reputation of being an excellent copyist, and a good draughtsman. We are at all times careful as to the nature of the remarks made in these columns, especially when they reflect on a public department or the officials connected therewith, and the Admiralty will find that our word of warning has not been given without cause.

Mr. Childers intends taking but a very short holiday, and in October the Army changes which are to herald the Session of 1881 will commence to be shaped. We believe there is every probability of the Territorial Regiments, as recommended by Colonel Stanley's Committee, being carried out, and it is thought that some steps may possibly be taken towards the future selection of officers for the command of regiments.

We are, indeed, glad to learn that a committee is being assembled at the War Office to inquire into the present condition of the Veterinary Department, and suggest steps for improving the position of its officers, There is now, therefore, some reasonable hope for the Army veterinary-surgeon, who serves under such serious disadvantages, with regard to the officers of the other administrative departments.

Captains T. a'B. Sargent and J. H. Ewart, 78th Highlanders, the former A.D.C. to Lieutenant-General Willis, C.B., at York, the latter to Lieutenant-General H. Hamilton, at Cork, have vacated their appointments in order to proceed to India, in the hope of seeing service in Afghanistan.

We learn from China that Colonel Gordon, R.E., "Chinese Gordon," who arrived in Hong Kong on July 3 by the P. and O. steamer Avoca from Bombay, proceeded to Canton on the 5th, and visited the Viceroy, returning to Hong Kong on the 7th, when he accepted the hospitality of Governor Hennessy. On July 9 he left Hong Kong for Shanghai, and was to proceed thence to Peking to visit H.E. Li Hung-chang. Colonel Gordon has received a year's furlough, and his mission to China is merely a visit of pleasure, but he intends to advise the Viceroy of Chihli strongly to avoid coming to a rupture with Russia. He disclaims any intention of entering the Chinese service.

It is generally believed that the present popular Surveyor-General of the Ordnance is the chief adviser of the Government on the frontier to be decided on in India. With the extreme views held by Sir John Adye, we should not be surprised to hear of the retirement of our Army behind the Indus.

Colonel C. G. Arbuthnot, C.B., R.A., has arrived in England during the week from Afghanistan, to take up his appointment as Deputy-Adjutant-General of Royal Artillery at the Horse Guards.

We do not suppose that any reader of the contemporary which has lent its columns to the writer of such an impertinent and silly fabrication as that which we are about to notice, could for a moment believe that the Army and Navy Gazette was influenced by the War Office or the Horse Guards, directly or indirectly, to insert one week an expression of opinion directly at variance with that which had appeared in it, in reference to a given question the week before, even if the Secretary of State or the Commander-in-Chief, or any person whatever under them in the War Office or the Horse Guards, were capable of asking us to stultify ourselves before the world for the sake of their favour. But it is as well to say a few words on the nature of such fabrications, which, whether dictated by envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness, or by personal motives, are described as they ought to be in a vigorous monosyllable, are as discreditable to journalism as they are intolerable in private life. If any one—say A—were to say to another—say B—"you have, in order to gain some favour, or to preserve some beneficial relation with C, changed your opinions or abandoned your principles," B would be quite justified, if the accusation—for it is one—were false, to tell A that he lied; but if A were to say to B, "I observe that you have this week expressed an opinion at variance with that which you expressed last week," it would be a perfectly proper remark, and B might be left to answer it in perfect candour or not as he pleased, and as the relations between him and A might dictate. Now, in the particular case which has been referred to, there was this very material feature to be noticed, that the opinion expressed respecting the propriety of the War Office decision as to the proposed Volunteer review in Hyde Park was given before the explanations of the Government of the reasons for their decision were made in Parliament, and that after those explanations we saw reason to alter our views, and we were candid enough to say so,—an example we would commend to our contemporary, if it were at all necessary to do so.

It would be interesting to know why Lieutenant-Colonel de Winton, Royal Artillery, who has been serving for some time past as military secretary to the Marquis of Lorne in Canada, is still borne on the strength of his corps, though promoted in May last.

Several pensions in the upper ranks of the Royal Artillery are vacant, but no officers can be induced to take them.

The Comptroller and Auditor-General of Public Accounts has lately represented to the War Office that that department has been guilty of an excess of liberality in its dealings with Militia officers. He says:—"From an examination of various training pay lists of disembodied Militia, it appears to be the practice to allow officers under canvas during their annual training one-half of the usual rates of lodging-money towards the provision of such furniture as might be necessary, in addition to that supplied from public stores. As these officers are in receipt of field allowances, the payment to them of lodging allowances would appear to be at variance with the provisions of the Royal Warrant of April 26, 1862 (War Office Circular 752), which lays down as one of the conditions of entitling an officer to field allowance, that he shall not be in receipt of lodging-money."

It is not 300 years ago since the battle of Lepanto gave the decisive blow to the dominancy to the Turks in the Mediterranean, and indeed in Eastern Europe; and it is curious to reflect that not one of the Powers which were concerned in that mighty victory have anything to do with the combination which is now at work in carrying out the bag-and-baggage policy. Don John of Austria, the Generalissimo, commanded the fleet of Spain, Colonna commanded the fleet of the Church of Rome, Venevio led the ships of the Venetians, and Dorio was captain of the Navy of the Genoese Republic. It is needless to say that in those days the Navy of England scarcely existed, except as a coastguard or for expeditions to France, and that the Mediterranean was almost a mare clausum to our ships since the Crusades. The Italy of to-day represents Rome, Venice, and Genoa, but takes no active or leading part in putting the screw on the Sublime Porte; and Spain, shorn of her great possessions, has fallen back into the rank of the secondary Powers, which are content to abide by the decision of the Great Councils of London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, and St. Petersburg.

The superior military authorities in Ireland having reported favourably on the improved pattern horse-blanket, or "jhool," proposed by Major Ward, Royal Artillery, that officer has been commanded by H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to forward a "jhool" to the Horse Guards for his Royal Highness's inspection, and in obedience to this order an improved pattern blanket has been made up by the battery artificers, and despatched to the Deputy-Adjutant-General, R.A. The trial of the "jhool" at the Curragh by the Royal Scots Greys has been found very satisfactory, with the exception of a slight alteration being required in the cutting and fitting of the neck-piece, which has been rectified in the "jhool" last prepared and transmitted for the approval of the Commander-in-Chief.

Acting upon the understanding that the Bengal troops would shortly be released from duty in Afghanistan, the Commander-in-Chief in India has been rearranging the postings of his Brigadier-Generals. His Excellency has approved of the following transfers and postings:—Brigadier-General H. T. Macpherson, C.B., V.C. (who before proceeding on field service held the command of the Rawul Pindee Brigade, to which Brigadier-General Massy has since been posted), is transferred to the Presidency District, vice Brigadier-General Sir C. Ross, K.C.B., whose tenure of command has expired. General Macpherson will retain his command in Afghanistan so long as his services are required, and the senior officer in the Presidency District will officiate in the command there until General Macpherson joins. Brigadier-General A. H. Cobbe, C.B., is transferred from the Agra Brigade to the Saugor district, vice Major-General H. R. Browne, whose tenure of command has expired. Brigadier-General J. I. Murray, C.B., is transferred from the Mooltan Brigade to the Rohilcund District, vice Major-General J. E. Michell, C.B., R.A., who vacates on promotion. General Murray will continue to officiate in the command of the Lahore Division until relieved, and the command of the Rohilcund District will be exercised by the senior officer present until Brigadier-General Murray arrives. Brigadier-General R. J. Hughes, half-pay, late 63rd Foot, who has been brought on the Brigade Staff, vice Major-General H. R. Browne, is posted to the Mooltan Brigade, vice Brigadier-General Murray, transferred. General Hughes will continue in command of a brigade in Afghanistan so long as his services are required, and the senior officer at Mooltan will continue to officiate in the command there, until General Hughes arrives. Brigadier-General C. R. O. Evans, Royal Artillery, who has been brought on the Brigade Staff, vice Major-General J. E. Michell, is posted to the Agra Brigade, in place of General Cobbe, transferred.

There is nothing so foolish as to attempt to hide patent facts. Every European country knows infinitely more of the real condition of our regiments than the general reading public. If the regiments which lately embarked for India are as efficient as they are stated to be, then the return asked for in the House of Lords by Lord Strathnairn can do no harm, but must afford infinite satisfaction to all except our enemies. Every Englishman who is taxed for the maintenance of the Army has a right to know that the money is properly expended. The return asked for by Lord Strathnairn will show whether the article paid for had really been obtained or not.

The first battery of the new breech-loading field-guns will be ready for issue in a few days, and the larger breech-loaders, designed both for Naval and land service, are advancing at a fair rate of progress.

A deputation of the London Arctic Central Committee, consisting of W. S. W. Vaux, Esq., F.R.S., Major Duncan, R.A., and W. M. Williams, Esq., F.R.A.S., was received by Sir John Macdonald, the Premier of Canada, on Friday. The members of the deputation were introduced by Commander Cheyne, R.N. The result of the interview was that Sir John Macdonald consented to allow it to transpire in the Press that in the event of the British Government giving a grant to the proposed Arctic Expedition, he, as Premier, and his colleagues in the Ministry, would ask the Canadian Parliament to make a similar grant. We learn that a deputation from the same Committee will also be received by Lord Aberdare, as President of the Royal Geographical Society.

A letter has been sent round to the officers commanding regiments of Rifle Volunteers in the county of Middlesex, asking them to sanction a proposed revision of numbers, rendered necessary by the amalgamation of small corps. According to the scheme drawn up at the War Office the 1st (Victorias) Rifles will retain their present number, as will also the 2nd (South Middlesex), the 3rd (Hornsey), and 4th (West London). The 9th (West Middlesex) will become the 5th Corps; the 11th (St. George's), the 6th; the 15th (London Scottish), the 7th; the 16th (South-West Middlesex), the 8th; the 18th (Harrow), the 9th; the 19th, the 10th; the 20th, the 11th; the 21st (Civil Service), the 12th; the 27th (Queen's Westminster), the 13th; 23rd (Inns of Court), the 14th; the 26th (Customs and Docks), the 15th; the 28th (London Irish), the 16th; the 29th (North Middlesex), the 17th; the 36th (Paddington), the 18th; the 37th (Bloomsbury), the 19th; the 38th (Artists), the 20th; the 39th (Finsbury), the 21st; the 40th (Central London Rangers), the 22nd; the 46th (London and Westminster), the 23rd; and the 49th (Post-Office), the 24th. It is not to be expected that all commanding officers will fall in with the views of the War Office, but we trust the Authorities may not be influenced by petty considerations. All other counties have had to submit to the change, and as the revision is bound to come sooner or later, it is as well that it should be carried out now, in time to save amalgamated regiments, such as the 16th Middlesex, the expense which would be incurred by a second alteration of their appointments. Advantage might be taken of the opportunity of revising titles, some of which, as they now exist, are misnomers; and names might at the same time be given to those corps which do not at present possess any.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, August 18, 1880.

ROYAL MARINE FORCES.

The following promotions, dated August 6, 1880, have taken place in the Royal Marine Light Infantry, viz.:—Lieutenant Colonel and Brevet Colonel Robert William Bland Hunt, A.D.C., to be Second Commandant, vice Gregory, retired; Major Samuel James Graham to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Hunt; Captain Nowell Fitzupton Way to be Major, vice Graham.

Agincourt, Capt. E. H. Murray, flagship of Rear-Admiral Somerset, second in command of the Channel Squadron, has been placed in dry dock at Devonport, for examination, &c.

Albatross, Com. A. J. Errington, was expected at Nagasaki from Shanghai, and would relieve the Fly, which was then to go to Kobe.

Antelope, Lieut.-Com. the Hon. Walter J. Hylton Jolliffe, was at Therapia on Aug. 20, in attendance on his Excellency the Right Hon. G. J. Goschen. The officers of this ship pulled in a gig race against the officers of the Cockatrice on the 15th inst., winning by several boats' lengths.

Beacon. Com. George Weightman Hand, who is appointed to the command of this vessel, vice Com. G. P. Woodruffe, invalided, entered the Navy in 1856, and served as acting-lieut. in the Actæon, Com. John Ward (b), on the coast of China and Tartary, from Aug. 7, 1861, being confirmed, on his return to England, with commission dated back June 22, 1861. On Nov. 7, 1862, he was appointed to the Megæra, Com. S. H. Henderson; and on April 7, 1863, was transferred to the Leander, Capt. Thomas Harvey, fitting for the Pacific, and was subsequently in the same ship under Capt. W. M. Dowell, C.B., until paid off in Oct. 1866. On April 6, 1867, he joined the Minotaur, Capt. J. G. Goodenough, fitting for the flag of Rear-Admiral Fredk. Warden, C.B., with the Channel Squadron; and on Dec. 30, 1867, was appointed additional of the Excellent, Capts. A. W. A. Hood and Henry Boys, and remained until appointed, Nov. 20, 1869, to the Royal Alfred, Capt. Richard Wells, and served on the North-America and West Indies station, under the flag of Vice-Admirals G. G. Wellesley, C.B., and E. G. Fanshawe, C.B., until promoted to the rank of commander, Nov. 29, 1872. He subsequently studied at the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, and on Oct. 31, 1873, became second capt. in the Valiant, Capt. Norman B. Bedingfield, and was afterwards employed in the same ship under Capt. Nowell Salmon, V.C., C.B., until July 22, 1875, when he was transferred to the Triumph, Capt. George H. Parkin, with the Channel Squadron and in the Mediterranean, and was paid off in April, 1877. From May 17, 1877, until appointed on Monday last to the Beacon, he was employed as inspecting commander in the Coastguard service at Liverpool.

Cambridge, Capt. Ward, is to be docked at Devonport to have bottom examined and defects made good, as soon as the dockyard authorities find it convenient to perform the work.

Cleopatra, Capt. F. Durrant, was commissioned on Tuesday, with a complement of 245, for service with the Detached Squadron, under the flag of Rear-Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam, C.B. She was passed out of dock on Wednesday, and will leave for trial on Monday next.

Cockatrice, Com. H. T. Grenfell, was to leave Therapia on Aug. 22 for Galatz, to resume her duties in the Danube. Mr. W. G. E. Penfold, assist.-pymr. in charge of this ship, left Constantinople on the 20th inst. for England, viâ Varna, to take up an appointment as secretary to Comdre. Brown at Jamaica.

Curaçoa, Capt. Cumming. The correspondent of the Hampshire Telegraph on board writes as follows from Singapore, under date July 19:—"Our three months' passage from England to this coast was eventful only in the fact that, although we have an exceptional number of youthful ordinary seamen, it was performed without accident aloft or below. The ship, very stiff when sailing on a wind, behaved admirably. The engines, which were sparingly used upon the passage out, had a six hours' run a day or two ago, and gave us a speed of 13·9 knots. While on the run, the crew were exercised at target practice, firing at barrels thrown overboard as we proceeded, and the order given to fire when about 1,000 yards off. The practice was very good, several barrels being hit and sunk. Capt. Cumming's expressed wish to keep a clear punishment-sheet has not been fulfilled, but considering the youth and inexperience of the crew, the conduct has not been bad; and of those who have made acquaintance with cells, the ordinary seamen are in a minority. As we remain for twelve months in charge of this division, the hot weather and cheap fiery drink will not tend to diminish our list of defaulters. When we leave here, we are to take charge of the Shanghai division for twelve months, and then finish up our commission upon the Japanese coast. The war expected to ensue between Russia and China, when we were commissioned for this station, has blown over. Mediation by friendly Powers and concessions by both disputants have so far cleared up the misunderstanding, that several French, American, and Italian war vessels have passed us during the past fortnight upon return to their own shores for refit, the urgent necessity for their watchful care of their countrymen's interests upon the China land having, in the opinion of their respective commanders, passed away. The health of the ship's company is very good,—and, taken all round, the Curaçoa is a comfortable, happy ship."

Egeria, Com. Charles Johnstone, was to leave Singapore for Labuan.

Excellent, Capt. Hopkins. Last Saturday the officers gave an "at home" on board, which met with the usual success of those pleasant entertainments. Fine weather, which makes so much difference as to the enjoyment of afternoon dances on board ship, favoured their endeavours, and nearly 800 guests met on board, in answer to the invitations. The band was furnished by the Royal Marine Light Infantry. According to a system which has now gone on for many years, this will be the last entertainment for the year 1880.

Foxhound, Lieut. and Com. W. H. Nowell, was to leave the Straits Division for Japanese waters, calling at Hong Kong en route from Singapore.

Hecla, Capt. Morgan Singer, arrived at Malta on Thursday from Plymouth. The Italian training frigate Vittorio Emmanuele, from Gibraltar, bound for Smyrna, arrived there at the same time.

Himalaya, Capt. Harry W. Brent, will not wait at Bombay to take any part in the usual Indian relief service, but will return immediately she has landed the troops she takes out. Any officers waiting passage, time-expired men, and invalids will, of course, be received on board, but the chances are she will make the passage home nearly empty.

Hornet, Com. John S. Eaton, left Gibraltar for Ports mouth on Aug. 14, where she arrived on Wednesday, from the China station, viâ the Suez Canal. The Hornet was recommissioned at Hong Kong on Feb. 25, 1877.

Inconstant, flagship of the new Detached Squadron, was commissioned at Portsmouth on Aug. 24, by Capt. Charles C. P. Fitzgerald, for the flag of Rear-Admiral the Right Hon. the Earl of Clanwilliam, C.B. The Earl of Clanwilliam was born in 1832, and entered the Navy in 1845. He obtained the rank of lieutenant Sept. 15, 1852, and in that capacity served in the Imperieux in the Baltic from December following until the close of the Russian war; in the Raleigh, Comdre. Keppel, on the East Indies and China station from September, 1856, until transferred in August, 1857, to the Calcutta, flag-ship of Rear-Admiral Seymour, on the same station, where he remained until promoted to commander Feb. 26, 1858. In the following month he obtained command of the Hornet, also at China, and brought her to England in July, 1859, on the 22nd of which month he was posted. Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam lost the use of his left arm from a wound received at the taking of Canton, and for which he was granted in October, 1859, a pension of £91 5s. He commanded the Tribune in the Pacific from March, 1862, until paid off in May, 1866; was appointed to the Hercules, fitting at Chatham for service with the Channel Squadron in June, 1868; was transferred to the Asia, guardship, at Portsmouth in December, 1871, which post he relinquished in March, 1874, on being appointed one of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. The squadron will include the Cleopatra, screw corvette, which was commissioned at Devonport by Capt. F. Durrant, with a complement of 251; the Tourmaline, composite screw corvette (returning from the North American and West Indies station); and a vessel of the Gem class. The Bacchante, corvette, Capt. Lord Charles Scott, will also be attached, to enable Prince Albert Victor, if not both of the Royal midshipmen, to enjoy the advantage of an extended cruise. The necessary alterations are now being carried out on board the Inconstant to fit her for service as an admiral's ship, and her armament will be increased by four 20-pounder torpedo-guns, mounted on the upper deck, and an equipment of six Nordenfelt guns, while she will also be supplied with the electric light. She has already been furnished with Whitehead torpedoes, to be discharged above water. The cruise of the squadron is to be protracted. The Inconstant will be ready for service at the latter end of next month, or early in October, and the squadron proceed first to the Pacific, and from thence to Madeira, calling later on at Cape de Verde, Rio de Janeiro, and Falkland Islands passing through the Magellan Straits to Vancouver's Islands, and reaching Japan, after putting in at the Sandwich Islands, in September of next year.

Iron Duke, Capt. H. F. Cleveland, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Coote, was expected to be at Yokohama about the middle of the present month, when the Admiral will probably shift his flag to the Vigilant, and go on a cruise.

Kestrel, Com. W. M. Lang, as soon as ready after her recommission, was to be senior officer's ship on the Amoy sub-division, relieving the Sheldrake, which would then go to Foochow to take the place of the Moorhen, which requires to be docked at Hong Kong.

Lapwing, Com. W. G. Scott, had orders to visit Chefoo, and then to return to Tientsin.

Malabar, Capt. John F. S. Grant, from Portsmouth, arrived at Malta on Wednesday, and proceeded for Bombay on Thursday with 915 men of the 23rd Regt., and forty-seven men belonging to various regiments.

Niger is ready for service upon the south-west coast of Africa, and is to leave armed with six 20-pounders, in consequence of the War Office being unable to supply six new 25-pounders with iron carriages before November. Her heavier armament will be sent out to her early next year by Government store-ship, and the carriage-racers will be then fitted in the Simon's Bay depôt.

Northumberland, Capt. Wratislaw, lying in Plymouth Sound, was taken into harbour on Friday to be docked and have defects made good,

Pegasus, Com. the Hon. Horatio N. S. Hood, was expected to arrived at Hakodate about the middle of July from her visit to the Russian port of Vladivostock, having been ordered by Admiral Coote to have a glance round at the ships and preparations there.

Ranger made a satisfactory trial on Tuesday at Sheerness, giving 804 horse-power and 11·2 knots. She is to be ready for commission by the 20th prox. Her sister-ship, the Rambler, which indicated 796 horse-power and made 10 knots, will be commissioned on the 10th prox., but will not be able to leave for the West Coast of Africa for some time, on account of the inability of the War Office to supply her armament.

Ruby, Capt. Charles E. Foot. Lieut. Alexander Karley Woodrow died at Zanzibar on the 12th inst., in his 31st year. Lieut. Woodrow was employed as midshipman and acting sub-lieutenant in the Royal Oak in the Mediterranean, from March 3, 1868, until paid off Jan. 9, 1872; and on June 26 was appointed to the Victoria and Albert, Royal yacht, from which, on Sept. 18, 1872, he was promoted to lieut. He was subsequently employed from July 8, 1873, until June 1874, in the Invincible, Capt. John C. Soady, in the Mediterranean; and on Oct. 1 following was appointed additional of the Excellent, Capt. Thomas Brandreth, from which ship he was successively employed in the Iron Duke and Topaze, Capt. Charles J. Rowley, at Kingstown, from April 28, 1876, until Nov. 29, 1877, when he was borne as additional of the Alexandra, for service in the Raleigh, Capt. Charles T. Jago, in the Mediterranean. In Feb., 1880, he was appointed to the Excellent, and in May last was appointed to the Euryalus, for service in the Ruby.

Superb, Capt. F. le H. Ward, made her official trial on Tuesday off the Maplin, with satisfactory result. She indicated 7,521 horse-power, and made 15·31 knots. The temperatures were also satisfactory, that of the engine-room being 74 degrees and the stoke-hole 94. A consumption of 2·71 lb. of coal per hour per indicated horse-power took place. She has proceeded to Chatham, to be completed for the East Indies as rapidly as possible.

Swinger, Lieut. and Com. O. P. Tudor, from Hong Kong, was to join the ships in the Straits Division.

Sylvia, Com. Pelham Aldrich, arrived at the Cape of Good Hope on Aug. 10, and has orders to proceed to Wange River and Walwich Bay for surveying work on her passage home.

Torch, Com. W. H. C. Selby, was at Therapia on Aug 20, and will remain at Constantinople for some months doing the duty of senior officer.

Tyne, Com. John E. Stokes, was to leave the Cape of Good Hope on Aug. 13, in continuation of her trooping service.

Wye, Staff Com. Henry D. Sarratt. The final orders of the Wye have been slightly modified, owing to the report that yellow fever was prevalent on the Isthmus of Panama. Should it be found, on arrival at Port Royal, that there is fever at Colon, the drafts for the Pacific will be landed at Jamaica, rather than risk contracting fever by crossing the Isthmus, and the Wye will then proceed on her other duty, of shifting the naval stores from the old depôt at Rio de Janeiro to the new one at Monte Video. She will return from her round to Bermuda, Jamaica, and the Brazils by way of Ascension.

THE ATALANTA INQUIRY.

The inquiry into the loss of the Atalanta has been resumed at the Sessions House, Westminster.

The first witness called was Vice-Admiral Arthur W. Wood, C.B., M.P., second senior Naval Lord at the time the Atalanta sailed. He stated he had not the slightest doubt as to the perfect soundness, stability, and seaworthiness of the vessel. No other ship could have been selected, there being none other available in the Navy at all fit for the service. He selected the officers himself, and they were sufficient in number and suitable in character and qualification. If he had to recommend a sailing training-ship to-morrow, he should recommend a vessel of the same size as the Atalanta.

Mr. Francis Martin, late chief constructor at Pembroke, examined as to the straining of the Atalanta's masts, said it was always the practice to wedge the masts of frigates on the upper decks, and he knew nothing against that practice.

Mr. Frederick Barnes, surveyor of dockyards and chief constructor, also expressed the opinion that the Atalanta was the better for the masts being wedged. He saw nothing, he thought, dangerous about the vessel. The lurching of the Atalanta on her passage from the West Indies was probably attributable to the bilge keels being placed rather high; but beyond the motion being uncomfortable, he did not think anything more could be said. The statement that the Atalanta had lurched 40 deg. he took cum grano salis.

Mr. W. Johns, assistant chief surveyor to Lloyd's Register of Shipping, who was requested by the Committee of Inquiry to undertake a series of calculations in reference to the stability of the vessel, read his report. A comparison of the curves of stability of the Atalanta with a number of merchant sailing ships, showed her somewhat better than the Eurydice, but considerably worse than the Stuart Hahnemann, a merchant ship known to have capsized in the Indian Ocean in 1875 through reckless seamanship, and worse also than the other merchant ships given. If the Atalanta rolled and lurched as she was recorded to have done, a wind of about 3 lb. force, catching her suddenly on the broadside, with her plain sail set, would be sufficient to blow her over with her ports closed. In still water a force of 6½ lb. per square foot would do so. He had found merchant sailing ships require as much as 10 lb. and even up to 20 lb. per square foot to produce this effect. He thought it by no means improbable that the Atalanta was capsized in a squall, which might easily have happened if the vessel was otherwise than very skilfully handled.

Lieut. the Hon. A. Bethell, recalled, said that when on board the Atalanta in 1878, on her return from India, he had known that vessel to have been taken aback on several occasions, but she always righted herself at once. The heeling of the vessel was never very great. He had never noticed any special occasion when, owing to the ports being opened, the Atalanta had shipped water. When running she was a steady ship. She did not strain any more than most wooden ships. He was certain Captain Stirling was quite satisfied with the behaviour of the vessel. The rolling of the Atalanta was sometimes 40 degrees, rendering it somewhat awkward to stand, but the men worked all the time, and he knew them even lower the top gallant mast when she was rolling to this extent. He did not think any ship he had ever been in had rolled so heavily as the Atalanta.

Mr. Isaac Hollywood, late carpenter's mate, said he was on board the Atalanta from September, 1878, to June, 1879. The Atalanta always strained very much. In bad weather she made water to the extent of 1¾ in. per hour, and it was necessary to pump her out every watch. This took about twenty minutes every four hours. The straining was in the upper works, and at the bilge keel. He could not say exactly where the water came in. On his return to Portsmouth it was his duty to send in a list of defects, and it was a very considerable one. After she was repaired he looked upon her as a good, sound, and trustworthy vessel.

Mr. Seccombe, foreman, Portsmouth Dockyard, believed that the Atalanta, after repair, was as good as new.

Mr. Johns, chief surveyor at Lloyd's, said he had investigated the strength of the Atalanta. Putting the guns in the hold would make her roll much more. Rigging was often cut away to prevent a ship capsizing, and he had frequently found this to be the cause of loss of mast.

The committee has adjourned, pending the arrival in England of Admiral Sir George Wellesley.

INSPECTION OF THE JUMNA BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

On Saturday afternoon her Majesty visited the Jumna, and inspected the 1st Batn. of the Rifle Brigade and the draughts proceeding to India to reinforce the troops in Afghanistan. It was known for some days previously that it was the intention of the Prince of Wales, who is much interested in the hurried departure of reinforcements, to pay a visit to Lord E. Clinton's Batn. of Riflemen before they started, but it was not until Saturday morning that it was made known that her Majesty proposed to accord them a similar honour. The Elfin, having on board the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince Leopold, Prince Albert Victor and Prince George (in the uniform of naval cadets), with their suite, and a few personal friends, ran over from Cowes, and the Royal party, landing in the dockyard, paid a visit to Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, remaining with him to lunch. They then went on board the Jumna, which was crowded with the friends of the officers and men and with visitors. Their Royal Highnesses were received on board the ship with the customary Royal honours from a guard of the Royal Marines. Accompanied by Admiral Ryder, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and staff, Admiral Superintendent Foley, and Capt. Parsons, of the Jumna, the Royal party, mixing freely and genially with the throng of visitors, recognising acquaintances, and chatting familiarly with the officers, were conducted over the huge vessel, and had an opportunity of appreciating the admirable order and the excellent arrangements which make it possible for so many men to exist comfortably in so limited a space. When they had thoroughly inspected the main and troop-decks, they came to the quarter-deck, where the officers of the Rifle Brigade were each introduced by their colonel to the Prince of Wales. His Royal Highness cordially shook hands with each, and then Prince Leopold went through the same pleasant ceremony, the Royal party remaining in conversation with the group of gallant gentlemen for some time. On taking leave, the Prince cheerfully wished them "good luck," and then, with the Princess, Prince Leopold, the young Princes, and his entourage, landed from the Jumna, and proceeding along the jetty, embarked in the Elfin, which was lying astern of the trooper. As the graceful little yacht ran past the Jumna on her way to Cowes, with the Royal party in full view on the bridge, the troops and visitors covering her decks gave a round of cheers, which were cordially acknowledged as long as the Elfin remained within sight. Scarcely had the Elfin passed from view, than the visitors were agreeably surprised on observing the usual signs of approaching Royalty, in the form of Royal standards, which were hoisted at the dockyard, by the flagship, and the training-ship, followed by the effective procedure of "manning the yards," as the Alberta, gliding rapidly into the harbour from Spithead, ran alongside the Jumna, her Majesty, in her usual deep mourning, with the Princess Beatrice and the ladies-in-waiting, being on the bridge. The Royal yacht ran alongside the starboard gangway of the Jumna, from which Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and Admirals Ryder and Foley made their way to the bridge, and after paying their respects to her Majesty, escorted her on board. The main deck of the trooper was lined with crimson cloth, the usual guard of honour of the Royal Marines presenting arms. The Queen was first escorted into the saloon, where she cordially saluted the Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and was then conducted round the ship. The Blue-jackets were drawn up in their respective messes as the inspection was made, and her Majesty expressed herself as highly pleased with their appearance, and with the perfection of the arrangements for the comfort of the huge living freight that the ship is taking out. From between decks her Majesty went to the quarter-deck, one side of which was cleared for the purpose, and the officers of the Rifle Brigade, who were here drawn up, had each the honour of a personal introduction at the hands of Colonel Lord E. Clinton. Her Majesty, who looked very well and in good spirits, asked many questions of Admiral Ryder, of Lord Edward, and of Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and regarded the mass of dark-coated riflemen with evident interest. After remaining on board over half-an-hour, her Majesty was escorted back to the main-deck of the Jumna, amid the respectful salutations of the visitors, and then with a second salute from the guard of honour, and with "manned yards," she made her way back to the deck of the Alberta, leaving the harbour amid hearty cheers from the troops and crew of the Jumna and of the flag and training-ships, which she acknowledged by waving her handkerchief as long as the yacht was in sight. It was stated to be her Majesty's intention to accompany the troop-ship down the Solent, and this was borne out by the large yacht, the Victoria and Albert, being in readiness to embark its Royal freight; but it was dead low water, and as the draught of the Jumna is too great to allow of her crossing the harbour bar soon enough to start on her voyage during daylight, the idea was abandoned, and the trooper lay quietly alongside the jetty after her Majesty's departure, and sailed on Sunday.

THE WIMBLEDON SCANDAL COURT-MARTIAL.

The court-martial on Serjt. Marshman, R.M.L.I., was resumed on Monday morning at Gosport. Major Ozzard, for the prosecution, announced that a target had arrived from Wimbledon. He could not say whether it was No. 14, but the marks on it corresponded with those which had been referred to. Capt. Du Pré, of the 3rd Hants Rifles, was then called. He said he had shot at Wimbledon this year. On the morning of the first Wednesday in the meeting, Private Duddy communicated to him the intelligence that on the previous evening the prisoner asked him (Duddy) at what time and target he was going to shoot for the Queen's Prize, adding, "I shall be on that target, and if you make 91 I shall see you again." Duddy made the second report after he had made the score of 91. Under cross-examination, witness said he did attribute a fraudulent intention to this conversation reported to him by Duddy. He knew that Duddy had been posted as a winner, but did not take any steps to prevent him from receiving the prize because he had no facts to go upon, and it was too serious a matter to bring before the Council on no other evidence than one man's word. He did not consider it his duty, as an officer, to inquire into the matter, for at Wimbledon he only acted in the capacity of a competitor. He would have drawn precisely the same inference about the matter even if the present proceedings had not been instituted. Lieut. Edye: Then putting the fraudulent construction on the conversation you did, you allowed the matter to rest and prizes to be taken by the four men of the 3rd Hants—namely, Duddy, Dowly, Caplen, and Catchlow?—Witness: I don't think Catchlow did win a prize.—Re-examined: Upon hearing that the court-martial was to take place he wrote.—Lieut. Edye objected, and asked that the letter might be produced.—Witness, continuing: He did not know at the time that prisoner was the marker.—Witness was again referring to the letter, when prisoner objected to any subsequent acts being introduced unless they were performed with his assent in his presence.—Major Blake, Deputy-Judge-Advocate, pointed out that under cross-examination the defendant's friend having cast reflections on the character of the witness as an officer, it was open to him to allude again to this matter.—Lieut. Edye replied that he had cast no reflections on the character of Capt. Du Pré as an officer. It was not for him but for the Court to do such a thing.—In answer to a request that he would explain his reason for saying that this cheating must have been by the register-keepers, witness declared there was nothing to prevent the register-keeper calling out "four, an inner," and putting down a five on the card. It had been done in his own case by mistake when firing for the Wills' Prize.

On Tuesday, the first witness called was Major R. T. Thompson, 56th Regt., and Commandant of the Military School. He said he belonged to the Statistical Department at Wimbledon, and all the tickets passed through his hands. The four highest scores of the Olympic were:—Runtz, of the 1st London, 46; second, Private Kidd, 2nd Batn. 4th Regt., 40; third, Ogburn, 1st Warwick, 39; and fourth, Boyd, 1st Ayr, 39. Questioned as to his experience, witness said he had been connected with musketry instruction ever since 1857, and had been chief of the Statistical Department since 1875 inclusive. In cross-examination, the witness, being asked his opinion of Runtz's score under all the circumstances, said: It was so remarkable that I should not have passed it over without bringing it to the notice of the committee, especially seeing that the next competitor was six points below Runtz. Do you think such a score could be made at 600 yards with a fixed rest?—I believe, from experiments I have made, such a thing is just possible. Do you think 97 out of a possible 105 excessive?—With a Martini, certainly not. I do not consider 100 or 102 excessive, but remarkably good. Since such scores are not impossible at 800, 900, and 1,000 yards, why should 46 out of a possible 50 with a Snider at 600 yards be only just possible?—I consider such a score at 800, 900, and 1,000 yards totally impossible. It was at 200, 500, and 600 yards that such scores were made, or purported to be made. In 1878, Private McVittie made, or was purported to make, 33 out of a possible 35 in the Olympic competition, and Mr. Humphrey, who came next, made 27, exactly the same difference as in 1880. When Stokes was disqualified from winning the Snider Wimbledon Cup, do you know that he asked that his trigger might be tested by the Council?—I do not. Have you any reason to doubt the accuracy of the scores you have referred to?—None but a general impression I formed in my own mind that there was a collusion between the competitors and the men at the butts. By the Court: Up to this year I have never heard of 100 out of a possible 105 being made at 200, 500, and 600 yards, not even in India.

At the sitting of the Court on Wednesday, Lieut. Houghton, of the Royal Marines, in charge of the butts at which the prisoner marked, gave a detailed account of the marking in the Olympic competition. He said that Runtz and Humphrey complained that incorrect marking had taken place, and the prisoner, who was standing by, said he hoped they did not suspect him. A target was produced in court, and Lieut. Houghton said he thought it was the target in question, owing to a finger-hole which he made in it. A musketry-instructor was ordered to experiment at 600 yards on the target, to initial the shot-holes, and then to give evidence. The court adjourned until Thursday, when Lieut. Houghton was re-examined by the prosecutor. He was asked whether he knew at what target the second shot was fired? He said he could not possibly say. You say you asked the markers of No. 14 target from which target they had come. Could you know this without asking them?—Yes; I ordered them from No. 16, but I should not have known without asking them, because I had never seen many of them before. I watched every target at two butts in turn, and questioned the markers, in order to ascertain whether they understood their duties. What opportunity had you of knowing if the hits signalled corresponded with the hits made?—Watching the targets in turn, I saw the right answers sent back. I don't know, but I should think 150 shots were fired during the quarter of an hour I remained in each butt. When I changed the men in the butts, I had received no notice of fraudulent practices. When I arrived in the morning, I found the prisoner and his men at the butts. The prisoner could, after I had changed the men, give instructions to the men in No. 14 target without my noticing him. In fact, changes of men at the target might take place without my noticing it, unless my attention should afterwards be attracted to the change. The prisoner made out the various details for the markers at the target. (To the prisoner): I altered the arrangements after the markers had taken up their positions. I think it possible that fraudulent marking could have gone on at more than one target without my knowledge, but as I watched each target in turn, a certain number of shots must certainly have been correct. I do not remember the prisoner being at one particular target more than another. I heard from the prisoner that a serjeant of artillery had been offered a bribe to carry on cheating. There must be at least five persons cognisant of a scheme of fraud—the serjeant and four men—otherwise they would act as checks upon one another.—Capt. William Marsden, Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General of the School of Musketry at Hythe, said:—I was employed at Wimbledon this year as chief of the range department. I had no knowledge that fraudulent transactions were going on The paper now placed in my hands and purporting to be sent by me to the officer in charge of the firing points, is not in my handwriting, nor do I know that I have seen it before. I received a pencil report from Capt. Fagan, stating that Mr. Humphrey, of the Cambridge University Corps, and others had insisted, against Capt. Fagan's expostulations, in proceeding down the ridge to examine the target on the morning of the 23rd. I received from Col. Peel, the head of the executive, a paper ordering re-squadding, but this was so frequently done that I cannot say that the paper now placed before me is the paper forwarded to me on any particular date. No information reached me officially that any part of the re-squadding order had been set aside, although I certainly was so informed. The target purporting to be that at which Runtz and Humphrey fired for the Olympic was then produced, and Mr. Humphrey counted the bullet marks to see if they corresponded with the number stated in his evidence. He now counted 36 bull's-eyes, 23 inners, 30 magpies, and 48 outers, making one more bull's-eye and one more inner than he counted at Wimbledon. He, however, had no doubt in his own mind that the target was the same.—Lieut. Edye, the prisoner's friend, stated that certain overtures had been made through the serjeant-major of division that the prisoner should be photographed for the purpose of identification. Every facility would be afforded, but if it were to gratify a morbid curiosity, the prisoner would strongly object.—Major Ozzard, the prosecutor, replied that the photograph had been asked for to assist an inquiry now being made in aid of justice, and not to satisfy any morbid taste.—Lieut. Edye: I object, on the plea advanced by the prosecution. The prisoner has no objection.—The Court having considered the point, the President said that the Court regretted and were surprised at the step that had been taken. They felt that if a photograph of the prisoner was required, application should have been made to them. They would have considered the application, and if sufficient reasons were shown, they would have obtained the photograph required. Communication with the prisoner through the serjeant-major, without the knowledge of the Court, and without the approval of the commanding officer, they considered most irregular; and in future whatever steps with regard to the prisoner it might be considered necessary to take, the sanction of the Court should be obtained.—Serjt.-Major Powell, the senior serjt.-major of the division, was called before the Court, and reprimanded by the President, who said that the matter would be referred to the commanding officer.—Capt. Stoney said he was on duty at Wimbledon on July 23, at targets 21 to 30, and he carried out the order for re-squadding. Mr. Humphrey asked to be allowed to remain at No. 14 target, and witness assented. By the Court: Mr. Humphrey told me that he was testing a charge of fraud, and that the Council were aware of it. I did not bring the matter to the knowledge of my superiors, because the Council were aware of it. Mr. Humphrey being well known to me, and being also a member of the Council, I should not doubt his word. Having charge of so many targets, I don't think it possible to exercise more than a general supervision.—F. C. Buller, Col. of the Coldstream Guards, said: I was in command of the military troops at the Wimbledon meeting of 1880. There were 690 men, who formed four military divisions, and the fifth division was for Commissariat, Ordnance, and Cavalry, who were stationed in various parts of the camp. The first division consisted of guard and men from the Brigade Depôt, with three corporals from Aldershot; the second, Marines, with three detachments of men of the Royal Navy; the third and fourth, of detachments from several regiments of the Line. On July 23, after gunfire, I was sent for to attend a Council meeting; and after hearing what was said, I ordered prisoner to be placed under arrest. This year the Marines took the targets from 1 to 30. Hearing of suspicions, I issued the following order:—"All non-commissioned officers and men are cautioned against being tampered with. Any attempt to do so should be reported at once. All infringements of this order will be severely punished." That order was read out by pay-serjeants at each station. Cross-examined: I consider it exceedingly difficult, but not quite impossible, under certain circumstances, for a serjeant or man to make an arrangement with a competitor four days before shooting at Wimbledon. By the Court: Both serjeants and men are liable to have their positions changed at any time. I saw Serjt. Marshman marched off to the butt 11 to 20; but I never saw him actually in the butt. My instructions are that changes of squadding shall be made on the day of firing, and I have seen on several days the changes carried out. I understand that on the day when Runtz won the Olympic the prisoner was not changed from his butt, but the men at the targets were changed.

Mails for the Fleet are made up as follows (letters should be posted in London before 6 p.m. at the General and 5.30 p.m. at the District Post Offices):—Fawn, Antelope, and Torch—Constantinople, on Tuesday and Saturday. Hibernia, Falcon, Hecla, and Condor—Malta, Wednesdays. Alexandra, Invincible, Thunderer, Téméraire, Monarch, Cygnet, Iris, Coquette, and Helicon—Care of H.B.M.'s Consul, Palermo, daily. Triumph and Rocket—Care of senior officer, Esquimault, on Thursday and Saturday. Jackal—Wick, N.B. Bacchante—Portsmouth. The Channel and First Reserve Squadrons, Agincourt, Northumberland, and Achilles—Devonport. Minotaur—Portsmouth. Salamis—Sheerness. Foam, Firefly, Firebrand, Flirt, and Dido—Cape Coast Castle, viâ Liverpool, on Friday. Northampton, Blanche, and Forester—Halifax, on Thursday. Bittern—Corfu, on Thursday. Rapid—Cyprus, on Friday. Boadicea, Flora, Dwarf, and Pioneer—Cape of Good Hope, on Thursday. Newcastle—Devonport. All ships on the East Indies station, except London, should be addressed to the care of the Postmaster, Aden, on Friday. Decoy and Rupert—Gibraltar. Terror—Senior officer, Bermuda, on Thursday. Cockatrice—Galatz, daily, after Tuesday, the 24th. London—Zanzibar, on Friday. Garnet, Swallow, Forward, and Elk—Monte Video, on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday. Alert—Levuka, Fiji, to await arrival, viâ Brindisi, N.S.W. mail on Aug. 27. All ships on the China station should be addressed to Singapore on Friday. All ships on the Australian station should be addressed to Sydney on Friday. Cruiser—Care H.B.M.'s Consul, Naples. Of homeward-bound vessels the addresses are as under:—Charybdis, Sylvia, Raleigh, and Tourmaline, Devonport, on arrival; Hornet, Portsmouth, on arrival; Vulture, Malta, on arrival.

Two gunboats from Odessa, laden with ammunition, lately attempted to make their way up the Danube, their destination being Rustchuk, in Bulgaria. The harbour-master at Galatz refused to allow them to pass, and they had not got far to sea on their return journey when a portion of one of the cargoes exploded.

Kandahar in 1879. (W. H. Allen and Co.)—This volume containing extracts from the diary kept by Major Le Messurier, who held the appointment of Brigade-Major, R.E., with the "Quetta" column, to the field force assembled at Mooltan, under Gen. Stewart, will be read with considerable interest at the present moment. The fourth chapter gives a description of Kandahar and its fortifications, also of the disposition ofthe troops. In further chapters the reader will find a good deal about cantonment amusements, trades and manufactures, sport and game. It is altogether a pleasantly written diary, having reference to several important matters.

German Literature and Reading. By T. Matthay. (Whitaker and Co.)—Professor Matthay, whose previous works have so well recommended themselves, has published this volume with the view of facilitating the study of German literature among his pupils. It is divided into two parts, the first giving a brief history of the subject in seven periods, each containing the names of the principal writers, with a list of their works. The second part consists of extracts in prose and verse from the works mentioned in the first part, the passages in each being selected with a view of showing the characteristics of the authors. It is a book well worth the attention of colleges and schools, as well as of students in general.

Guide-book to the United States, &c.—Messrs. Longman and Co. have recently published a useful guide-book to the States of Canada, which will be found highly useful to tourists and settlers. Full information is given as to the best routes of travel, the most attractive scenery, and, though last, not by any means least, the "recommendable hotels." A remarkable amount of matter referring to these subjects is presented to the reader, whether settler or merely tourist, in a neat, well-arranged, and portable volume.

Illustrated Biographies of the Great Artists. (Sampson Low, Marston, and Co.)—Two additional volumes have been added to this charming series, "Sir Joshua Reynolds" and "Sir Edwin Landseer." We are thus brought down to more modern times, and which, perhaps, will be very much appreciated by the class of frequenters of picture-galleries "who cannot bear the old masters."

Dodd's Parliamentary Companion (Dodd, Whitaker, and Co.) is as companionable as ever, although it is verging on the fiftieth year of its birth.

THE "BAZAAR" OFFICE PUBLICATIONS.—This publishing office is so prolific of literature, that it becomes necessary to deal with its issues en bloc, or not at all. The subjects selected by the editor are always interesting, and sometimes not a little instructive. All classes will find something to please them, whether they be nurses or bicyclists, fishermen or pigeon-fanciers, or holiday-takers in foreign lands. Each little volume costs sixpence, and we can recommend a judicious investment of that sum weekly, in order to form the nucleus of an inexpensive, amusing, and instructive library.

A telegram, dated Capetown, August 3, states that "Sir George Colley is expected to visit the Transvaal during the present month. Col. Sir W. O. Lanyon is on a visit to the northern borders of the Transvaal; he is expected to return almost immediately to Pretoria."

SEA KITS.

"Free Kit" writes:—"On reading the account of the Queen's inspection of the troops who embarked at Portsmouth for India, one part of it drew my special notice—that was her Majesty's wish to see the men attired in their sea clothing, or kits. Does her Majesty know that the men have to buy that clothing out of their daily pay? Such is the case. The men are put under stoppages from their pay until the amount is paid. When a man is attested, he agrees to a free kit. Should he not be supplied with a free sea kit when ordered to embark for foreign parts? I hope that the insertion of this may lead to some alteration."

OFFICERS' WIDOWS.

"R." writes:—"It may be some consolation to 'Electing Pension' to learn that under Clause 1,272, Royal Warrant, May 1, 1878, the fact of his retiring on half-pay pension, or capitalising the value of either, does not disqualify his family for pension or compassionate allowance."

"A. B." writes:—"It may be as well for 'Electing Pension,' who addressed you last week, to know that should he decide on the pension of £200, and thus debar his widow and daughters from any Government aid on his death, there is a certain Military Benevolent Fund, founded by Mrs. Ellis Williams, of 40 Bedford Square, from which they would probably receive the aid they might require."

Major-Gen. C. O. Lukin, on the Retired List, late Madras Army, died at Henley-on-Thames last week at the age of 59. The deceased officer entered the service of the East Indian Company at an early age, and served in China in 1843-4. On the amalgamation of the East India Army with that of the Queen, he retired from the Service on the full pay of a lieut.-col.

Amusements.

No theatrical novelties have been brought forward during the past week. Large audiences continue to attend the Promenade Concerts at COVENT GARDEN. On Monday night Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony was played, with other standard works; and the Classical Night, on Wednesday, included Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony in A and Schumann's overture and entr'acts from "Manfred."

"Forbidden Fruit," at the ADELPHI, is now preceded by Mrs. Gore's two-act drama of "The Maid of Croissey," an adaptation from the French, originally brought out at the Haymarket in July, 1835. The incidents, though not very striking, are interesting and clearly set forth, and the piece has been cordially welcomed on its revival. Miss Pateman now represents the heroine Theresa and Mr. Fernandez Serjeant Austerlitz, the old soldier of the Imperial Guard, originally acted by Mr. Benjamin Webster.

Mr. John S. Clarke will reappear at the HAYMARKET on Saturday night, Sept. 4, playing in Mr. Buckstone's comedy of "Leap Year," and resuming his famous character of Major Wellington de Boots in "The Widow Hunt."

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence appear at the GAIETY on Monday in "The Mighty Dollar," a farcical comedy first produced in New York five years ago, and identified with their latest American successes. The Gaiety comedy and burlesque company will, at the same time, be transferred to the IMPERIAL THEATRE, where they will commence a series of afternoon performances.

The PRINCESS'S THEATRE will be reopened in October, when Mr. Edwin Booth will appear as Hamlet, with Mr. T. Swinburne as the Ghost, and Mr. Charles Harcourt as Horatio.

A new ballet, called "The Alpine Brigands," arranged by M. Bertrand, with music by M. Jacobi, has been added to the attractions of the ALHAMBRA. The love of a soldier for the sister of a brigand supplies the leading motive of the action. Miss Matthews is the stalwart chief of the mountain robbers, and Mdlle. Pertholdi and Mdlle. de Gilbert have effective opportunities afforded them for much graceful dancing and pantomimical expression.

Mrs. Charles Kean, the widow of the late Mr. Charles Kean, whom she had survived twelve years, expired at the age of seventy-five on Saturday last. Her first appearance on the stage, as Miss Ellen Tree, was at Covent Garden in 1823, and from that period the actress kept a prominent place on the stage. Her marriage with Mr. Charles Kean took place in 1842, and after the death of her husband in 1868, Mrs. Charles Kean retired into private life. The profession to which she devoted the exercise of her great talents was graced and adorned by the social virtues which distinguished her long and blameless career.

The semi-official Cronstadt Vestnik contains the following telegram from an officer whom, in a leader, it speaks of as being "the head of the naval brigade despatched from the Caspian to Skobeleff in Akhal." It further discloses that the torpedo boats sent to the Caspian from the Baltic for transport service in the spring, have been stripped of their Hotchkiss cannon, which latter have been sent up the country to Skobeleff's army:—"I am happy to inform you that my battery took part in Skobeleff's recent reconnaissance of Geok Tepe, and received the approval of Adjt.-Gen. Skobeleff. During the night the enemy attacked us. Our troops comprised four sotnias of Cossacks, three companies of infantry, a sapper detachment, and 10 guns. The enemy numbered 12,000. Our losses were three killed and eight wounded. The Tekkes lost 400 killed. The naval battery experienced no losses." The Golos contains an announcement that the Transcaspian telegraph has been extended from Fort Tchat to Fort Douz Oloum, the Russian 8-gun battery at the fork of the Tchandeer and Sumber rivers, 150 miles from Tchikislar, Bami, where Skobeleff's fortified camp is situated, is six marches beyond.

The Lahore paper says, "It is settled that Brigdr.-Gen. Evans, R.A., on arrival from Cabul, goes to command the Mooltan Brigade. Brigdr.-Gen. Murray, from Lahore, goes to command the Rohilcund District."

ALLEN AND HANBURYS' "PERFECTED" COD LIVER OIL is not only freer from taste and smell than any oil ever before offered to the public, but it does not give rise to the nausea and eructations which render the use of ordinary oil, even of the finest quality, so repulsive. It is the pure Oil made at Allen and Hanburys' own factory in Norway, and prepared by an entirely new and special process, and presents in the most effective condition all the invaluable properties of the remedy. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' Perfected Oil. Sold only in capsuled imperial quarter-pints, 1s 4d; half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

The Queen has approved the appointment of Mr. F. Napier Broome, C.M.G., Colonial Secretary of Mauritius, to be Lieutenant-Governor of that colony.

THE HEAT OF SUMMER causes the hair to become dry and fall off, which may be completely obviated by using Rowland's Macassar Oil, which for 80 years has been considered the best restorer, preserver, and beautifier of the human hair. Rowland's Odonto whitens the teeth, prevents decay, strengthens the gums, and gives a pleasing fragrance to the breath. Ask any chemist or perfumer for Rowland's articles.

THE "LIVERPOOL JOURNAL OF COMMERCE."—This influential shipping and commercial newspaper is about to be materially enlarged. This has been rendered necessary since Mr. Birchall assumed the proprietorship, by the increasing demands upon its space from numerous correspondents both at home and abroad.

HOT WEATHER.—How to Invigorate the Nervous System by Natural Means. Mental Prostration.—"Having suffered much from headache and mental prostration, I was induced to try ENO'S FRUIT SALT, the effects of which have been most satisfactory, resulting in invigorating my entire nervous system, and removing the frequent headache to which I was subject. You are at liberty to make any use you think proper of this testimonial, as I consider Eno's Fruit Salt an indispensable adjunct to the Household."—TRUTH, Sigdon Road, Dalston, E. Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked, "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

MAJOR WILKINSON SHAW, 102nd Fusiliers, Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot Camp, begs to inform his friends that he is about to join Colonel B. A. WILKINSON, late R.E., at DARMSTADT, in preparing Army Candidates for their Examinations.

MILITARY EDUCATION in GERMANY.—Colonel BERDOE A. WILKINSON (retired full pay Royal Engineers) RECEIVES PUPILS, to prepare for Sandhurst and Woolwich, at his residence in Darmstadt. A Class of Militia Candidates for direct commissions is also being formed to read for the Examinations of 1881.

Colonel Wilkinson is aided in the preparation of his pupils by an efficient Staff of English, French, and German Masters; he has now the pleasure to announce that he is about to be joined by the well-known military instructor and lecturer, Major WILKINSON SHAW, M.A., Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot—a Staff-College officer—who is retiring from the Service, for the purpose of assisting to develope the business which Colonel Wilkinson has so far conducted by himself. The record of Major Shaw's work as a Garrison-Instructor for seven years past, shows that 88 out of 90 officers prepared by him personally for examination in the Sandhurst or four months courses have passed successfully, a large proportion with first-class certificates or honourable mention. During the same period, upwards of 200 other officers, as voluntary students, have read or studied military science with Major Shaw, who has thus obtained an extensive and varied experience in tuition. Major Shaw is the author of the popular text-book, "The Elements of Modern Tactics." — Address, Colonel BERDOE WILKINSON, Heinrichstrasse, Darmstadt; or (till September 20), Major WILKINSON SHAW, Aldershot.

SPA, BELGIUM.—A limited number of PUPILS have every facility for acquiring a thorough knowledge of modern languages and of preparing for Public Examinations. High-class references. Terms, 70 to 80 Guineas, according to age. The English Principal will be in London in September to take back pupils.—Address, "W. and L.," care of Messrs. Orellana, Collis, and Cuffe, 32A George Street, Hanover Square, London, W.

EDUCATION.—GERMANY, HEIDELBERG.—Dr. KLOSE'S School guarantees thorough knowledge of German and French, for Army Examinations, Public Schools. Experienced English University Tutors for Mathematics, Classics, English, Geometrical Drawing. Highest Army references. Terms, from £15, quarterly. Cricket, swimming baths, English diet.

EDUCATION (highest order) for LADIES. Oxford, Cambridge, and Preceptors' Examinations (three years no failure). University men; best methods. Juniors well grounded and individually cared for. English, French, German, Italian, Latin, Music (Sir Julius Benedict), Singing, Painting, Dancing. Four English and four foreign Governesses. 40 to 60 guineas.—Principal, "H. M.," The Hill Richmond, Surrey.

TO CAPITALISTS, GENTLEMEN SEEKING BUSINESS, and OTHERS.—WANTED, by a GENTLEMAN, for certain good Contracts, from £4,000 to £5,000, either by loan or limited partnership, for short term. Well-insured security and ample references given.—Principals only address, in first instance, to Messrs. ALLOTT, HADFIELD, and CO., 6A Austin Friars, London, E.C.

ARMY AGENCY.—WOOLWICH, SANDHURST, STAFF COLLEGE, MILITIA.—Prospectuses of the most successful Tutors on application to the SECRETARY 32A George Street, Hanover Square; also Prospectuses of Civil Service and other Tutors.

CIVILIANS and MILITARY OFFICERS proceeding abroad can effect Assurances, and Loans in connection therewith, on moderate Terms, with the HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Diseases of Women.—Medical science of all ages has been directed to alleviate the many maladies incident to females, but Professor Holloway, by diligent study and attentive observation, was induced to believe that Nature had provided a remedy for these special diseases. He has, after vast research, succeeded in compounding his celebrated Pills and Ointment, which embody the principle naturally designed for the relief and cure of disorders peculiar to women of all ages and constitutions, whether residing in warm or cold climates. They have repeatedly corrected disordered functions which had defied the usual drugs prescribed by medical men, and still more satisfactory is it that the malady is relieved completely and permanently.

Second Master—CHAS. MORGAN, Esq., B.A., Senior Optime, late Scholar and Mathematical Prizeman of Jesus College, Cambridge.

The work is tested yearly by Public Examiners, whose reports are published, and one of the first pupils at the School has already passed with credit into Cooper's Hill College.

The sanitary and domestic arrangements will also be inspected and reported on periodically.

A full prospectus will be sent on application to the Head Master, Salisbury School, Salisbury; or to the Warden, Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech.
